THE SECOND EDITION

The second edition of this work is now published, and is the most complete and accurate edition yet published. It contains all the improvements and additions which have since been made, and is printed on a new and improved plan, which will render it more useful and convenient than any other edition.
 The price is the same as the first edition.
 Sold by all the booksellers in London and the provinces.

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompence has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected, suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion, and exposed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity, and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself, in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; experience, which practice and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themselves once unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be registred, that they may not be increased, and ascertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proscribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessary or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read to catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing such words as were already vitiated in speech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unsettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation arise in a great part the various dialects of the same country, which will always be observed to grow fewer, and less different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of sounds by letters, proceeds that diversity of spelling observable in the Saxon remains, and I suppose in the first books of every nation, which perplexes or destroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward dismissed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, strengtb from strong, darling from dear, breadtb from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, bright, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes bightb; Quid te exempla jucat spinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This

This uncertainty is most frequent in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errors in orthography, but spots of barbarity impressed so deep in the English language, that criticism can never wash them away; these, therefore, must be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and some still continue to be variously written, as authors differ in their care or skill: of these it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always considered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is chosen rather than intire, because it passed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to say whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, since at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin service in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally supplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to sacrifice uniformity to custom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberless majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; sometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the same power are used indifferently without any discoverable reason of choice, as in cloak, cloke; soap, sepe; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have sometimes inserted twice, that those who search for them under either form, may not search in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of spelling by which it is inserted in the series of the dictionary, is to be considered as that to which I give, perhaps not often rashly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every author his own practice unmolesied, that the reader may balance suffrages, and judge betwixt us: but this question is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; some men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on sounds and derivations; some, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected those in which our words are commonly to be sought. Thus Hammond writes scibleness for scisibleness, because I suppose he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and some words, such as dependant, dependant; dependance, dependance, vary their final syllable, as one or other language is present to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wanted without controul, and vanity sought praise by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a scholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among those few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to those, whose thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiously on verbal singularities, not to disturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been asserted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, says Hecker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better. There is in constancy and stability a general and lasting advantage, which will always overbalance the slow improvements of gradual correction. Much less ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itself, and imitate those changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in observing them.

This recommendation of steadiness and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happiness; or that truth may not be successfully taught by modes of spelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet so lost in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the sons of heaven. Language is only the instrument of science, and words are but the signs of ideas: I wish, however, that the instrument might be less apt to decay, and that signs might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In settling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated syllable. It will sometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the author quoted, on a different syllable from that marked in the alphabetical series; it is then to be understood, that custom has varied, or that the author has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are sometimes given where the sound of letters is irregular; and if they are sometimes omitted, defect in such minute observations will be more easily excused, than superfluity.

In the investigation both of the orthography and signification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was necessarily to be considered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any English root; thus circumpect, circum- vent,

should find, or chance should offer it, in the boundless chaos of a living speech. My search, however, has been either skilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my design was a dictionary common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained those of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received such as could be found either in books of science or technical dictionaries; and have often inserted, from philosophical writers, words which are supported perhaps only by a single authority, and which being not admitted into general use, stand yet as candidates or probationers, and must depend for their adoption on the suffrage of futurity.

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonness, by compliance with fashion, or lust of innovation, I have registered as they occurred, though commonly only to censure them, and warn others against the folly of naturalizing useless foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by design, merely because they were unnecessary or exuberant; but have received those which by different writers have been differently formed, as vifid, and vifidity, vifcus, and vifcify.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state. Thus highwayman, woodman, and berserker, require an explication; but of thislike or coachdriver no notice was needed, because the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a constant and settled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in ish, as greenish, bluish, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, substantives in ness, as vileness, faultiness, were less diligently sought, and many sometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to insert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of English roots, but because their relation to the primitive being always the same, their signification cannot be mistaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, such as the keeping of the castle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb, except when they signify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an absolute and abstract signification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewise omitted, unless, by signifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horse, a horse that can pace: these I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are these always inserted, because they are commonly to be understood, without any danger of mistake, by consulting the verb.

Obsolete words are admitted, when they are found in authours not obsolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deserve revival.

As composition is one of the chief characteristics of a language, I have endeavoured to make some reparation for the universal negligence of my predecessors, by inserting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, and many more. These, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that use and curiosity are here satisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination are amply discovered.

Of some forms of composition, such as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to signify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, because the use of these particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is so little limited, that they are hourly united to new words as occasion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of composition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulty. We modify the signification of many verbs by a particle subjoined; as to come off, to escape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apostatize; to break off, to stop abruptly; to bear out, to justify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to cease; to fit off, to embellish; to fit in, to begin a continual tenour; to fit out, to begin a course or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear wildly irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I have perhaps so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.

Many words yet stand supported only by the name of Bailey, Ainsworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries subjoined: of these I am not always certain that they are seen in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of such I have omitted many, because I had never read them; and many I have inserted, because they may perhaps exist, though they have escaped my notice: they are, however, however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I considered as useful, or know to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered: they are referred to the different parts of speech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret a language by itself is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by synonyms, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of English lexicography, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstruse than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by supposing some words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no other use than to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such as no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses distorted so widely from the first idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning: such are bear, break, come, cast, fall, get, grow, do, put, see, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of these the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every tongue that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success; such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession: for when Tully owns himself ignorant whether leſſus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral song, or mourning garment; and Aristotle doubts whether ovov, in the Iliad, signifies a mule, or muleteer, I may freely, without shame, leave some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous; a new term was not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious, but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited bited together; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obcurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errors, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as kind, the female of the stag; stag, the male of the kind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into fidity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to increase or produce obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonic and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER, to gladden, or exhilarate; that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When first I collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science; from historians remarkable facts, from chymists complete processes; from divines striking exhortations; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and intersperse with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detraction, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of style; but words must be sought where they are used; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authors, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

P R E F A C E.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the reformation, whose works I regard as the wells of English undrilled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonic character, and deviating towards a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recall it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of style, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies, such as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authors which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt the existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations which to careless or unskilful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will shew the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient author; another will shew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptance.

I have sometimes, tho' rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by shewing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our style capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured to settle the orthography, display the analogy, regulate the structures, and ascertain the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harrassed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprise is above the strength that undertakes it: To rest

below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should revel away in feasts of literature, the obscure recesses of northern learning, which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things; to pierce deep into every science, to enquire the nature of every substance of which I inferred the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my first experiments, that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained: I saw that one enquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance: by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be finished, though not completed.

Despondency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence; some faults will at last appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary ever shall be accurately compiled, or skillfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

* That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of commodities, utensils, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or easy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contending with the fullness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonarroti; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus

P R E F A C E.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; sometimes idle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promises to prolong life to a thousand years; and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and secure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change sublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulse intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; sounds are too volatile and subtle for legal restraints; to enchain syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy; the file of Anselot's translation of father Paul is observed by Le Cointre to be un peu passé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccaccio, Machiavel, or Cara.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen; conquests and migrations are now very rare: but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation, and invisible in their progress, are perhaps as much superior to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky, or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniences of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mabonetic countries, with very few: men thus busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polished by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas, and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will shift opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words deflected from their original sense; the geometrician will talk of a courier's zenith, or the exactness of virtue of a wild hero, and the physician of sanguine expectations and phlegmatic delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred, and others degraded; vicissitudes of fashion will enforce the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current sense: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by public infatuation, rise into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which must, for the same reasons, be in time dismised. Swift, in his petty treatise on the English language, allows that new words must sometimes be introduced, but proposes that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once by disuse become unfamiliar, and by unfamiliarity unpleasant.

There

P R E F A C E.

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both; and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haste or negligence, refinement or affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same, but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our stile, which I, who can never wish to see dependance multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translators, whole illeness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology without a contest to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authors: whether I shall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time: much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease; much has been trifled away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me; but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself: a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish defect; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprize vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the authour, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the lost obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow: and it may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, are yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not secure them from the censure of Beni; if the embodied criticisms of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its oeconomy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

THOUGH the Britains or Welsh were the first possessors of this island, whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language, from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them: for we have so few words, which can, with any probability, be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh, as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britains to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed in considerable numbers with the Saxons without some communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabrick and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonic: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Slavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hicks has thus exhibited the genealogy.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospels somewhat mutilated, which, from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and has been twice published. Whether the diction of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonic race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the present English, was either derived from it, or both descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they first entered Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leisure for softer studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to Christianity. The Christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language, capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilized people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boethius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

Of the following version of the gospels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conquest, and therefore may properly be inserted here.

Translations seldom afford just specimens of a language, and least of all those in which a scrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, because they retain the phraseology and structure of the original tongue;

This may perhaps be considered as a specimen of the Saxon in its highest state of purity, for here are scarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

yet they have often this convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wicliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns; because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

L U K, C H A P. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee there was a prest Zacarye by name: of the sort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughttris of Aaron: and his name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren iuste biforn God: goynge in alle the maundementis and iustifyingis of the Lord withouten playnt.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the angel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon ſet in hir dayes.

15 And the angel anſwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh biſore God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to euangelize to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſhalt be dounbe.

16 And thou ſhalt not mowe ſpeke, till into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen be don, for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, which ſchulen be fulfilled in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abydinge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwelide ſtille dounbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of hiſ office weren fulfilled: he wente into hiſ hous.

20 And aſtir theſe dayes Elizabeth hiſ wiſ conſeyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in which he biheld to take away my reproof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the angel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man: whos name was Joſeph of the hous of Dauid, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the angel entride to hir, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in hiſ word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the angel ſeid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace aenentis God.

27 Lo thou ſhalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſchalt bere a ſone: and thou ſhalt clepe hiſ name Jheſus.

28 Thiſ ſhall be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of highelle, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſette of Dauid hiſ ſadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of hiſ rewme ſchal be noon ende.

30 And Marye ſeyde to the angel, on what maner ſchal thiſ thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the angel anſwerde and ſeyde to hir, the holy Golt ſchal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the highelle ſchal oƿer ſchadowe thee: and theſore that holy thing that ſchal be borun of thee: ſchal be clepid the ſone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thiſ coſyn, and ſche alſo hath conſeyved a ſone in hir elde, and thiſ monethe is the ſixte to hir that is clepid barycn.

33 For every word ſchal not be impoſſible aenentis God.

34 And Marye ſeid to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me aſtir thi word, and the angel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in the dayes and wente with halte into the mountaynes into a cite of Judee.

36 And ſche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the ſalutacioun of Marye the young child in hir wombe gladiſe, and Elizabeth was fulfilled with the holy Golt.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and ſeyde, bleſſid be thou among wymmen and bleſſid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And wherof is thiſ thing to me, that the medir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi ſalutacioun was maid in my eiris: the yong child gladiſe in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſſid be thou that haſt beleved: for thiſke thingis that ben ſcid of the Lord to thee ſchulen be partlyly don.

42 And Marye ſeyde, my ſoul magniſeth the Lord.

47 He made myght in his arm, he ſcateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He ſette doun myghty men fro ſecte and enhaun-ſide nieke men.

49 He hath fulfilled hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men void.

50 He hayenge mynde of his mercy took up Iſrael his child,

51 As he hath ſpokun to oure fadris, to Abraham, and to his ſeed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned agen into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfilled to Elizabeth, and ſche bar a ſon.

54 And the neyghbouris and coſyns of hir herden that the Lord hadde magnified his mercy with hir, and thei thankiden him.

55 And it was doon in the eightithe day thei camen to circumſide the child, and thei clepiden him Zacarye by the name of his fadir.

56 And his modir anſweride and ſeide, nay; but he ſchal be clepid Jon.

57 And thei ſeiden to hir, for no man is in thi kyn-rede that is clepid this name.

58 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

59 And he axinge a poyntel wroot ſeiynge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

60 And annoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he ſpak and bleſſide God.

61 And drede was maad on all hir neyghbouris, and all the wordis weren pupliſchid on alle the mounteynes of Judee.

62 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and ſeiden what manner child ſchal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfilled with the holy Goſt, and proſecide and ſeide.

64 Bleſſid be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he has viſitid and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

66 As he ſpak by the mouth of hiſe holy prophetis that weren for the world.

67 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68 To do mercy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy teſtament.

69 The grete ooth that he ſwoor to Abraham our fadir,

70 To geve himſelf to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of oure enemyes ſerve to him,

71 In holyneſſe and rightwiſneſſe before him, in alle
our dayes.

72 And thou child ſchal be clepid the proſete of the highelle, for thou ſchal go before the face of the Lord to make redy hiſe weyes.

73 To geve ſcience of helth to his puple into remiſſioun of her ſynnes.

74 By the inwardeneſſe of the mercy of oure God, in the which he ſpringyng up fro on high hath viſitid us.

75 To geve light to them that ſitten in derkneſſis, and in ſchadowe of decthy, to dreſſe oure feet into the weye of pees;

76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in ſpýrt, and was in deſert placis till to the day of his ſchewing to Yſrael.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Of the Saxon poetry some specimen is necessary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their syllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impossible, to recover, excludes us from that pleasure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The first poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and consequently must have depended upon the quantity of their syllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and close their verses with correspondent sounds.

The two passages, which I have selected, contain apparently the rudiments of our present lyric measures, and the writers may be justly considered as the genuine ancestors of the English poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may be plainly discovered; this change seems not to have been the effect of the Norman conquest, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the first hundred years after it; the language must therefore have been altered by causes like those which, notwithstanding the care of writers and societies instituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a specimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry seem to have been written, of which I have inserted only short fragments; the first is a rude attempt at the present measure of eight syllables, and the second is a natural introduction to Robert of Gloucester, being composed in the same measure, which, however rude and barbarous it may seem, taught the way to the Alexan-drines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own form and terminations; for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the critics in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diſtion, neither Saxon nor Engliſh;
in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing author of St. Margarete, which, po-liſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century.

OF þe bataȝles of Denemarch, þat hii dude in þȝs

THE HISTORY OF THE

Vor myd tuo hundred flypes & an alf at Temfe moup hii come,

And Londone, and Kanterburij, and oþer tounes nome,
And fo vorþ in to Soþereye, & ſlowe & barnde valle, þere þe kyng and ys lone hem mette atte laſte.

þere was batayle ſtrong ynou yſmyte in an þrowe.
þe godes kyngtes leye adoun as gras, wan medep mowe.
Heuden, (þat were of yſmyte,) & oþer lymes alſo,
Flete in blode al fram þe grounde, ar þe batayle were ydo.
Wanne þat blod ſtod al abrod, was þer gret wo y nou.

Nys yt reupe vorto hure, þat me fo volc ſlou?
Ac our ſuete Louerd atte laſte ſfewede ys ſuete grace,
And ſende þe Criſtlyne Englyſſe men þe mayſtrye in þe place,

And þe heþene men of Denemarch byneþe were echon.
Nou nas þer gut in Denemarch Criſtendom non;
þe kyng her alter to holy chyrche ys herte þe more drou,
And teþegede wel & al ys lond, as hii agte, wel y nou.
Seyn Swythyn at Wynchefſtre byſſop þo was,
And Aleſton at Syrebourne, þat amendeðe muche þys cas.

þe kyng was wel þe betere man þoru her beyre red,
Twenty wynter he was kyng, ar he were ded.

At Wynchefſtre he was ybured, as he gut lyp þere.
Hys tueye ſones he gef ys lond, as he byget ham ere.
Adelbold, the eldore, þe kyndom of Eſſex,
And ſupþe Adelbrygt, Kent and Weſſex.

Eygte hundred ger yt was and ſeueue and fyfty al fo,
Alter þat God auerþe com, þat þys dede was ydo.
Boþe hii wuſte by her tyme wel her kyndom,
At þe vyſte ger Adelbold out of þys lyue nome.

At Syrebourne he was ybured, & ys broþer Adelbrygt
His kyndom adde alter hym, as lawe was and rygt.
By ys daye þe verde com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamteſſyre and deſtrude Wynchefſtre al out.

And þat lond ſole of Hamteſſyre her red þo nome
And of Barcſſyre, and ſogte and þe ſfewen ouercome.
Adelbrygt was kyng of Kent geres folc tene,
And of Weſſex bote vyue, þo he deide ych wene.

ADELRED was alter hym kyng y mad in þe place,
Eygte hundred & ſeueue & fyfty as in þe ger of grace.
þe vorſte ger of ys kyndom þe Deneys þycke com,
And robbede and deſtrude, and cytes valle nome.

Mayſtres hii adde of her olt, as yt were dukes, tueye,
Hlynguar and Hubba, þat ſfewen were b. ye.
In Eſt Angle hii byleude, to reſt hem as yt were,
Myd her olt al þe wynter, of þe vorſte gere.

þe oþer ger hii dude hem vorþ, & ouer Humber come,
And ſlowe to grounde & barnde, & Euerwyk nome.
þere was batayle ſtrong y nou, vor yſlawe was þere Oþer kyng of Humberlond, & monye þat with hym were.

þo Humberlond was þus yſlende, hii wende & tounes nome.

So þat atte laſte to Eſtangle agen hym come.
þer hii barnde & robbede, & þat ſole to grounde ſlowe,
And, as wolues among ſlep, reulych hem to drowe.
Seynt Edmond was þo her kyng, & þo he fey þat deloul cas

þat þe morþrede ſo þat ſole, & non amendement nas,
He ches leuere to deye hymſulſ, þat ſuch ſorwe to yſey.
He dude hym vorþ among ys ſon, nolde he noþyg fle.
Hii nome hym & ſcourged hym, & ſupþe naked hym
bounde

To a tre, & to hym ſlowe, & made hym mony a wounde, þat þe arewe were on hym þo þycke, þat no ſtede nas byleude.

Atte laſte hii married hym, & ſmyte of ys heued.
þe lyfte ger of þe crounment of Aldered þe kyng
A nywe olt com into þys lond, gret þoru alle þyng,
And anon to Redyngte robbede and ſlowe.

þe kyng and Alſred ys broþer nome men ynowe, Mette hem, and a batayle ſmyte vp Aſſeloune.
þer was mony moder chyld, þat ſone laþ þer doune.
þe batayle yſlatte vorte nygt, and þere were aſlawe

Vyf dukes of Denemarch, ar hii wolde wyþ drawe,
And mony þouſend of oþer men, & þo gonne hii
to fle;

Ac hii adde alle ybe aſſend, gyl þe nygt nadde y be.
Tueye batayles her after in þe ſulſ gere Hii ſmyte, and at boþe þe heþene mayſtres were.

þe kyng Aldered ſone þo þen wey of deþ nome,
As yt vel, þe vyſty ger of ys kyndom.
At Wymbourne he was ybured, as God gef þat cas, þe gode Alſred, ys broþer, alter hym kyng was.

ALFRRED, þys noble man, as in þe ger of grace
he nom

Eygte hundred & fyfty & tuelue þe kyndom.
Arſt he adde at Rome ybe, & vor ys grete wyſdom, þe pope Leon hym bleſede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kynges croune of hys lond, þat in þys lond gut ys:

And he led hym to be kyng, ar he kyng were ywys.
An he was kyng of Engeland, of alle þat þer come,
þat vorſt þus ylad was of þe pope of Rome,
An ſupþe oþer alter hym of þe erchebyſſopes echon.

So þat hyuor hym pore kyng nas þer non.
In þe Souþ lyde of Temfe nyne batayles he nome
Agen þe Deneys þe vorſt ger of ys kyndom.
Nys ger he was þus in þys lond in batayle & in wo,

An oſte ſype aboue was, and bynre oþer mo;
So longe, þat hii neme by leuede bote þre flyen in ys
hond,

Hamteſſyre, and Wylteſſyre, and Somerſete, of al ys lond.
A day as he wery was, and aſuoddringe hym nome
And ys men were ywend auyſſeþ, Seyn Cutbert to hym com.

"Ich am," he ſeyde, "Cutbert, to þe yham ywend
"To bringe þe gode tyttinges. Fram God yham yfend.
"Vor þat ſole of þys lond to ſynne her wyſſe al geue,
"And gut nolde herto her ſynnes byleue

"þoru me & oþer hawelen, þat in þys lond were yþore;
"þan vor got bydded God, wanne we beþ hym byuore,
"Hour Louerd myd ys eyen of milce on þe lokep þeruore,

"And þy poer þe wole gyue agen, þat þou aſt ney verlore.
"And þat þou þer of ſoþ yſe, þou ſalt abbe toknyngte.
"Vor þym men, þat beþ ago to day auyſſyngte,
"In leþes & in couſtes ſo muche vyſſ hii ſolde hym bringte,

"þat ech man wondry ſal of ſo gret cacþyngte.
"And þe mor vor þe harde vorſte, þat þe water yſfore
hys,

"þat þe more agen þe kunde of vyſſyngte yt ys.
"Of ſerue yt wel agen God, and yleſ me ys meſſager,
"And þou ſall þy wyſſe abyde, as yham ytolde her."

As þys kyng herof awoc, and of þys fygtte þogte, Hys vyſſares come to hym, & ſo gret won of tyſſ hym brogtte, þat wonder yt was, & narelyche vor þe wede was ſo colde.

þo lyuede þe god man wel, þat Seyn Cutbert adde ytolde.
In Deuenyſſyre þer alter aryuode of Deneys þre and turenty flypuol men, al agen þe peys, þe kynges broþer of Denemarch duc of olt was:

Oure kynges men of Engeland mette hem by cas,
And ſmyte þer an batayle, and her gret duc ſlowe,
And eygte hundred & fourty men, & her caronyes to drowe.

þo kyng Alſred hurde þys, ys herte gladede þo, þat lond ſole to hym come to þycke ſo yt mygte go,
Of Somerſete, of Wylteſſyre, of Hamteſſyre þerto,
Euere as he wende, and of ys owe ſole al fo.

So þat he adde poer ynou, and atte laſte hii come,
And a batayle at Edendone agen þe Deneys nome,
And ſlowe to grounde, & wonne þe mayſtre of the velde.

þe kyng & ys grete duke bygonne hem to geide
To þe kyng Alſred to ys wyſſe, and oſtages toke, Vorto wende out of ys lond, gyl þe yt wolde loke;
And gut þerto, vor ys loue, to auonge Criſtendom.

Kyng Gurmund, þe hexte kyng, vorſt þer to come.
Kyng Alſred ys godſfader was, & yþaptyſed ek þer were pretty of her hexte dukes, and muche of þat ſole þere Kyng Alſred hem huld wyþ hym tuelf dawes as he hende,

And ſupþe he gef hem large gyftes, and let hym wende.
Hii, þat nolde Criſtyn be, of lande ſlowe þo,
And bygonde ſce in France dude wel muche wo.
gut þe ſfewen come agen, and muche wo here wrogtte.

Ac þe kyng Alſred atte laſte to ſtame hem euere brogtte.
kyng

Kyng Alfred was þe wýðst kyng, þat long was býuore.
Vor þey me segge þe lawes bep in worre tyme vorlore,
Nas þi nogt so his dæge. vor þey he in worre were,
Lawes he made rýgtuollere, and strengore þan er were.
Clerc he was god ynou, and gut, as me telleþ me,
He was more þan ten ger old, ar he couþe ys abece.
Ac ys gode moder ofte smale gyftes hym tok,
Vor to byleue oþer ple, and loký on ys boke.
So þat þi por clerger ys rýgt lawes he wonde,
þat neuere er nere y mad, to gouerný ys lond.
And vor þe worre was so muche of þe luper Deneýs, þe men of þis sulue lond were of þe worle peýs.
And robbede and flowe oþere, þeruoer he býuonde,
þat þer were hondredes in eche contreye of ys lond,
And in ech toune of þe hondred a teþyng were also,
And þat ech man wyþoute gret lond in teþyng were ydo,
And þat ech man knewe oþer þat in teþyng were,
And wuþt: somdel of her stat, gif me þu vp hem bere.
So streþt he was, þat þey me loude amýdde weyes heýe
Seluer, þat non man ne dorste yt nýme, þey he yt seýe.
Abbys he rerde moný on, and moný studeþ ys.
Ac Wýncheþtre he rerde on, þat nýwe munstre ycluped ys.
Hys lýt eýge and twenty ger in ys kynedom yýalte.
Ater þi deþ he was býured at Wýncheþtre atte laste.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure, the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many oþere bezonde that, no man may fee the sterre transmontane, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevabe, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seen another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the South, that is clept Antarkyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the South, the which sterre apperthe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the North, that we clepen the lode sterre, ne apperthe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the see ben of rownde schapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament schewethe in a contree, that schewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and fofyle compassment of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde gon to ferchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, afre that I have seyn. For I have ben toward the parties of Strabon, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 51 degrees. And more forthere toward the parties septentrionales, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that azen the Transmontayne, is the tocher sterre, that is clept Antarkyk, as I have seyd before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, right as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tre: so that tho sterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; so that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Afre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the South; and I have founden, that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antarkyk. And so fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that toward the highe Lybye, it is 48 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes (of the which, 60 mynutes maken a degree); afre goyng be se and be lond, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antarkyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and schippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that we scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have seyd zou be for, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 sterres: the whiche halfondelle I have seyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have seyn toward the North, undre the Transmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalis, I have seen undre the Antarkyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have feen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that oþer part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and so there ne saylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so the se saylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And also I have feen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certynly, that men may envirovne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and schippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antarkyk, thei ben strenghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the Transmontane; als wel as we and thei that dwellyn undre us, ben leet azenft feet. For alle the parties of se and of lond han here appofites, habitabiles or trefpassables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wyterhe wel, that afre that, that I may perceyve and comprehend, the londes of Preste John, emperour of Ynde ten undre us. For in goyng from Scotland or from Englund toward Jerusalem, men gon upward always. For our lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the West: and the lond of Preste John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and thei han there the day, whan we have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan we han the day: For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyd before. And that that men gon upward to o colt, men gon downward to another colt. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a fere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no fide. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytfessethe it in the Psalme, where he seythe, Deus operatus est salutem in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten for the parties of the Welt, for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerusalem, unto other confynyes of the superficialite of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iorneyes, toward Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronnyng the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre our contrees on this half. And therefore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong: how a worthi man departed sometyme from our contrees, for to go ferche the world. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 4000 yles: and so longe he wente be se and lond, and so envyround the world be many felyons, that he fond an yle, where he herde speke his owne language, callinge on oxen in the plowhe, suche wordes as merrt spoken to bestes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be lond and be se, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envyrounyng, that is to seye, goyng aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, til he had founde his contree and his owne knoueleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and so he losse moche peyne-fulle labour, as him self seide, a gret while afre, that he was comen hem. For it befelle afre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his owne langage before, and the calyng of the oxen at the plowhe: and that was possible thinge. But how it semethe to symple men unlearned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde falle toward the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon leffe, than we mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where we ben. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle, outhur aboven or benethen, it semethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than any other folk. And righte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that we ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; he grettere refoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grette and so hevvy, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therefore seithe oure Lord God, Non timesa me, qui suspendi terri ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may so envynne alle the world, natheles of a 1000 perlonen, on ne myghte not happen to retourner in to his contree. For, for the gretnesse of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man coud redye him perfetly toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundnesse and aboute envynoun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, afre the opynyoun of the olde wise astronomeres. And here seynge I repreve noughte. But afre my lytyle wyt, it semethe me, favyng here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere underfondyng, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hath a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than afre, be the gret compas devyded be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in as many parties, as the grette compas schal be departed, in als manye, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben leffe. Now thanne, be the gret compas repreffed for the firmament, and the litille compas repreffed for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyded, be astronomeres, in 12 figures; and every figure is devyded in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hath aboven. Also, be the erthe devyded in als many parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye answer to a degree of the firmament: and wycthe it wel, that afre the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplied be 360 fithes; and than thei ben 315000 myles, every of 8 furlonges, afre myles of oure contree. So moche hath the erthe in roundnesse, and of heghte envynoun, afre myn opynyoun and myn undirfondyng. And zee schulle undirfonde, that afre the opynyoun of olde wise philosophres and astronomeres, oure contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotland ne Norweye ne the other yles costyng to hem, ne ben not in the superfiyalte cownted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficialte of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept climates. And oure parties be not of the 7 climates: for thei ben defendyng toward the West. And also thete yles of Ynde, which both evenen azenst us, both noght reckned in the climates: for thei ben azenst us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 climates stretchen hem envynounge the world.

II. And I John Maundeville knyghte abovefeyd, (alle though I be unworthy) that departed from oure contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322: that have passed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable compaignie, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insuffiance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to reffe: for gowtes, artetykes, that me distreyne, tho distyren the ende of my labour, azenst my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takyng folace in my wretched reffe, recordyng the tyme passed,

I have fulfilled theise thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde comen in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 24 zeer that I departed from oure contrees. Wherefore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it plesse hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preve for hem, And alle tho that feyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my synnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif only be to his plesance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beseeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godenesse and grace cometh fro, that he vouchesaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire soules with inspiracioun of the Holy Gost, in makynge defence of alle hire gostly enemies here in erthe, to hire salvacioun, bethe of body and soule; to workshipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, with outhen begynyng and withouten endyng; that is, with outhen qualite, good, and with outhen quantitye, gret; that in alle places is present, and alle thinges contenyng; the whiche that no goodnesse: may amende, ne non evell empyre; that in perseyte trynitye lyveth and regneth God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The first of our authours, who can be properly said to have written Englysh, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his disciple, and may therefore be considered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to speke of the commune,

It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befall in sondrye londes:
But ofte for defaulte of bondes
All sodeinly, er it be with,
A tunne, whan his lie aris
Tobrecketh, and renneth all aboute,
Whiche els shulde nought gone out.

And eke full ofte a littell skare
Vpon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the streme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restraine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wise, who that he troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complaint telleth,
How that the world is miswent,
And therupon his argument
Yeureth euery man in sondrye wise:
But what man wolde him selfe auise
His conscience, and nought misuse,
He maie well at the first excuse
His god, whiche ever stant in one,
In him there is default none
So must it stande vpon vs felue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenary vpon vs all.
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffrey Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great justice, be styled the first of our versifiers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who mistakes genius for learning, and, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by whole carloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries; and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an author of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorowfull matter, that whilom in florishing studie made desirable dities. For lo! rendyng mufes of Poesies enditen to me thynges to be written, and dierie veres. At lasse no drede ne might overcame tho mufes, that thei ne werren fellows, and foloweden my waie, that is to saie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom wellfull and grene, comforten now sorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwary upon me, hasted by the harmes that I have, and sorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres howe aren thad overtymeliche upon my hed: and the laske skynne tremebleth of mine emptied bodie. Thilke deth of men is wellfull, that he ne cometh not in yerres that be swete, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas! with how dese an ere deth cruell turneth awie fro wretches, and naith for to close wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that sorowfull houre, that is to saie, the deth, had almolt drete myne hedde: but now for fortune clouche hath chaunged her deceivable chere to meward, myne upitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avauted ye me to ben wellfull? For he that hath fallin, stode in no stedfast degre.

COLVILE.

ITHAT in tyme of prosperite, and florishing studie, made pleasaunte and delectable dities, or verbes: alas now beyng heauy and sad ouerthrowen in aduerfite, am compelled to sele and talt heuines and greif. Beholde the mufes Poeticall, that is to saie: the pleasure that is in poesies verbes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ these verbes in meter, and the sorowfull verbes do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yffluinge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche mufes no feare without doute could overcome, but that they wold folow me in my journey of exile or banishment. Sometime the ioye of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the course of sorowfull olde age causeth me to reioyse. For hasty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and sorow hath commaunded and broughite me into the same old age, that is to saie: that sorowe causeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled skynne tremebleth my flesh, cleane consumed and waste with sorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is lusty, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of aduerfite, when it is often desired. Alas Alas howe dull and desle be the eares of cruel death vnto men in misery that would sayne dye: add yet resulythe to come and shutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that false fortune fauoryd me with her transitorye goodes, then the howe of death had almost overcome me. That is to saie death was redy to oppress me when I was in prosperite. Nowe for by cause that fortune beyng turned, from prosperite into aduerfite (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyvable countenance: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why have you so often bolt d me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honor possessions riches, and authorite whych be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedfast degre.

IN the mene while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepicie complainte with office of pountell: I laugh stondyng aboue the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen breynnyng, and clere, seying over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be semped, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulde not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometime she constrained and thronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometime it semed, that she touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she paced the self heven, so that the sight of menne lokyng was in ydel: her clothes wer marked of right delie tacles, and subtil craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaryng, and shewing to me the beaute: The whiche clothes a darknesse of a forlorn and dispised elde had duked and darked, as it is wote to darke by smoked Images.

In the netherest hemme and border of these clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekische A. that significh the life active, and above that letter, in the hiest bordure, a Grekische C. that significh the life contemplative. And betwene these two letters there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperst: natheliefe handes of some men halden berre that clothe, by violence or by strength, and

WHY I ES that I considerydde pryuylye with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and descrybed my wofull complainte after the maner and office of a wrytter, me thought I sawe a woman stand over my head of a reverend countenance, hauyng quycke and gylleryng clere eye, aboue the common sorte of men in lyuely and delectable colour, and ful of strength, although the semed so olde that by no meanes she is thought to be one of this our tyme, her stature is of doutful knowledge, for nowe she shewethe herselfe at the common length or stature of men, and other whiles she semeth so high, as though she touched heven with the crown of her hed. And when she wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced thorough heauen, so that mens syghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her vestures or cloths were perfy of the fynest thredes, and subtyll workemanshypp, and of substance permanent, whych vestures she had wouen with her own handes as I perceyued after by her owne sayyng. The kynde or beawtye of the whiche vestures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignorance of oldenes forgotten hadde obseuryd and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken Images that stand nyghe the smoke. In the lower parte of the said vestures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych significheth practise or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the vestures the greke letter T. whych eilandeth for theoria, that significheth speculation or contemplation. And betwene both the sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steeppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderstand from practys or actyff, unto evenche everiche manne of hem had borne awaie soche pecces, as he might getten. And forlothe this forsaied woman bare female bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall mufes approching about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (quod she) hath sullied approchen to this like manne these comen trompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswage not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affections, whiche that ben notlyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fructes of reson. For thei holden lertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye mufes had withdrawn fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde comenly among the peple, I would well suffre the lasse greuously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothing endamaged. But ye withdrawn fro me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaydens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my mufes, that is to say, by my notefull sciences. And thus this companie of mufes iblamed casten wrothly the chere downward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse ther flame, thei passeden forowfully the threholde. And I of whom the sight ploughed in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperiall authoritie, I woxe all abashed and flonied, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune upon the utterest corner of my bed, and the beholding ny chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall gaine) the perturbacion of ny thought.

The conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This booke (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowrys my sonne, I perceve well by certayne evidences thyne abylyte to lerne sciences, touching nombres and proportions, and also well confydre I thy besye praver in especyal to lerne the trefise of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saith, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a sufficient astrolabye for oure orizont, compounded after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell trefise, I purpose to reche the a certayne nombre of conclusions, pertaininge to this fame instrument. I say a certayne nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or els possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknown perfectly to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothly in any cartes of the astrolabye that I have yfene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perourme thier behestes: and some of hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceive. This trefise divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litle sonne. But nevertheless sufficeth to the these trewe conclusions in Englishe, as well as sufficeth to these noble clerkes grekes these fame conclusions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrew, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had hem firtle out of other divers languages, and write hem in their owne tongue, that is to laine in Latine.

the hygher parte wher the letter T. was which is vnderstand speculation or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of some yolente perfonen had cut the sayde vestures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as every one coulde catch. And she her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litle bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which forefayd phylofophy (when the saw the mufes poetical present at my bed, spekyng forowfull wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry sayd (with terrible or frownynge countenance) who sullied these crasty harlottes to com to this fycke man? which can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increase the fame with swete payson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentious commodities of reason and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affeetes, and accustom or subdue mens myndes with sickenes, and heuynes, and do not deluyer or heale them of the fame. But yf your flatterie had conveyed or wythdrawn from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen fote of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that ny worke should not be hurt or hynderyd. But you have taken and conveyed from me this man that hath ben broughte vp in the studies of Arithotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence mermaydens (that seme swete untill you haue brought a man to death) and suffer me to heale this my man wyth my mufes or sciences that be holsume and good. And after that philofophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companie of the mufes poetical beyng rebukyd and sad, caste down their countenance to the grounde, and by blussing confessed their shamfastnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my syght dull and bynd wyth wepyng, so that I knew not what woman this was hauyng so great authoritie) was amafyd and astonyed, and lokyng downward, towards the grounde, I began pryvly to look what thyng she would saye further, then she had said. Then she approching and drawyng nere unto me, sat doune vpon the vttermost part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face sad with wepyng, and declynyng toward the earth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth these sayynges solowyng.

And God wote that in all these languages and in manye mo, have these conclusions ben sufficiently lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discrete, that redeth or hereth this lytl trefise to have my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and harde sentences is ful hevy at ones, for soch a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothly me semeth better to writen unto a childe twice a gode sentence, than he forcite it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as trew conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in latin, in any comon trefise of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obcieth everiche in his degree, the more and the lasse. But confydreth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I name but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn Englishe only for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shal I sene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this trefise shal rehce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolaby, bycause that thou shalte have the greter knowlege of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shal teche the to werken the very praikie of the foresaid conclusions, as fersforth and also narrowe as may be shewed in so fuaile an instrument portatif aboute. For wel wote every astrologien, that smallest tractions ne wol not be shewed in so final an instrument, as in subtil tables calculated for a cause.

THE PROLOGUS OF THE TESTAMENT OF LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eres openly sprad to moche swalowen the deliciouse of jelles and of ryme, by quaint knighting colours, that of the gode-nesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litle hede or els none.

Sothely dulle witte and a thoughtfule soule so fore have mined and grafled in my spirites, that soche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintance. And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the heret to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thynges, so that with littel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothyng hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of femelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawo togider to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalker: and yet is there grete matter to the leude people of thylike chalky purpurture, as 'hem thinke for the time, and afterward the lyght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudnesse. So sothly this leude cloudy occupacyon is not to praye, but by the leude, for comely leude leudnesse commendeth. Eke it shal yve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence.
In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thynges tol-fide, but certes there ben some that speken ther poysye mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasie as we have in heryng of Frenche men Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englysh, whiche unaneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowlege: howe shoulde than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englishe. Right so truly the understandyn of Englyshmen woll not stretch to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we boosten of straunge lauge. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowlege in that faculte: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen ther quaint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthe; and let us shewe our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be tytel thank worthy for the leudnesse in tra-vaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thynges that ben necessarie: for every man thereby may as by a perpetuall myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whiche thynges lightly may be conceived to eschue perils, and necessities to catch, after as adventures have fallen to other peple or persons.

Certes the soverainest thyng of desire and most creature resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccion: unresonable beestes mowen not, fithre reson hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is comparisoun to unresonable, and made lyke
'hem. Forsothe the most soveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowlege of a sothe, withouten any entent deceivable, and in love of one very God, that is inchangeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

None principally the mene to bryngyn in knowlege and lovyng his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thynges that ben made, understandyng here to our wyttes, arne the unkyne privities of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplation and understandinge.
These thynges than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowlege fithre, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou hast delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have declined in the tyme how God had lent me in consideration of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Ani-malibus, saith to naturel philosophers: it is a grete lavyng in love of knowlege ther creatour: and also in knowlege of causes in kindlye thynges, confidrid for-sothe the formes of kindlye thynges and the shap, a grete kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk, therefore trulle the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thynges, righte precious, and worthy

N° LXXXI.

to memorye, written, and by a grete swete and travaile to us lysten of causes the properties in natures of thynges, to whiche therefore philosophers it was more joye, more lykyng, more herty lust in kindly vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al
the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, prince, or kinges hadden. Therefore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne written; and in the contrarye, that is to sene, in styxe the loule pittie of helle arne thilke prynces that loch godenes hated. And because this boke shal be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge wit-passions and delytes for wantinge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou redere, who is thille that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he will rouse out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shal set Hercules Gades a mile yet fether, and over that he had power of strenght to pull up the spere, that Alisander the noble might never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edward the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jipe of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogether in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to speak of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettest clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene tolorne 'hem, and with ther sharp fithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envy forsothe commendeth noughte his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so truffy. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and brunde up in the sheves, and made many shokkes, yet have I en-sample to gadre the smale croumes, and sullen ma water of tho that falled from the bourde among the smalle hounes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigne, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissalles, as trenchours, and the relese to bere to the almshouse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbunde Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctryne, and these grete workmen, and glene my handfuis of the shedynge after ther handes, and yf me fithre ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privities out of shokkes; a fyve servaunte in his owne helpe is oftch moche commended; knowyng of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste fe-chers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han solowed after. For ther passyng study han freshid our wittes, and our understandynge han exyted in consideration of trouthe by sharpenes of ther resons. Utterly these thynges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouthe, and as they me beiden whan I pilgramed out of my kirk in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boistous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with drynghe coldes maked the waves of the ocean le so to arise unkindly over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

THE HISTORY OF THE

The holy blissfull martyr for to seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were sicke.

Befell that in that seson on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hostery
Wele nine and twenty in a company
Of fundrie folk, by aventure yiall
In felaſhip; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury woldin ride.

The chambers and the stablis werin wide,
And wel we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the sunné was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaſhip anone;
And made forward erli for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.

But natheles while that I have time and space,
Er that I farther in this tale pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reson,
To tell you alle the condition
Of ech of them, so as it semid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I first begin.

The KNIGHT.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he first began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curtesye.
Full worthy was he in his lord's werre,
And thereto had he riddin name more ferre
As well in Christendom, as in Hethenes;
And evyr honoured for his worthines.

At Aleffandre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin alle nacions in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Christen-man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the sege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete ſce
At many a noble army had he be:
At mortal bataills had he ben sifene,
And foughtin for our ſeith at Trameſene,
In listis thrys, and alwey ſlein his fo.

This ike worthy knight hath ben also Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a fovreane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wiſe;
And of his port as merke as a maid,
He nevir yet no villany ne ſaid
In all his lite unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay;
Of sustian he werid a gipon,
Alle beſmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wente fur to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.

The First Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you ſaid,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenth daie,
When it was night, to ſlepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aſlepe wondir ſone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimage milis two
To the corps of ſainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that criſt was harle.

But as me ſlept me mette I was Within a temple' imade of glas,

In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, ſtanding in ſondrie ſtages,
Sette in mo riche tabiracles,
And with perré mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraitureis,
And quaint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I ſawe evir.

But certainly I n'it nevir
Where that it was, but well wiſt I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I ſawe anone right her figure
Nakid yſetyng in a ſe,
And also on her hedde parde
Her roſy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her doves, and Dan Cupido
Her blindé ſonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.

But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was Thus writtin on a table' of bras.

I woll now ſyng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his deſtine
Fugitif fro Troye the cowntre
Into Itaille, with full moche pine,
Unto the ſtrondis of Lavine,
And tho began the ſtorie' anone,
As I ſhall tellin you echone.

First ſawe I the diſtruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falſe untrue forſwerynges,
And with his chere and his leſynges,
That made a horſe, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loſte all ther joye.

And after this was graved, alas!
How lions caſtill aſſailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain,
And Polices his ſonne certain,
Diſpitouſly of Dan Pyrrhus.

And next that ſawe I howe Venus,
Whan that ſhe ſawe the caſtill brende,
Doune from hevyn ſhe gan diſcende,
And bade her ſonne Eneas ſe,
And how he ſled, and how that he Eſcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his ſathre', old Anchifes,
And bare hym on his backe awiae,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchifes in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thiſke that unbrennid were.

Then ſawe I next that all in ſero
How Creuſa, Dan Eneas wiſe,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong ſonne clepid Julo,
And eke Afcanius also,
Fleddin eke, with full drierie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreſt as thei went How at a tournyng of a went Creuſa was iſloſte, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her fought, and how her ghofte
Bad hym to ſlie the Grekis hoſte,
And ſaid he muſt into Itaille,
As was his deſtine, ſauns faile,
That it was pite for to here,
Whan that her ſpирite gan appere.
The wordis that ſhe to hym ſaid,
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied.

There ſawe I gravin eke how he
His ſathir eke, and his meind,
With his ſhupis began to ſaile
Toward the cowntrey of Itaille,
As ſtreight as ere thiſt mightin go.

There ſawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wiſe,
That haſt ſtaund all thy life

Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
 Kennin and crie as thou were wode
 On Eolus, the god of windes,
 To blowin out of alle kindes
 So loudē, that he ſhould ydrenche
 Lorde, and ladies, and grome, and wenche
 Of all the Trojanis nacion,
 Without any' of ther favacion.

There ſawe I ſoche tempest ariſe,
 That every herte might aſpire,
 To ſe it paintid on the wall.

There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
 Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
 Ywepyng with full woſull chere
 Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
 To ſave and kepin that navie
 Of that dere Trojan Eneas,
 Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

THIS wretchid world is tranſmutacion
 As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
 Without ordir or due diſcrecion
 Govirid is by fortun's errour,

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third booke of the Fall of Princes a few ſtanſas are ſeleſted, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
 And hath none horſe to releve his trauayle,

 Wine nor licour, that may to hym awayle,
 Tight fo ſare I which in my buſineſſe,
 No ſuccour ſynde my rudenes to redreſſe.

I meane as thus, I haue no freſh licour
 Out of the conduites of Calliope,
 Nor through Clío in rhetorike no ſtoure,
 In my labour ſor to reſreſh me:
 Nor of the ſellers in nember thiſe three,
 Which with Cithera on Parnaſo dwell,
 They neuer me eue drinke once of their wel.
 Nor of theiſe ſpunges clere and chriſtalline,
 That ſprange by touchyng of the Pegale,
 Their fauour haſtith my making to lumine
 I ſynde theiſe bawne of ſo great ſcarſitie,
 To tame theiſe tunas with ſome drop of pleneſſe
 For Poliphemus throw his grete blindnes,
 Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.

THE HISTORY OF THE

Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The hevy soule troubled with traouayle,
And of memorye the glaying brotelines,
Drede and vncunning haue made a strong batail
With weernes my spirite to assaile,
And with their subtil creeping in most quaint
Hath made my spirit in making for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull trowardnes
Of my stepmother called obliuion,
Hath a baltyll of forgetfulness,
To stoppe the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might haue no clere direction,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.

Thus was I fet and stode in double werre
At the metyng of fearful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer list to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me contrayne,
Bochas taccomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignorance, with a menace of drede,
My penne to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief iustice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkesbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of the Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HY T may peradventure be marvelid by some men, why one Realme is a Lordship only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordship, Regall and Politike, and the Prynce thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callid Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen thes two Princes both of egall Astate.

To this dowte it may be answered in this manner; The first Institution of thes two Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cause of this diuersyte.

When Nembroth by Might, by his own Glorie, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to himself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regende; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppressyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beste for to sele and eate hym; so Nembroth subduyd to him the People with Might, to have their service and their goods, using upon them the Lordship that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then most resemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by his own Will. Werfor many Crystyn Princes use the same Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys sayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, when Mankynd was more manufecte, and better disposyd to Vertue, Grete Communalities, as was the Fellowship, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, having an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philosopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts mult needs have an Heed; than they chose the same Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and onyng of themselves into a Realme, ordeyned the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyfied by such Lawys, as they al would assent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and because it is mynistrd by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen, plurium Scientia, five Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith, in his Boke de prisicis Historiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulyd by the same Lawe, and therfor the Kyng thereof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And also the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the sayd Diodorus in that Boke, praysthytely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more sewerly do Justice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is also good for his People that receyve thereby, such Justice as they desyer themselves. Now as me seymth, it ys shewyd opynly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his people Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a larger specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Johnson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry iest how a sergeant would learne to playe the freere. Written by maister Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Assyre and say,
That best is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The busines that he can,
And in no wyse,
To enterpryse,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no skyll,
Is neuer lyke to die.
He that hath laste,
The hostiers crafte,
And fallest to making shone,
The synthe that shall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrist is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyre paper,
To goe to writyng scole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene shall proue a sole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothing but kyssie the cup,
With her phisick,
Wil kepe one sicke,
Tyll he haue souled hym vp:
A man of lawe,
That neuer lawe,
The wayes to bye and sell,
Wenyng to ryfe,
By marchaundise,
I wish to spede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo sicke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in sute,
Tyll he dispuite,
His money cleane away,

Pletyng the lawe,
For every strawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and strife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go smatter,
In philolophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a smellar,
In theology,
All that ensee,
Suche craftes new,
They drive so farre a cast,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Beswrewe themselves at last.
This thing was tryed
And verelyed,
Here by a sergeaunt late,
That thriftly was,
Or he coulede pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See how he coulede,
A little play the frere :
Now yf you wyll,
Knewe how it fyll,
Take hede and ye shall here.
It happed so,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd a side :
His sonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all :
But to suffice
His chyldre, well thrife,
That money was to smal.
Yet or this day
I have hard say,
That many a man certesse,
Hath with good cast,
Be ryche at last,
That hath begonne with lesse.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
To see it was a joy,
For lest sum blast,
Myght ouer cast,
His ship, or by mischaunce,
Men with sum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And minish his substaunce,
For to put out,
All maner dout,
He made a good purusy,
For every whyt,
By his owne wyte,
And toke an other way :
First fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a por,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couctoussly,
He supped it fayre vp,
In his owne brest,
He thought it best,
His money to enclose,
N^o LXXXI.

Then wist he well,
What euer fell,
He coulede it neuer lose.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundise :
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyse.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he spent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miscontent.
With lusty sporte,
And with resort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had sworne,
Some man is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And so was he,
For such degre,
He gat and fuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A sergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy straye,
On him to wayte,
As sone as on the mayre.
But he doubtlesse,
Of his mekenesse,
Hated such pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied so,
But drewe himself a side,
To faint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocioun,
There would he nedes abyde.
There spent he fast,
Till all were past,
And to him came there meny,
To aske theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With visage stout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was faine,
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wist not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So sick alway,
He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchant man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officer,
Than gan enquire,
What him was best to do.
And he answerde,
Be not aserde,
Take an accion therfore,
If you behest,
I shall hym reffe,
And than care for no more.

THE HISTORY OF THE

I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The fergeaunt faid,
Be not afraid,
It ſhall be brought about.
In many a game,
Lyke to the ſame,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your ſake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And ſooth then goth,
A pice this offiere,
And for a day,
All his array,

He chaunged with a frere.

So was he dight,

That no man might,

Hym for a frere deny,

He dopped and dooked,

He ſpake and looked,

So religiouſly.

Yet in a glaſſe,

Or he would paſſe,

He toted and he peered,

His harte for pryde,

Lepte in his fyde,

To ſee how well he freered.

Than forth a pace,

Unto the place,

He goeth withouten ſhame

To do this dede,

But now take hede,

For here begynneth the game.

He drew hym ny,

And ſoftely,

Streight at the dore he knocked:

And a damſell,

That hard hym well,

There came and it vnlocked.

The frere ſayd,

Good ſpede ſpide mayd,

Here lodgeth ſuch a man,

It is told me:

Well ſyr quod he;

And yf he do what than.

Quod he mayſtreſſe,

No harme doutleſſe:

It longeth for our order,

To hurt no man,

But as we can,

Euery wight to forder.

With hym truly,

Fayne ſpake would I.

Sir quod ſhe by my fay,

He is lo ſike,

Ye be not lyke,

To ſpake with hym to day.

Quod he fayre may,

Yet I you pray,

This much at my deſire,

Vouchefe to do,

As go hym to,

And ſay an auſten frere

Would with hym ſpeke,

And matters breake,

For his awyle certayn.

Quod ſhe I wyll,

Stonde ye here ſtyll,

Tyll I come downe agayn.

Vp is ſhe go,

And told hym fo,

As ſhe was bode to fay,

He miſtruſtyng,

No maner thyng,

Sayd mayden go thy way,

And ſeth him hyder,

That we togyder,

May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,

Vp ſhe hym brought,
No harme ſhe thought,
But it made ſome folke wrothe.

This offiere,

This fayned frere,

Whan he was come aloft,

He dopped than,

And grete this man,

Religiously and oft.

And he agayn,

Ryght glad and fayn,

Toke hym there by the hande,

The frere than ſayd,

Ye be diſmayd,

With trouble I underſtande.

In dede quod he,

It hath with me,

Bene better than it is,

Syr quod the frere,

Be of good chere,

Yet ſhall it after this.

But I would now,

Comen with you,

In counſayle yf you pleaſe,

Or ellys nat

Of matters thar,

Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.

Downe went the mayd,

The marchaut ſayd,

Now ſay on gentle frere,

Of thys tydyng,

That ye me bryng,

I long full ſore to here.

Whan there was none,

But they alone,

The frere with euyl grace,

Sayd, I reſt the,

Come on with me,

And out he toke his mace:

Thou ſhalt obay,

Come on thy way,

I have the in my clouche,

Thou goeſt not hence,

For all the penſe,

The mayre hath in his pouche.

This marchaut there,

For wrath and ſere,

He waxyng welnygh wood,

Sayd horſon theſe,

With a miſcheſe,

Who hath taught: the thy good.

And with his fiſt,

Vpon the lyſt,

He gaue hym ſuch a blow,

That backward downe,

Almoſt in fowne,

The frere is ouerthrow.

Yet was this man,

Well ſearder than,

Leſt he the frere had ſlayne,

Tyll with good rappes,

And heuy clappes,

He dawde hym vp agayne.

The frere toke harte,

And vp he ſtarte,

And well he layde about,

And ſo there goth,

Betwene them both,

Many a luſty clout.

They rent and tere,

I che others here,

And clauē togyder faſt,

Tyll with luggayng,

And with tuggayng,

They fell downe bothe at laſt.

Than on the grounde,

Togyder rounde,

With many a ſadde ſtroke,

They roll and rumble,

They turne and tumble,

As pygges do in a poke.

So long about,
 They heere and shoue,
 Togidder that at last,
 The mayd and wyfe,
 To breake the strife,
 Hyed them vpward fast.
 And whan they spye,
 The captaynes lye,
 Both waitring on the place,
 The freres hood,
 They pulled a good,
 Adowne about his face.
 Whyle he was blynde,
 The wenche behynde,
 Lent him leyd on the flore,
 Many a ioule,
 About the noule,
 With a great batyldore.
 The wyfe came yet,
 And with her fete,
 She holpe to kepe him downe,
 And with her rocke,
 Many a knocke,
 She gaue hym on the crowne.
 They layd his mace,
 About his face,
 That he was wood for payne:
 The fryre strappe,
 Gate many a swappe,
 Tyll he was full nygh slayne.
 Vp they hym lift,
 And with yll thrift,
 Heddyng a long the stayre,
 Downe they hym threwe,
 And fayne adewe,
 Commende us to the mayre.
 The frere arose,
 But I suppose,
 Amaled was his hed,
 He shoke his cares,
 And from grete feares,
 He thought hym well ysted.
 Quod he now loyf,
 Is all this coft,
 We be neuer the nere.
 Ill mote he be,
 That caused me,
 To make my self a frere.
 Now masters all,
 Here now I shall,
 Ende there as I began,
 In any wyse,
 I would auyse,
 And counsayle every man,
 His owne craft vse,
 All newe refuse,
 And lightly let them gone:
 Play not the frere,
 Now make good chere,
 And welcome euerych one.

A rufull lamentacion (written by master Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Elisabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wile to king Henry the seuenth, and eldest daughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Elisabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503; and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the seuenth.

O Ye that put your trust and confidence,
 In worldly ioy and frayle prosperite,
 That lo lyue here as ye should neuer hence,
 Remember death and loke here vpon me.
 Ensauple I thinke there may no better be.
 Your selfe wote well that in this realme was I,
 Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
 Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
 Was not my mother quene my father kyng?
 Was I not a kinges sere in marriage?
 Had I not plenty of euery pleasaunt thyng?
 Mercifull god this is a straunge rekenyng:
 Rycheffe, honour, welth, and auncestry,
 Hath me forsaken and lo now here I lye.

If worship myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
 If wyt myght haue me saued, I neded not fere.
 If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
 But O good God what wayleth all this gere.
 When deth is come thy mighty messing, re,
 Obey we must there is no remedy,
 Me hath he sommoned, and lo now here I lye.

Yet was I late promised otherwyse,
 This yere to liue in welth and delice.
 Lo where to commeth thy blandishing promyse,
 O false astrology and deynatrice,
 Of goddes secretes making thy selfe to wyfe.
 How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
 The yere yet lasteth, and lo now here I lye.

O bryttill welth, as full of bitternesse,
 Thy single pleasure doubled is with payne.
 Account my sorow first and my dillresse,
 In sondry wyfe, and recken there agayne,
 The ioy that I haue had, and I dare sayne,
 For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
 More wo then welth, and lo now here I lye.

Where are our castels, now where are our towers,
 Goodly Rychmonde sone art thou gone from me,
 At Westminster that cosly worke of yours,
 Myne owne dere lorde now shall I neuer see.
 Almighty god vouchefafe to graunt that ye,
 For you and your children well may edely.
 My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I lye.

Adew myne owne dere spouse my worthy lorde,
 The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
 In mariage and peasable concord,
 Into your handes here I cleane relyne,
 To be bestowed vpon your children and myne.
 Erst wer you father, and now must ye supply,
 The mothers part also, for lo now here I lye.

Farewell my daughter lady Margerete.
 God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
 That ye should go where we should seldome meete.
 Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
 O mortall folke that we be very blynde,
 That we least feare, full oft it is most nye,
 From you depart I fyrst, and lo now here I lye.

Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
 Comfort your sonne, and be ye of good chere.
 Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
 Farewell my daughter Katherine late the fere,
 To prince Arthur myne owne childe lo dere,
 It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
 Pray for my soule, for lo now here I lye.

Adew lord Henry my louyng sonne adew.
 Our lord encrease your honour and estate,
 Adew my daughter Mary bright of hew,
 God make you vertuous wyfe and fortunate.
 Adew swete hart my litle daughter Kate,
 Thou shalt swete babe siche is thy destiny,
 Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I lye.

Lady Cicely Anne and Katheryne,
 Farewell my welbeloued sisters three,
 O lady Briget other siller myne,
 Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
 Now well are ye that earthly foly see,
 And heuently thynges loue and magnify.
 Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I lye.

A dew my lordes, a dew my ladies all,
 A dew my faithful seruantes euerych one,
 A dew my commons whom I neuer shall,
 See in this world wherfore to the alone,
 Immortall god verely three and one,
 I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
 Shew to thy seruant, for lo now here I lye.

Certain meters in English written by master Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and cauted them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high estate power and auctoritie,
 If ye ne know, enserche and ye shall spye,
 That richesse, worship, welth, and dignitie,
 Joy, rest, and peace, and all thyng tynally,
 That any pleasure or profit may come by,
 To mannes comfort, ayde, and sustinaunce,
 Is all at my deuys and ordinaunce.

THE HISTORY OF THE

about my fauour there is nothing wonne.
 y a matter haue I brought at laſt,
 good concluſion, that loonly was begonne.
 I many a purpoſe, bounden ſure and laſt in wife prouidion, I haue ouercalt.
 about good happe there may no wit ſuffice.
 better is to be fortunate than wyle.

And therefore hath there ſome men bene or this,
 My deadly toes and written many a boke,
 To my diſpraiſe. And other cauſe there nys,
 But for me likt not friendly on them loke.
 I haue lyke the fox they ſare that once forſoke,
 The pleaſant grapes, and gan for to dety them,
 Becauſe he lept and yet could not come by them.
 But let them write their labour in is wayne.

For well ye w te, myrth, honour, and richeſſe,
 Much better is than penury and payne.
 The nedly wretch that lingereth in diſtreſſe,
 Without myne helpe is euer comfortleſſe,
 A wery burden odious and loth,
 To all the world, and eke to him ſelfe both.

But he that by my fauour may aſcende,
 To mighty power and excellent degree,
 A common wele to gouerne and defende,
 O in how bliſt condicon ſtandeth he:
 Him ſ. in honour and felicitye,
 And ouer that, may further and increaſe,
 A region hole in ioyfull reſt and peace.
 Now in this poynt there is no more to ſay,
 Eche man hath of him ſelf the gouernaunce.
 Let eury wight than ſolowe his owne way,
 And he that out of pouerthe and miſchaunce,
 Liſt for to liue, and wyll him ſelfe enhaunce,
 In wealth and richeſſe, come forth and wayte on me.
 And he that wyl be a beggar, let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that truſt in Fortune.

THOU that are prouide of honour ſhape or kynne,

That hepel vp this wretched worldes treaſure,
 Thy fingers lincid with gold, thy tawny ſkynne,
 With treſh apparyle garniſhed out of meaſure,
 And weneth to haue fortune at thy pleaſure,
 Caſt vp thyne eye, and loke how ſlipper chaunce,
 Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.

Sometyme ſhe loketh as louely fayre and bright,
 As goodly Venus mother of Cupyde.

She becketh and ſhe ſmiloth on eury wight.
 But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
 There cometh a cloude, and ſarwell all our pryde.
 Like any ſerpent the beginneth to ſwell,
 And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.

Yet for all that we brothe men are fayne,

(So wretched is our nature and to bylynde)
 As ſoone as Fortune liſt to laugh agayne,
 With fayre countenance and diſceitull mynde,
 To crouche and knele and gape alter the wynde,
 Not one or twayne but thouſandes in a rout,
 Lyke ſwarmyng bees come ſlickeryng her aboute.

Then as a bayte ſhe bryngeth forth her ware,
 Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ſtone:
 On whiche the maſed people gaſe and ſtare,
 And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
 Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
 Amyd her treaſure and waueryng richeſſe,
 Proudly ſhe boweth as lady and empreſſe.

Faſt by her ſyde doth wery labour ſtand,
 Pale ſere alſo, and ſorow all bewept,
 Diſdayn and hatred on that other hand,
 Like reſſies watche for ſlepe with trauaile kept,
 His eyes drowſy and lokingyng as he ſlept.
 Before her ſtandeth danger and enuy,
 Flattery, dyſceyt, miſchicke and tyranny.

About her cometh all the world to begge.

He aſketh lande, and he to paſ would bryng.
 This toyte and that, and all not worth an egge:
 He would in loue proſper aboue all thyng:
 He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
 He ſorcereth not ſo he may money haue,
 Though all the worlde accept hym for a knaue.
 Lo thus ye ſee diuers hedges, diuers wittes,
 Fortune alone as diuers as they all,

Vaſtly here and there among them ſittes:
 And at auenture downe her giſtes fall,
 Catch who ſo may ſhe throweth great and ſmall
 Not to all men, as cometh ſonne or dewe,
 But for the moſt part, all among a fewe.

And yet her brotell giſtes long may not laſt.
 He that the gaue them, loketh prouide and hye.
 She whirleth about and plucketh away as faſt,
 And geueth them to an other by and by.
 And thus from man to man continually,
 She viſth to geue and take, and ſilly toſſe,
 One man to wyngnyng of an others loſſe.

And when the robbeth one, down goth his pryde.

He wepeth and wayleth and curſeth her full rore.

But he that receueth it, on that other ſyde,

Is glad, and bleſth her often tymes therefore.

But in a whyle when ſhe loueth hym no more,

She glydeth from hym, and her giſtes to.

And he her curſeth, as other foolles do.

Alas the foliſh people can not ceaſe,

Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do ſele.

About her alway, beſely they preace.

But lord how he doth thynk hym ſelf full wele.

That may ſet once his hande vpon her whele.

He holdeth faſt: but vpwart as he ſieth,

She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.

Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.

Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perſe.

Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.

Thus many mo then I may well reherſe.

Thus double fortune, when the lyſt reuerſe

Her ſlipper fauour fro them that in her truſt,

She ſeeth her wey and leyeth them in the duſt.

She ſodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.

And ſodeynly miſcheueth all the flocke.

The head that late lay eaſily and full ſoft,

In ſtede of pylows lyeth alter on the blocke:

And yet alas the moſt cruell proude mocke:

The deynthy mowth that ladyes kiſſed haue,

She bryngeth in the caſe to kyſſe a knaue.

In chaungyng of her courſe, the chaunge ſhewth this,

Vp ſtarth a knaue, and downe there ſalth a knight,

The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.

Hatred is turned to loue, loue to deſpyght.

This is her ſport, thus proueth ſhe her myght:

Great boſſe he maketh yf one be by her power,

Welthy and wretched both within an howre.

Pouerthe that of her giſtes wyl nothing take,

With mery chere, looketh vpon the prece,

And ſeeth how fortunes houſhold goeth to wrake.

Faſt by her ſtandeth the wyle Socrates.

Arriliſſus, Pythagoras, and many a leſe,

Of olde philoſophers. And eke agaynſt the ſonne

Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.

With her is Byas, whole cuntry lackt defence,

And whylom of their ſoes ſtode ſo in dout,

That eche man haſtely gan to cary thence,

And aſked hym why he nought caryed out.

I bere quod he all myne with me about:

Wiſedom he ment, not fortunes brothe fees.

For nought he counted his that he might leſe.

Heraclitus eke, lyſt ſelowſhip to kepe

With glad pouerthe, Democritus alſo:

Of whiche the fyrſt can neuer ceaſe but wepe,

To ſee how thicke the bylynded people go,

With labour great to purchaſe care and wo.

That other laugheth to ſee the fooliſh apes,

I loue earnestly they walk about theyr capes.

Of this poore ſect, it is comen vſage,

Onely to take that nature may ſuſtayne,

Baniſſing cleane all other ſurſuſage,

They be content, and of nothing complainyng.

No nygarde eke is of his good to fayne.

But they more pleaſure haue a thouſande folde,

The ſecrete draughtes of nature to behold.

Set fortunes ſeruauntes by them and ye well,

That one is free, that other euer thral,

That one content, that other neuer full,

That one in ſurety, that other lyke to fall.

Who lyt to aduſe them both, parcyue he ſe

As great difference betwene them as we ſet,

Betwixte wretchednes and felicitye.

Now haue I shewed you bothe: these whiche ye lyst,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to say, nowe lyeth it in your fyft,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to please,
If that ye thinke your selfe to well at ease.
And fyft vpon the lously shall the smile,
And frendly on the cast her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a while,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradise:
And forth with all what so thou lyst deuise,
She wyll the graunt it liberally parhappes:
But for all that beware of alter clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure sure:
Ye may in cloudes easly trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cause fishes to endure,
And make the burning fyre his heate to spare,
And all thys worlde in compase to forsake,
As her to make by craft or engine ftable,
That of her nature is euer variable.

Scue her day and nyght as recuerently,
Vpon thy knees as any seruauit may,
And in conclusion, that thou shalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy seruyce I dare say.
And looke yet what she geueth the to day,
With labour wonne she shall happily to morow
Pluck it agayne out of thyre hande with sorow.
Whereof yf thou in suretye lyst to stande,
Take pouerties parte and let proude fortune go,
Receyue nothing that cometh from her hande.
Loose maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayst thou boldly desyre her turninge chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.

But and thou wilt nedes meddle with her treasure,
Truist not therein, and spende it liberally.
Bare the not proude, nor take not out of measure:
Bylde not thyne house on heyth vp in the skye.
None falseth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature sent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borrowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that seke Fortune.

WHO so delyteth to prouen and assay,
Of wavering fortune the vncertaine lot,
If that the aunswere please you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fist,
She reneth loose, and turneth whome she lyst.
The rallying dysc in whome your lucke doth stande,
With whose vnhappy chaunce ye be so wroth,
Yeknowe your selfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyshes and frogges both.
Call in your nette: but be you licke or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyst assyne:
For it is your owne fishyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other she shall it amende.
There is no manne so farre out of her grace,
But he sometye hath comfort and solace:
No none agayne so farre forth in her fauour,
That is full satisfied with her behauiour.

Fortune is flately, solemne, proude, and hye:
And rycheis geueth, to haue seruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halpenny:
Some manne a thousande ponde, some lesse some more.
But for all that the kepeth euer in store,
From eury manne some parcell of his wyll.
That he may pray therfore and serue her lyll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some man hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of sleight.
To some the fendeth children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorthpy, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet the pynecheth hym with a shrewde wyfe.
Then for almisch as it is fortunes gyfte,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe.

N^o LXXXII.

But as her selfe lyst order and deuise;
Doth eury manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counfayle you eche one trusse vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With suche rewarde as fortune hath you sent.
All thynges in this boke that ye shall rede,
Doe as ye lyst, there shall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as surely as your crede.
But notwithstanding certes in my mynde,
I durst well swere, as true ye shall them fynde,
In eury poynt eche answere by and by,
As are the iudgements of astronomye.

The Description of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third sonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and prowesse farre vnder them bothe, little of stature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of visage, and such as is in states called warlye, in other menne otherwise, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had so much a doe in her trauaile, that shee could not bee de-liuered of hym vncutte: and that he came into the world with the secte forwarde, as menne bee borne out-warde, and (as the same runneth) also not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboute the trouthe, or elles that nature changed her course in hys beginninge, whiche in the course of his lyffe many thynges vnaturally committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his disposition was more metely then for peace. Sundry victories hadde hee, and sometime ouerthrowes, but neuer in default as for his owne parsons, either of hardinesse or polityc order, free was hee called of dyspence, and somewhat aboute hys power liberall, with large gyftes hee get him vnstedfast frendshippes, for whiche hee was faine to pil and spoyle in other places, and get him stedfast hatred. Hee was close and secrete, a deepe dissimuler, lowlye of coun-tynance, arrogant of heart, outwardly compainable where he inwardly hated, not letting to kisse whome hee thoughte to kyll: dyspositioun and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambition, and either for the suretye and encrease of his estate. Frende and foe was muche what indifferente, where his aduantage grew, he spared no mans deathe, whose life withlode his purpose. He slewe with his owne handes king Henry the sixt, being prisoner in the Tower, as menne constantly saye, and that without commaundement or knowledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had en-tended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to some other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wise menne also weene, that his drift couerly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee resisted openly, howbeit somwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that hee long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that case the king his brother (whose life hee looked that euil dyete shoulde shorten) shoulde happen to decease (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladd of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life must nedes haue hindered hym so entendinge, whither the fame duke of Clarence hadd kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprised to be kyng himselfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whose diuineth vpon coniectures, maye as wel thote to farre as to short. How beit this haue I by credible informacion learmed, that the selfe nighte in whiche kyng Edwarde died, one Mytlebrooke longe ere mornyng, came in greute haste to the house of one Pottier dweyng in Redecrosse strete without Crepulgate: and when hee was with halfe rappynge quickly letten in, hee shewed vnto Pottier that kyng Edward was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottier then wyll my mayster the duke of Gloucester bee kyng. What cause hee hadde soo to thynke harde it is to saye, whither hee being toward him, anye thyng knewe that hee suche thyng purposed, or otherwise.

wyle had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likelye to speake it of noughte.

But nowe to retorne to the cours of this hystorye, were it that the duke of Gloucester hadde of old foreminded this conclusion, or was nowe at erste thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occasion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nepheues (as opportunitie and lykelyhoode of speede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer intended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr destruction, with the vsurpacion of the regal dignitie vpon hymselfe. And for as muche as hee well wiste and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennyng betweene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuyng others authoritie, hee nowe thought that their deuision shoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the pursuite of his intente, and a sure ground for the foundation of al his building yf he might firste vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde displeasure, abuse the anger and ygnorance of the one partie, to the destruction of the tother: and then wynde to his purpose as manye as he coulde: and those that coulde not be wonne, myght be losse ere they looked therefore. For of one thinge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he shold soone haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edward in his life, albeit that this disencion betwene his frendes somewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health hee somewhat the lesse regarded it, because hee thought whatsoever busines shoulde falle betweene them, hymselfe shoulde alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his last sicknesse, when hee receiued his naturall strengthe soo sore enfebled, that hee dyspayred all recouerye, then hee considerynge the youthe of his children, albeit hee nothyng lesse mistrusted then that that happened, yet well forkyng that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of his children shoulde lacke discrecion of themselves, and good counsaile of their frendes, of which either party shoulde counsaile for their owne commoditie and rather by pleasaunte aduise too wynde themselves fauour, then by profitable aduertisement to do the children good, he called some of them before him that were at variance, and in especyall the lorde marques Dorsette the quenes sonne by her fyrste housebande, and Richard the lorde Haitynges, a noble man, than lorde chamberlayne agayne whome the quene specially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and also for that shee thoughte hym secretlye famylier with the kyng in wanton compaignie. Her kynned also bare hym sore, as well for that the kyng hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyse) as for diserie other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they looked for. When these lordes with diserie other of bothe the parties were come in presence, the kyng listinge vppre hymselfe and vnderfette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyle floyd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinsmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you see, and I feele. By whiche the lesse whyle I looke to lye with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what case I leaue you, for such as I leaue you suche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they shoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at variance, myght happe to fall themselves at warre ere their discrecion woulde serue to sette you at peace. Ye see their youthe, of which I reckon the onely suretie to reste in youre concord. For it sufficeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they were menne, your faithfulness happe woulde suffice. But childehood must be maintained by mens authoritie, and slipper youth vnderdropped with elder counsaile, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others parson, impugneth eche others counsaile, there must it nedes bee long ere anye good conclusion goe forward. And also while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduise, of whiche muste needs ensue the euill bringyng vppre of the pryce, whose mynd in tender youth infect, shal redily fall to mischief and riot. and drawe down with this noble reline to ruine: but if graceturn him to wisdom, which if God send, then thou that by cuill meues before pleased him best, shal alter fall farthest out of fauour, so that euer at length cuill drities drewe to nought, and good pain wayes prosper. Great variance hath ther long bene betwene you. not alway for great causes. Sometime a thinge right wel intended, our misconstruction turneth vnto worle or a final displeasure done vs, eyther our owne affection or cuill tongues agreeth. But this wote I well ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be christen men, this shall I leaue for preachers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this shall I desire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloude, the other of myne aies, and eche of you with other, eyther of kindred or affinitie, whiche spurytail kynred of affynity, if the sacramentes of Chrises church, beare that weyght with vs that woulde Godde thei did, shoulde no lesse moue vs to charity, then the respecte of fleshye consanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worse, for the lesse cause that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde we so deadye debate, as amonge them, whiche by nature and lawe molle oughte to agree together. Suche a pestilente serpente is ambition and delyre of vaine glorye and fouerauntie, whiche amonge states where he once entrench crepeth fourth so farre, tyll with deuision and variance hee turneth all to mischief. First longing to be nexte the best, afterwarde egall with the beste, and at laste chiefe and aboue the beste. Of which immoderate appetite of woorschip, and thereby of debate and disencion what losse, what forowe, what trouble hath within these fewe yeares grown in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as wee wel remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue foreseen, as I haue with my more payne then pleasure proued, by Goddes blessed Lade (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courtesye of mennes knees, with the losse of soo many heades. But sithen thynges passed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken soo greute hurt afore, that we eftsoones fall not in that occasion agayne. Nowe be those griefes pacified, and all is (Godde be thanked) quite, and likeli right wel to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder youre cofeys my children, if Godde sende them life and you loue. Of which twoo thinges, the lesse losse wer they by whome thoughte Godde dydde his pleasure, yet shoulde the realme, alway fynde kinges and paradventure as good kinges. But yf you among your selfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man shall perish and happily he to, and ye to, ere this land fynde peace again. Wherefore in these last wordes that euer I looke to speak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer borne to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verely truite you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kindred, this realme, your owne country, or your owne surety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to sitte vp, laide him down on his right side, his face towards them: and none was there present that coulde refrain from weeping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they coulde, and answering for the time as they thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence (as by their wordes appered ech forgave other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appered by their dedes) their hearts wer far a sonder. As fone as the king was departed, the noble prince his sonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceale, kept his household at Ludlow in Wales. Which country being far of from the law and recourse to iustice, was begun to be lare oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at liberte vncorreded. And for this encheason the prince was in the life of his father sente thither, to the end that the authorite of his presence should refraine euill disposed parsons fro the boldnes of their former outrages, to the gouernance and ordering of this yong prince at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Antony Wodouile lord Riuers and brother vnto the queene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsaile. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euery one as he was meritt of kin vnto the queene, so was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the queene not vniuersally deuised, whiche by her bloodie mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauour, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccion, and vpon that grounde fet the foundation of all his vnhappy building.

For whom fouer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himself their fauor, hee brake vnto them, some by mouth, som by writing or secret messengers, that it neyther was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the yong king their master and kinsmanne, should bee in the handes and custodie of his mothers kintred, sequestred in maner from their compani and attendance, of which euery one ought him as faithfull seruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side: whose blood (quod he, fauing the kinges pleasure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: which nowe to be as who say remoued from the kyng, and the lesse noble to be left about him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys nagellie, nor vnto vs, and also to his grace no surety to haue the mightiest of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little iopardy, to suffer our welproued euill willers, to grow in ouerget authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and sone perswaded.
Ye remember I trow king Edward himself, albeit he was a manne of age and of discrecion, yet was he in many thynges ruled by the bende, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except only the immoderate aduancement of them selfe. Whiche whiche they forer thirfted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to gesse. And if some folkes frendship had not holden better place with the king, then any respect of kintred, they might peraduenture easily haue be trapped and brought to confusion somme of vs ere this.
Why not as easily as they haue done some other already, as neere of his royal bloodie as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that perill is passe. Howe be it as great is growing, yf we suffer this yonge kyng in oure enemies hande, whiche without his wytyngs, might abuse the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoings, which thyng God and good prouision forbyd. Of which good prouision none of us hath any thing the lesse nede, for the late made attonement, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is so vnwyse, ouerfone to truste a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, sodainly contract in one houre continued, yet scant a fortnight, shold be deper feted in their stomaches: then a long accustomed malice many yeres rooted.

With these wordes and wytynges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester sone set a fyre, them that were of the selfe ethe to kinde, and in especial twayne,
Edward duke of Buckingham, and Richard lord Halinges and chaunberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe succession from his ancestrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor.
These two not bearing ethe to other so muche loue, as hated bothe vnto the queenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kynges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemies.
Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester vnder-standing, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were about the kyng, intended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accompanied with suche power of their frendes, that it shoulde bee harde for hym to bryng his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemblie of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wiste was doubrou, and in which the kyng being on their side, his part shoulde haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by diuers meanes, caused the queene to be perswaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and also shold be ieopardous, the king to come vp strong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing studied vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honour of the king: if the lordes of her kintred shold assemblie in the kinges name muche people, thei shoulde geue

the lordes atwixe whome and them hadde bene sommetyme debate, to feare and suspicte, lest they shoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges fauegarde whome no manne empugned, but for their destruccion, hauieng more regarde to their olde variance, then thir newe attonement. For whiche cause thei shoulde assemblie on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whole power the wyffe wel farre stretched. And thus shoulde all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof shoulde ensue, which was likely not to be litle, and the most harme there like to fal wher the left would, all the worlde woulde put her and her kin-red in the wyght, and say that thei had vnwyselye and vntrewlye also, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her husband so prudentlye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obserued.

The queene being in this wise perswaded, suche woordes sente vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute
the kyng, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester hymselfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kynges soo reuerentlye, and to the queenes frendes there soo louyngelye, that they nothyng earthe-lye mystruylinge, broughte the kynges vppe in greate haste, not in good speede, with a lobe compaignie.
Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when these dukes of Gloucester and Buckingham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lord Riuers the kynges vncl, intending on the morowe to folow the kyng, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford

miles thence, early or hee departed:
So was there made that nyghte muche frendly chere betwene these dukes and the lord Riuers a grete while.
But incontinente after that they were openlye with greate courtysie departed, and the lord Riuers lodged, the dukes secretlye with a fewe of their moeste priuie frendes, sette them downe in counsaile, wherin they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawning of the day, thei sent about priuily to their seruantes in their innes and lodgynges aboute, geuinge them commaundement to make them selfe thorowly readye, for their lordes wer to horsebackward. Vppon whiche messiges, manye of their folke were atten-daunt, when manye of the lord Riuers seruantes were vreadye. Nowe hadde these dukes taken also into their custodie the kayes of the inns, that none shoulde passe foorth without their licence.

And ouer this in the hygh waye toward Stonye Stratford where the kynges laye, they hadde besetwold certayne of their folke, that shoulde fende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratford, tyll they shoulde geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukess themselfe intended for the shewe of their dyliggence, to bee the fyrste that shoulde that daye attende vppon the kynges highnesse oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lord Riuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euery side beset, neyther hys seruantes nor hymselfe sufficed to go oute, perceiuyng well so grete a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner present with this last nyghts chere, in so few houres to get a chaunge maruylously misliked. How be it fitt he coule not get awaye, and keepe himselfe close, hee woulde not, lest he shoulde seeme to hyde himselfe for some secret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vppon the suretie of his owne conscience, to goe boldlye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane.
Whome as soone as they sawe, they begonne to quarrell with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette diluance betwene

betweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confusion, but it shoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well spoken manne) in goodly wise to excuse himselfe, they taryed not the ende of his aunswere, but shortly tooke him and putte him in ward, and that done, forthwith wente to horsebacke, and tooke the way to Stony Stratforde. Where they founde the kynge with his companie readye to leape on horsebacke, and departe forward, to leaue that lodging for them, because it was to streighte for bothe companies. And as sone as they came in his prefence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham saide, goe afore gentlemente and yemen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kynge, and on their knees in very humble wise, salued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthly knowing nor mistrustinge as yet. But euen by and by in his prefence, they piked a quarell to the lord Richard Graye, the kynge's other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the lord marques his brother and the lord Riuer's his vnkle, hadde compaffed to rule the kynge and the realme, and to sette variaunce among the flates, and to subdew and destroye the noble blood of the realme. Toward the accomplyshinge whereof, they sayde that the lord Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kynge's treasure, and sent menne to the sea. All whiche thinge these dukes wiste well were done for good purposes and necessari by the whole counsaile at London, sauing that somemwhat thei must sai. Vnto whiche wordes, the stinge aunswere, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot saie. But in good faith I dare well aunswere for myne vnkle Riuer's and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any such matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte their dealing in these matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And forthwith thei arrested the lord Richard and Sir Thomas Vaughan knightes, in the kynge's prefence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counsaile. And there they sent awaie from the kynge whom it pleased them, and sette newe seruantes aboute him, suche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothinge contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucester sente a dishe from his owne table to the lord Riuer's, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all shoulde be well enough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the messengr to beare it to his nephewe the lord Richard with the same messaige for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of comfort, as one to whom such aduersitie was straunge. But himselfe had been al his dayes in vnc therewith, and therefore coulde beare it the better. But for al this comfortable courtseye of the duke of Gloucester he sent the lord Riuer's and the lord Richard with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe country into diuers places to prison, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys daughter maiestres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was prisoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good daughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more desyer then I haue. I beseeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And such thynges as I somewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put them into your myndes, as I truste he dothe and better to by hys holy spirite: who blesse you and preferre you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all nor your babes, nor your nurfes, nor your good husbandes, nor your good husbandes shrewde wyues, nor your fathers shrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two short ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys pastime while he was prisoner in the Tower of London.

LEWIS the lost louer.

EY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer so fayre,
Or neuer so pleasantly begin to smile,
As though thou wouldst my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou shalt me not begile.
Trust shall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys haue or heauen sure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a storme.

DAUW the dyer.

LONG was I lady Luke your seruing man,
And now haue lost agayne all that I gat,
Wherefore when I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I bestrew your cat,
But in fayth I blesse you agayne a thousand times,
For lending me now some layure to make mynes.

At the same time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whose works it seems proper to insert a few stanzas, though he cannot be said to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpe when the sonne in vyrgyne
By radyanthe hete enryped hath our corne
When Luna full of mutabylite
As Emperes the dyaleme hath worne
Of our pole artycke, smylyng halfe in scorne
At out folly and our vnstedfastnesse
The time when Mars to warre hym dyd dres,
I callynge to mynde the greates auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trowth, and cloke subtilly
With freshe vtterance full sentencyously
Dyuerse in style some spared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly dyd endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was fore moued to a forse the fame
But ignorance full soone dyde me dyscure
And shewed that in this arte I was not sure
For to illumine the sayd I was to dulle
Aduysynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he so wyll atteyne Exceedyng fether than his connyng is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowne suche er this
But of reproche surely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he maye forynge haue
What and he slyde downe, who shall him saue?
Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawn and cast
That I ne wyfte what to do was beste
So fore enwored that I was at the laste
Enforced to sleepe, and for to take some rest
And to lye downe as soone as I my dresse
At Harwyche porte slumbrynge as I laye
In myne hostes house called powers keye.

Of the wits that flourished in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surrey; and this history would therefore have been imperfect without some specimens of his works, which yet it is not easy to distinguish from those of Sir Thomas Wyatt and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three first are, I believe, Surrey's; the rest, being of the same age, are selected, some as examples of different measures, and one as the oldest composition which I have found in blank verse.

Description of Spring, wherein ethe thing renews, save only the lover.

THE soote season that bud, and bloome fourth brings,
With grene hath cladde the hyl, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new the sines;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:

Somer

Summer is come, for every spray now springes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fishes flete with newe repayred scale:
The adder all her slough away the flynges,
The switt swallow pursueth the flies smalle,
The busie bee her honey how the mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I see among these pleasant thynges
Eche care decays, and yet my sorrow springes.

Description of the restless estate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides scourge had made me runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary course begunne:
And then I saw howe my desyre
Misguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me lose a better prey.
For when in fighes I spent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boying smoke dyd still bewray,
The present heat of secret flame:

And when salt teares do bayne my breast,
Where love his pleasant traynes hath fown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes opprest,
Ere that the budbes were spronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd still pursue,
The flying chafe of theyre requit;
Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breste.

When every loke these cheekes might stayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward signes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To bynd theyre eyes that else should see
My speckled cheekes with Cupids hew.

And now the covert brest I clame,
That worshipt Cupide secretlye;
And nourished hys sacred flame,
From whence no blaining sparks do flye.

Description of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Slightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that most part in discord

Our willes do stand, whereby our hartes but seldom do accord:

Doylet is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The simple hartes which he doth strike with froward divers stroke.

He causeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.
Whose gleames of burning fyre and easy sparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From easie ford where I myghte wade and pass full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a deepe dark hell:

And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And wilkes me that my mortal foe I do bescke of Grace;
He lettes me to pursue a conquest welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were lost, ere that my sure begunne.

So by this means I know how soon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to styfle, and so agayne returne.

I know how to content my self in others lust,
Of little stuffe unto my self to weave a webbe of trust:
And how to hyde my harmes with sole dyssembling
there,

When in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.

I know how that the bloud forsakes the face for dred,
And how by shame it staynes agayne the Chekes with flaming red:

I know under the Greene Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the restless forge I wote eke how it workes.

Nº LXXXII.

I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell But ofte the wordes come fourth awrye of hini that loveth well.

I know in heate and colde the Lover how he shakes,
In synging how he doth complayne, in sleeping how he wakes

To languish without ache, sickelasse for to consume,
A thousand thynges for to devyle, resolyunge of his fume;

And though he lyfte to see his Ladyes Grace full fore
Such pleasures as delight hys Eye, do not his helthe restore.

I know to seke the trade of my desired foe,
And ere to fynde that I do seek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers must transourme into the thyng beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with sprite from Lyfe removed.

I knowe in harty fighes and laughers of the spleene,
At once to chaunge my state, my will, and eke my colour clene.

I know how to deceyve my self wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chastised is, by beatyng of the whelpes.

In standyng nere the fyre, I know how that I frease; Farre of I burne, in bothe I waste, and so my Lyfe I lesse.

I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How smalle a nete may take and make a harte of gentle kynde:

Or else with feldom swete to season hepes of gall, Revived with a glympse of Grace old sorrowes to let fall.

The hidden traynes I know, and secret snares of Love,
How soone a loke will prynte a thought that never may remove.

The flypper state I know, the sodein turnes from welthe

The doubtfull hope, the certain woode, and sure despaired helthe.

A praise of his ladie.

GEVE place your ladies and be gone,
Boast not your selves at all,
For here at hande approacheth one,
Whose face will stayne you all.

The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious stone,
I wishe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.

In eche of her two christall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart suffice
To see that lampe of joye.

I think nature hath lost the mouldre,
Where she her shape did take;
Or else I doubtte if nature coule
So fayre a creature make.

She may be well compared

Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whose like was never seene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.

In lyle she is Diana chait
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede stedfast;
What will you more we say:

If all the world were fought so farre,
Who coule finde suche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a starre
Within the frosty night.

The Lover refused of his love, embraceth vertus.

MY youthfull yeres are past,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyle it may not last,
My grave and I am one.

My Myrth and joyes are fled,
And I a Man in wo,
Desirous to be ded,
My misseife to forgo.

THE HISTORY OF THE

I burne and am a colde,
I freeze amyddes the fyre,
I see the doth withholde
That is my honest desyre.

I see my helpe at hande,
I see my lyte also,
I see where the doth stande
That is my deadly foe.

I see how the doth lye,
And yet the wil be bynde,
I see in helping me,
She fikes and will not synde.

I see how the doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I see when I come nye,
How fayne she would be gone.

I see what will ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you shall fee therefore
That she shall have her will.

I cannot live with stones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egyptian astronomer, in the first fight that Alexander had with the Persians.

NOW clattering armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan passe the noys of dreffull trumpets clang,
Shrowded with shafts, the heaven with cloude of darts,
Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
As forsooth kyndled yre the Lyons keene,
Whose greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons against the Persians fere,
Now corpses hyle the purple doyle with blood;
Large slaughter on ech side, but Persis more,
Moyst fieldes bebled, theyr hartes and numbres bate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The liting Macedon by swordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troups of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his merest kyn,
Oxate preserues with horsemen on a plume
Before his cart, that none his charge should give.
Here grunts, here groans, ech where strong youth is spent:

Shaking her bloody hands, Bellone among
The Perles foweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a lance through gryded quyte,
Hym smytes the club, hym woundes larre stryking bowe,
And him the sling, and him the shining sword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he relies.
Right over floods in snowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunning clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celestiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aspect, eclips,
And influence, and constellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty floride, what signe forewarned death,
How winter gendeth snow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
Why summer burnes; why autumn hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrat may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themselves how great Proportion is; what sway the erryng lightes
Doth send in course gayne that lyeth moving heaven;
What greets one from another distant be,
What flarr doth kett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what opposition it akes,
What fyre doth qualifie Mayorsities yre,
What house ech one doth seeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven sphere, nor that small thynges
I speake, whole heaven be cloieth in his brest.
This sage then in the flarrs hath spied the fates
Threatened him death without delay, and, fith,
He saw he could not ffall out of change,
Foreward he prest in battayle, that he might Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
The boldest burne, and worthiest in the feilde;

And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And feking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
Comes desperately to Alexanders face,
At him with darts one after other throwes,
With recklesse wordes and clamour him provokes,
And sayth, Nestanaks bastard shamefull stayne
Of mothers bed, why lovest thou thy strokes,
Cowardes among. Turn thee to me, in case
Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learnings laude,
And eke for martiall praise, that in my shield
The seven fold Sophie of Minerve contain,
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince moved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with soft words ayen,
O monstrous man (quoth he) what fo thou art,
I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muses mansion spore;
That treasure house this hand shall never spoyl,
My sword shall never bruite that skillful brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of science fone to spill;
O how layre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wifdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiser and the better prove:

What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perswades to be downe, sent to depe Avene,
Where no artes flourish, nor no knowledge vailes
For all these fawes. When thus the sovereign said,
Alighted Zoroas with sword unsheathed,
The careles king there fmoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quishes wounded him,
So that the blood downe trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gashe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wile
Hym to forbear, sett spurs unto his stede,
And turnde away, left anger of his smarte
Should cause revenger hand deale balefull blowes,
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this sight,
But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of foulidours sterne,
And all in pieces hewed the fely feg,
But happily the soule fled to the flarrs,
Where, under him, he hath full fight of all,
Wherewith he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Persians waild such sapience to torgoe,
The very fone the Macedonians wisht
He would have lived, king Alexander selfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
Who womne like praise for conquest of his Yre,
As for floute men in field that day subdued,
Who princes taught how to discern a man,
That in his head fo rare a jewel beares,
But over all those fame Camenes, those fame,
Divine Camenes, whose honour he procurede,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thanks, all that they can,
Do cherish hym decaft, and sett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barley wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fools, of which the following extract will shew his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and false Accusers.

O Heartless foolles, haste here to our doctrine,
Leave off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to incline,
For here shall I shewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde shall great prosperitie,
Ensuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour wright great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manifold
Which are in vertue, shall finde auancement:
Wherfore ye foolles that in your linne are bolde,
Enfue ye wisdom, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wifdome is the way of men most excellent:
Therefore haue done, and shortly spece your pace,
To quoynt your self and company with grace.

Learne

Learn what is vertue, therein is great solace,
 Learn what is truth, fadnes and prudence,
 Let grutch be gone, and grautie purchase,
 Forlake your lolly and inconuenience,
 Cease to be fooles, and ay to fue offence,
 Followe ye vertue, chiefe route of godlynes,
 For it and wisdom is ground of clenlynes.

Wifedome and vertue two things are doubtles,
 Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
 But such heartes as slope in foolishnes
 Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
 But in this litle barge in principall
 All foolish mockers I purpose to reпре,
 Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.

Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleue,
 With a rough comb here will I clawe and grate,
 To proue it they will from their vice reueue,
 And leaue their lolly, which causeth great debate:
 Suche cayties spare neyther poore man nor estate,
 And where their life is moste worthy derision,
 Other men to scorne is all their most condition.

Yet are mo fooles of this abusyon,
 Whiche of wile men despight the doctrine,
 With mowes mockes, scorne, and collusion,
 Rewarding rebukes for their good discipline:
 Shewe to suche widsome, yet shall they not encline
 Unto the same, but set nothing thereby,
 But mucke thy doctrine, still or openly.

So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
 That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
 A mocke or mowe shall he haue by and by:
 Thus in derision haue foolers their speciall game.
 Corred a wile man that would elchue ill name,
 And sayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,
 And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.

If by misfortune a rightwile man offende,
 He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
 And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
 Him selfe putting mekely unto subiection,
 Following his preceptes and good direccion:
 But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
 He shall his teacher hate, slander and diffame.

Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own shame,
 And his owne daries retourne to him agayne,
 And so is he fore wounded with the same,
 And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
 It also proued full oten is certayne,
 That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,
 Shall of all other be mocked at the last.

He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
 May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
 And he that is white may well his scornes cast,
 Agaynst a man of Inle: but no man ought to blame
 Another vice, while he vseth the same.
 But who that of sinne is cleane in dede and thought,
 May him well scorne whose liuing is starke noucht.
 The scornes of Naball full dere should haue been bought,
 If Abigail his wife discrete and sage,
 Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes fought,
 The wrath of Dauid to temper and asswage.
 Hath not two beares in their fury and rage

Two and fortie children rent and torne,
 For they the prophete Helyseus did scorne.

So might they curse the time that they were borne,
 For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
 So many other of this sort often mourne
 For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
 Thus is it folly for wile men to encline,
 To this lewde flocke of foolers, for see thou shall
 Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the foolers.

Ye mocking foolers that in scorne set your ioy,
 Proudly despising Gods punitioun;
 Take ye example by Cham the sonne of Noy,
 Which laughed his father vnto derision,
 Which him alter cursed for his transgression,
 And made him seruauit to all his lyne and stocke.
 So shall ye caytiffs at the conclusion,
 Since ye are nought, and other scorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Walsou, a man celebrated for the politenes of his style, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to shew.

PRONUNCIATION is an apte orderinge borthe of the voyce, countenance, and all the whole bodye, accordyng to the worthines of suche wordes and mater as by speache are declared. The vie hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue prayse for tellyng his tale in open assemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comely countenance, he shal be thought to passe all other that haue the like viterance: though they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundyng lute muche setteth forth a meane deuised ballade. Or as the sounde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, so a cleare soundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche swete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therefore, that famous orator, beyng asked what was the chiefe point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation; being demanded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made answer, Pronunciation, and would make none other answer, till they leste askyng, declaying hereby that arte without viterance can dooe nothyng, vterallince without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubt that man is in outwarde appaurance halie a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gesture of his body. Aeschines lykwyse beyng bannished his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes answer thereunto, by force whereof he was bannished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same: then (quod Aeschines) you would haue marueiled muche more if you had heard myselfe speak it. Thus beyng call in miserie and bannished for euer, he could not but geue such greate reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

Thus haue I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its progress may be easily traced, and the gradations observed, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scene; or short, as in cellar, separate, celebrate, men, thin.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, relent, midlar, repulse, strepent, cellar, cassation, blessing, sell, selling, debt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, ledge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bán, báne; cán, cáne; pín, píne; tún, tíne; rób, róbe; pép, pépe; fír, fíre; cúr, cúre; túb, túbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, years, avalanche, aviliness; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, se-le, know-ed. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glóve, líve, gíve.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, soopen, shooten, thistle, participle, maíre, lucre.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as diagn, receive; and with u or u, as new, few.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agréé, sleeping.

Ea is found in yeomen, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fine; and short, as fin.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thin, ibine.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as flirt, first, flirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as frind.

I is joined with ea in live, and ew in view; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bône, obedient, corroding; or short, as black, knock, oblique, roll.

Women is pronounced wímen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as few, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as acromy; but oe being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are founded, with only e, acromy.

With i, as oil, foil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boat, boat, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or u, as cur, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowel, few, grove. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head; sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed; bowel, an orbicular body; bowel, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honor, labor, favor, from onor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of u nor or, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, favor.

U.

U is long in use, confession; or short, as us, concession.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the u consonant, as quest, quit, quite, language. It sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guish, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French; as prerogative, consequence, usage, usage, usage.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, betray, betrayed, betrayed; pray, prayer; say, sayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel f, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as flag, frog.

OF CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, blumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brewn.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centric, century, circular, cistern, city, scicity; before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, conspicience.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as fact from facis, captiv from captivus.

Cb has a sound which is analysed into tsb, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerra.

Cb is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, cholera. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like sch, sch, sch.

C, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write fish, black, which were originally fisch, blak, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, craft.

Is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, drift; and u, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the semi-vowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously founded before a liquid, as flag, fly, freckle. It has an unvaried sound, except that of f is sometimes spoken nearly as vv.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At

ENGLISH TONGUE.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, snug, song, frag.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

Before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geist, get, generous, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stranger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnash, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantic, gibbet, gibe, giblets, gilet, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, gipsy.

G in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, fought, spoken tho', rite, foute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, laugh, tough, enough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant, deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before k, l, and r.

H.

It is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, as bat, horse.

It seldom, perhaps never, begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hostler, honour, humble, hush, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, skeptical, for so it should be written, not septic.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound.

K is never doubled; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as clickle, pickle.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kill, will, full. These words were originally written kilte, wille, fulle; and when the r still grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, cowl, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxon, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlif, a loaf, or bread; hlispan, a leech; but this pronunciation is now disused.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and i, as tempt.

Ph is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cw, as quadrant, queen, equisrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes founded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons often used to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rb is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, caraboeus, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, sepulchre.

S.

S has a hissing sound, as fibilation, sifter.

A single s seldom ends any word, except the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, fishes, dresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, and the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus, the close being always either in ss, as base, base, or in ss, as grass, dress, kiss, list, anciently, grass, dress.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as treas, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before c mute, as refuse, and before y final, as refy; and in those words, beside, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, present, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of s, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except t and z, in which s is comprised, z being only ts, and z a hard or gross s. This s is therefore termed by grammarians sue potestatis littera, the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages.

*S*imus, scater, slegen, straciels, stricillars, spise, srombers, seranars, shaks, slumber, snall, strife, spais, spindlers, spings, squacs, shrew, slip, strezth, strames, suentors, fused.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

T before a vowel has the sound of f, as salutation, except an s goes before, as question, excepting likewise derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, these, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be resolved into uater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as freshly winter.

Wb has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hw, hwa, as what, whence, whiting; in whereonly, and sometimes in wherefore, wab is founded like a simple b.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axe, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a consonant.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of o, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rofy youth.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the found, as its name izzard or hard expresses, of an f uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froz.

In orthography I have supposed orthog, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curious and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The curious pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskillfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the curious speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every found may have its own character, and every character a single found. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless; or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terror to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. I had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus.

At length Erasmus, that great injurd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemmd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

At length Erasmus, that great injured name,
As glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemmed the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove the holy Vandals off the stage.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.
Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villanous despite,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than so dishonourably,
Deem of her high desert, or seem to fight.
Fair death it is to thum more shame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love dishonourably.

But if to love dishonourably it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from death's door
Me brought? ah! I far be such reproach from me.
What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villanous despite,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light,
Die, rather die, than so dishonourably,
Deem of her high desert, or seem to fight.
Fair death it is to run more shame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

But if to love dishonourably it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from death's door
Me brought? ah! I far be such reproach from me.
What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessor, for he printed his book according to his own scheme; which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whenever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a pariahood, made of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the unclean parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and an half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sewed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set an other piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

—All the eth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier days.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is so to be written thus:

Yer Father heith art in heven, hallowd be thy name, thy kingdom cym, thy will bi thy eth as it is in heven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the preter-tense, sais for says, repute for reproach, expains for explain, or declams for declame. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as horse, horfes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. It was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a sword, that is, for one of those that are men than man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army. In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immodestly do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister.

Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the famousst
Of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Milton.

Inventive, by Aycham.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

Aycham.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortal poisons practised by the West-Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man.

Bacon.

Natural, by Hutten.

I shall now deliver a few of the properst and *natural*st considerations that belong to this piece.

Hutten.

Wretched, by Johnson.

The wretched are the contenters of all helps; such as presuming on their own natural, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things.

Ben Johnson.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath *powerful*st to send Against us from about his throne.

Milton.

The termination in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish; or having a little taste of salt: they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

OF PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he,
with their plurals we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that,
other, another, the same.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	} Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	} Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	} Applied to neutrals or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it is the practice of ancient writers was to use he,
and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from he, his, from she, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes.

Our, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as These are our books. These books are ours.
Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.
Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as
This book is ours. These books are ours.

His and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine amiable lute; which though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry; they are used as ours and yours, when they are referred to a substantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the possessives likewise of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whosoever, whosoever, whatsoever.

	Sing. and Plur.		Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Who	Nom.	Which
Gen.	Whose	Gen.	Of which, or whose
Other oblique cases.	Whom	Other oblique cases.	Which

Who is now used in relation to persons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded.

Whoso is rather the poetical than regular genitive of whoso;

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoso mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Milton.

Whosoever is only used in the nominative and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly as one of two, as, Whether if thou is left I know not. Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all cases,	This	These
	That	Those
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not used but when it is referred to a substantive preceding, as I have just other surges. I have not just the same surges, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, herein, herely, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, wherewith, wherewith, wherewith, wherewith, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that,
in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own band, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as, I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own band, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, them- selves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, is supposed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his, self, it, self, their, selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say, He came himself;
Himself shall do this; where himself cannot be an accusative.

OF THE VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I language. The neutrals are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action, may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neutrals, as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and simple preterite; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense.

Sing. I have, thou hast, he hath or has;

Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hast, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had, thou hadst, he had;

Plur. We had, ye had, they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had, thou hast had, he has had;

Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

E N G L I S H T O N G U E.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had, thou hadst had, he had had;
Plur. We had had, ye had had, they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, thou shalt have, he shall have.
Plur. We shall have, ye shall have, they shall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have, thou wilt have, he will have;
Plur. We will have, ye will have, they will have.

By reading these future tenses may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have or have thou, let him have;
Plur. Let us have, have or have ye, let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

Sing. I have, thou have, be have;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Preterite simple as in the Indicative.

Sing. I have had, thou have had, be have had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had, thou shalt have had, be shall have had;
Plur. We shall have had, ye shall have had, they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present; and might, could, or should, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have, thou mayst have, be may have;
Plur. We may have, ye may have, they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have, thou mightst have, be might have;
Plur. We might have, ye might have, they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have, thou canst have, be can have;
Plur. We can have, ye can have, they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have, thou couldst have, be could have;
Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.

In like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double Preterite.

Sing. I should have had, thou shouldst have had, be should have had;
Plur. We should have had, ye should have had, they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have. Preterite. To have had.

Participle present. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To Love.

Indicative.

Sing. I love, thou lovest, be loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved, thou lovedst, be loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.

Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.

Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;
Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love, thou love, be love;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c.

Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.

Preterite. I might, could, or should love, &c.

Double Pret. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love. Preterite. To have loved.

Participle present. Loving. Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative.

Sing. I am, thou art, be is;

Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite.

Sing. I was, thou wast or wert, be was;

Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Writ is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.

Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;

Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be, thou beest, be be;

Plur. We be, ye be, they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were, thou wert, be were;

Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be. Preterite. To have been;

Participle pres. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved. Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do, thou dost, be doth;

Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did, thou didst, be did;

Plur. We did, ye did, they did.

Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.

Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou, let him do;

Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do, thou do, be do;

Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

The rest are as in the indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.

Participle pres. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

Of DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errors.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to strike, I struck or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, fighting, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs; in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened; as, a house, to house; brafs, to braze; glafs, to glaze; grafs, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, heart-y; a hand, bandy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree; as, delight, delightsome; game, gamesome; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; kind, kindsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as, worthless, useless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sad, sable.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin ; as, pleasant, unpleasant ; wife, unwife ; profitable, unprofitable ; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful and many more.

The original English privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as impious, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and im have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, unthought, unbelieving.

U is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unloving, unaided, undivided, unadorned.

Us ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark forbearance of action, as unfiguring; but a privation of habit, as unthinking.

It is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as infertileness, imperfectness, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or on, as infertility, imperfectum; anciently, inimicily; analysis, emancipation.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecenty, arrogant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix an, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un and me; dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; to honour, dis honour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdain; chance, hap, mischance.

N^o XXXIII.

misbap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification ; as, beautiful, beautifully ; sweet, sweetly ; that is, in a beautiful manner ; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolfish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a billock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, a pickrel; this is a French termination: a goose, a gosling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a ebicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the found itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and this sometimes not so much by the change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, top, sip, sop, fop, fipper, where, besides the extension of the vowel, there is added the French termination c: top, nip, spit, spout; babe, baby, bobby, bawm; great pronounced long, especially if with a stronger found, great; little pronounced long, le-ti-tle; ring, rang, rung, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jungle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or bead, noting character or qualities ; as, white whiteness ; hard, hardness ; great, greatness ; skilful skilfulness, unskilful unskilfulness ; godbead, manhood, maidenbead, widowbead, knighthood, priesthood, likeness, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination ib, a small change being sometimes made; as, long, lengthib; strong, strengthib; broad, wide, breadthib; deep, depthib; true, truthib; warm, warmthib; dear, dearthis; slow, slownib; merry, mirthib; heal, healthis; well, wellthib; dry, droughtib; young, youthib; and so moon, moonib.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy, dearb; till, tiltb; grow, growth; mow, later mowit after mowib; commonly spoken and written later mat after matb; steal, stealtb; bear, birth; ruc, rutb; and probably earb from to ear or plew; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, drawbt.

These should rather be written flightb, frightb, only that custom prevails. left b should be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, flight, wraith, scrath, broth, first, breath, faith, wraith, light, weight, and the like, whole primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fig or foi, spry, wry, wasak, brew, moor, fy, brez, lag, woor.

Some ending in ship imply an office, employment or condition ; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, beadship, lordship.

Thus aworship, that is, worship; whence aworshipful, to aworship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as, kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, wobredom, bishoprick, bailiwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French as, commandment, usage.

[illegible]

These are synonyms somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dam; as the French homme, femme, not; from homine, femina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; uñguis, net; uñguis, can; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precors, pry; paeda, pry; speco, speculor, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, re- sex; comulco, comuly; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as, amita, aumt; spintus, spirgit; debitum, dicit; debito, dicit; comes, comitis, comit; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quites; acquiesco, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabula, stable; stabulum, stab; callacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, ravel, raval, brand, rail, brood; quæstio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable; roundness, round; fragility, fragil; fecuracy, fecur; regularity, regula; ziti; subtilis, subtle; women, wom; decacious, dec; computo, com; subitaneus, subd; fudden, f; superare, to fear; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as, magnus, main; dignos, deign; uno, spin; caelum, tain; pingo, paint; praedari, reach.

[illegible]

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body; as, Alexander, Eliza, Sander, Sander, Sandy, Sonny; Elizabeth, Elizabeth, Elsiebeth, Betty, Betsy; Margaret, Margaret, Margat, Meg, Piz; Maria, Mary, Mai, Pal, Alakin, Alawkin, Marcher; Mimmiu, Matrua, Matruwa; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulchimus, Wilhelms, Giraldus, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wilkin, Wicki, Wicks.

Thus caryophyllus, flos, geracifol, latin, giraffae, giraffes, Fr. giraffe, hence, which the vulgar call giraffes, as if derived from the month July; petrocolumin, parly, for parula, parulina; cydonium, quyer, cydonium, quidley; perlicum, perla; craca, crack, which they corrupt to crack, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus gemmae, a gemmal or gemmal-ring; and thus the word gemmal and phala is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quercus chale, highfaur. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any that the same may have thus disguised many, especially such as affect most fancifulness, and to make the tongue the fatter, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonic languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The fame words, according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as, to beard, a bardeen, from fer; to beare, whence fish, bore, baire, comes from paros; and a bear, at least if it be of Latin original, from fer. Thus perch, a fish, from paros; but perch, a measure, from pericia, and likewise to perch. To spell is from philo; but spell, an enchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands, that none can pass them against the master's will, from expell; and spell, a messenger, from epipell; whence gip, gad-pel, or god-pel. Thus frede, or freence, from fer; fre, but freace, an archaetologic word, from apfer; but fer, ferre, but ferre.

for clerk, from Felice, or perhaps from frigida, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

[illegible]

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonic; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

S Y N T A X.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted it; and Johnson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned language made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person ; as, Thou fliest from good ; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case : He gave this to me ; He took this from me ; He says this of me ; He came with me.

P R O S O D Y.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Evematti; that of the French by Dominzani; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnson though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Profody comprises orthoepey, or the rules of pronunciation : and arithmetry, or the laws of verification.

PRONUN

A G R A M M A R O F T H E

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of dissyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as, childish, kingdom, delect, delict, tailsome, lover, scoffer, fairer, foremost, zealous, sinners, godly, mickly, artist.

2. Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begot, to beset, to beset.

3. Of dissyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to descend, a descent; to cement, a cement; to contract, a contract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perjume.

4. All dissyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labours, favour; in ow, as willow, swallow, except allow; in le, as battle, bible; in ish, as banish; in ck, as cambrick, cassock; in ter, as to batter; in age, as courage; in en, as fasten; in et, as quiet, accent the former syllable.

5. Dissyllable nouns in er, as canter, latter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escape; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appease, revail; or ending in two consonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Dissyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applause; except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as loveliness, tenderness, continuer, waggoner, physicist, bespatter, commencing, commending, assurance.

9. Trissyllables ending in ous, as gracious, arduous; in al, as capital; in ion, as mention, accent the first.

10. Trissyllables ending in ee, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as countenance, continence, armament, imminent, elegant, propagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connivence, acquaintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promiscuate.

11. Trissyllables ending in y, as entity, specify, liberty, victory, falsify, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trissyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as legible, theatre, except disciple, and some words which have a position, as exemplar, epistle.

13. Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plenitude.

14. Trissyllables ending in ator or atour, as créateur, or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endeavour; or a vowel before two consonants, as domestic, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiesce, reporter, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, continency, incontinently, commendable, communicableness.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvation, perturbation, conciliation; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicator.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as amiable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as commensurable.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxorious, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as pusillanimity, astuteness.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alight, create; or trochaick, as body, lofty.

Our iambick measure comprises verses

Of four syllables,

Most good, most fair,

Or things as rare,

To call you'st lost;

For all the cost

Words can bestow,

So poorly show

Upon your praise,

That all the ways

Sense hath, come short.

Drayton.

With ravish'd ears

The monarch hears.

Dryden.

Of six,

This while we are abroad,

Shall we not touch our lyre?

Shall we not sing an ode?

Shall that holy fire,

In us that strongly glow'd,

In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost peak

A while we do remain,

Amongst the mountains bleak,

Expos'd to fleet and rain,

No sport our hours shall break,

To exercise our vein.

Who though bright Phœbus' beams

Refresh the southern ground,

And though the princely Thames

With beauteous nymphs abound,

And by old Camber's streams

Be many wonders found;

Yet many rivers clear

Here glide in silver swatches,

And what of all most dear,

Buxton's delicious baths,

Strong ale and noble cheer,

T' allwise breed winter's scathes.

In places far or near,

Or famous, or obscure,

Where wholesom is the air,

Or where the most importune,

All times, and every where,

The muse is still in ure.

Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure for short poems,

And may at last my weary age

Find out the peaceful hermitage,

The hairy gown, and mossy cell,

Where I may fit, and nightly spell

Of ev'ry star the fky doth shew,

And ev'ry herb that sips the dew.

Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroic and tragick poetry.

Full in the midst of this created space,

Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place

Confining on all three; with triple bound;

Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,

And thither bring their undulating sound.

The palace of loud Fame, her feat of pow'r,

Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r;

A thousand winding entries long and wide

Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.

A thousand crannies in the walls are made ;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
'Tis built of brais, the better to diffuse
The spreading sounds, and multiply the news ;
Where echo's in repeated echo's play :
A mart for ever full ; and open night and day.
Nor silence is within, nor voice express'd,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease ;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore ;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crouds, or issuing forth, or entering in :
A thorough-fare of news ; where some devise Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies :
The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables ; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

Here we may Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath :
Other joys
Are but toys.

Of five,

In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy.

Of seven,

Fairest piece of wellform'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth.

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest sink of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolupon.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,
And forth'll survey their soils with an ambitious eye, Merrins for her hills, as for their matchless crouds,
The nearest that are said to kiss the wadding clouds,
Espeal audience craves, offended with the throng,
That she of all the rest neglected was so long ;
Alledging for herself, when through the Saxons pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting tide
Were cruelly insur'd, her mountains did relieve Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still the only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for peculiar things ;
So only she is rich, in mountains, meves, and springs,
And holds herself as great in her superluous waste,
As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The verse of twelve lines, called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroic lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full-rebounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyric measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to see.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute swifty,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as Diogenes furly and prodd.

I think not of I'ris, nor I'is of me.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroic measure.

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.

So in that of eight syllables,

They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded.

In that of seven,

For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done.
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast achiev'd with six alone.

In that of six,

'Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blast of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclind.

In the anapestick,

When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But fruitful industry flers right.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalæpha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal ; and more rarely of o in to, as I accept ; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special ; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as ev'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last inefficual.

A, The first letter of the European alphabets, has, in the English language, three different sounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound, resembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monosyllables, as all, wall, male, fall; in which a is pronounced as au in cause, or aw in law. Many of these words were anciently written with au, as faul, wauld; which happens to be still retained in fault. This was probably the ancient sound of the Saxons, since it is almost uniformly preserved in the rustic pronunciation, and the northern dialects, as maun for man, bound for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obscurely in fanny, foffy, &c.

A slender or close, is the peculiar a of the English language, resembling the found of the French a masculine, or diphthong ai in pair, or perhaps a middle found between them, or between the a and e; to this the Arabic a is said nearly to approach. Of this found we have examples in the words place, face, twice, and all those that terminate in ation, as, relation, nation, generation.

A short, as, glafs, grafs; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane, or by an i added, as, plain.

A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way; that is, any man. This article has no plural signification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

A sometimes a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is considered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. It also seems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local furnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other cases, it seems to signify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloe went. Prior.

Ther go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryd.

May pure contents for ever pitch their tents

Upon these downs, these meads, these rocks, these mountains.

And peace fill slumber by these purling fountains!

Which we may every year.

Find when we come a fishing here. Hutton.

Now the men tell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain silent in the magazines of munition are viewed; the officers of remains called to account. Hutton.

Another falls a rising a Pelencenis Niger, and judiciously distinguishes the found of it to be modern. Adlym in recitall.

A has a peculiar signification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we say, The landlord hath a hundred a year. The ship's crew gained a thousand pounds a man.

The river Inn, that had been hitherto short up among mountains, passes generally through a wide open country, during all its course through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Adden on Italy.

A is used in burlesque poetry to lengthen out a syllable, without adding to the sense.

Vol. I.

For cloves and nutmegs to the line-a,
And even for oranges to China. Dryden.

A is sometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for be.

A, in composition, seems to have sometimes the power of the French a in these phrases, a drait, a gauche, &c. and sometimes to be contracted from at; as, afide, aflope, afest, afleep, atireff, aware.

If this, which he avouches, does appear,
There is no flying hence, nor tarrying here.

I gin to be a weary of the sun;
And with the state of the world were now undone.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

And now a breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.

Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyon.

A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, awake; the same with rise, rouse, wake.

A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. bachelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. master of arts, artium magister; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally shews that they have some relation to an abbey.

ABA'CKE, adv. Backwards. Obsolete.

But when they came where thou thy skill didst show,
They drew aback, as half with shame confound,
Shepherds to see them in their art outgo. Spens. Poff.

ABACTOR, n. f. [Lat. abactor, a driver away.] Those who drive away or steal cattle in herds, or great numbers at once, in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two. Blount.

ABACUS, n. f. [Lat.]

1. A counting-table, anciently used in calculations.

2. In architecture, it is the uppermost member of a column, which serves as a sort of crowning both to the capital and column. Ditt.

ABA'T, adv. [of abactran, Sax. behind.] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern. Ditt.

ABAI'SANCE, n. f. [from the French abaisser, to depress, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obviance is considered by Skinner as a corruption of abaisance, but is now universally used.

TO ABALIENATE, v. a. [from abalienus, Lat.] To make that another's which was our own before. Caiv. Lex. Jur.

A term of the civil law, not much used in common speech.

ABALINATION, n. f. [abalietatis, Lat.] A giving up one's right to another person; or a making over an estate, goods, or chattels by sale, or due course of law. Ditt.

TO ABANDON, v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in use. See ABANDON.] To forsake.

These foreigners which come from far
Grew great, and got large portions of land,
That in the realm, ere long, they stronger are;
Than they which sought at first their helping hand,
And Vaujour enforced the kingdom to aband.

Shen's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.

TO ABANDON, v. a. [abandonner, Fr. Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandannare, which signifies to forsake his colours; from the Spanish abandannar, to desert. Puysier thinks it a coalition of a ban dinner, to give up to a proscscription; in which sense we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, signifies a curse; and to abandon, if considered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris deo.

1. To give up, resign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.
The passive gods belid the Greeks desire
Their temples, and abandon to the spoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conspire
To save a sinking town, invol'd in fire. Dryd. Enid.

2. To desert.
The princes using the passions of searing evil, and desiring to escape, only to serve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's self, least to a rib of the ship. Sidney, b. ii.

Then being alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakep. As you like it.

3. To forsake, generally with a tendency to an ill issue.
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends. Dryd. En. 2.

When he in presence came, to Guyon first
He boldly spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this fortified place at once,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. stanza. 39.

- But to the parting goddess thus she pray'd;
Propitious still be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once favour'd maid. Dryd. Fab.

TO ABANDON OVER, v. a. [a form of writing not usual, perhaps not exact.] To give up to, to resign.
Look on me as a man abandon'd & c.
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but disturb the quiet of my death. Dryd. Sp. Friar.

ABANDONED, particip. adj.

1. Given up.
If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Who is he so abandoned to satiate credulity, as to think, upon that principle, that a cloud of earth in a sack, may ever,
by eternal shaking, receive the fabric of man's body?
Emely's Sermon.

Must he, whose alters on the Phrygian shore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be down'd the wail of human life to prove,
Unbeli'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?

Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 80.

2. Forsaken, deserted.
3. Corrupted in the highest degree. In this sense, it is a contraction of a longer term, abandoned [given up] to wickedness.

ABANDONING. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Desertion, forsaking.

He hoped his past meritorious actions might outweigh his present, abandoning the thought of future action. Clarendon, b. viii.

ABANDONMENT, n. f. [from abandonment, Fr.]

1. The act of abandoning.
2. The state of being abandoned. Di. 2.
- ABANDONMENT, n. f.* [from abandonment, Lat.] A banishment for one or two years, among the ancients, for manslaughter. Di. 2.
- ABANDONMENT, n. f.* Initiableness. Di. 2.
- TO ABARE, v. a.* [abapian, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose. Di. 2.

ABARTICULATION, n. f. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt constitution of the bones, by which they move strongly and easily; or that species of articulation that has manifest motion.

TO APASE, v. a. [also ap, Fr. from the Lat. hastis, or hastis, a barbarous word, signifying low, base.] To cast down, to depress, to bring low, almost always in a figurative and personal sense.

Happy shepherd, with thanks to the gods, still think to be thankful, t. at thy advancement their widows have three apased. Sidney, b. i.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And, not regarding difference of degree,
Disd'ns your daughters, and exalted me. Dryd. Fables.

Behold every one that is proud, and apashim. Job, xl. 11.
If the mud be curbed and humbled too much in children;
If their spirits be apased and broken much by too strict a hand over them; they lose all their vigour and industry, and are in a worse state than the former. Locke on Education, § 46.

ABASED, a. f. [with bas,] is a term used of the wings of eagles, when the top look downwards towards the point of the shield, or when the wings are shut; the natural way of beating them being spread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Baile's Chambers.

ABASEMENT, n. f. The state of being brought low; the act of bringing low; deprelation.

There is an abasement because of glory; and there is that lieth up his head from a low estate. Ecclesiasticus, xx. 11.
TO ABASH, v. a. [See BASHFUL.] To put into confusion; to make ashamed. It generally implies a sudden impression of shame.

They heard, and were abashed, and up they sprung Upon the wing. Alfred's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 331.

This heard, th' imperious queen fast mute with fear;
Nor further durst incense the gloomy thunder.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abashed, disdain their foreign's look. Dryden's Fables.

The passive admits the particle at, sometimes of, before the causal noun.

In no wife speak against the truth, but be abashed of the error of thy ignorance. Ecclesiasticus, iv. 25.

I said unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not stolen? Render it to the owners, for it is not lawful to eat any thing that is stolen. But she replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages; however, I did not believe her, but bad her render it to the owners; and I was abashed at her. Job, ii. 13, 14.

The little Cupids hovering round,
[As pictures prove] with gaudious crown'd,
Abashed at what they saw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd. Swift's Miscellanies.

TO ABATE, v. a. [from the French abatre, to beat down.]

1. To lessen, to diminish.
Who can tell whether the divine wisdom, to abate the glory of those kings, did not reserve this work to be done by a queen, that it might appear to be his own immediate work? Sir J. In Dunes on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeaseure. Shakep. A Merchant of Venice.

Here we see the hopes of great benefit and light from expositors and commentators are in a great part abated; and those who have most need of your help, can receive but little from them, and can have very little assistance of reaching the Apostle's sense, by what they find in them. Lock's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

TO ABATE, or depress the mind.

This iron world (the same he weeping says)
Brings down the stoutest hearts to low estate;
For murther hath brutal minds abate. Spens. Halles's Tale.

— — — Have they power still
To banish your delinquency till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives to some nation
That won you without blow? Shakep. Cressida.

I time that changes all, yet changes us in vain,
The body, not the mind; nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the soul. Dryden's Enid.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in selling, sometimes to beat down the price in buying.

TO ABATE, v. n. To grow low; as, his passion abates; the storm abates. It is used sometimes with the particle of before the thing lessened.

Our physicians have observed, that, in process of time, some diseases have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner, worn out their malignity, so as to be no longer mortal. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

TO ABATE, [in common law.]

It is in law used both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a cattle, to beat it down. To abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A stranger abates, that is, enters into upon a house or land void by the death of him that last possessed it, before the heir take his possession, and to keep him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in possession, is said to disseise; so he that sleeps in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. In the latter signification thus; The writ of the demandant shall abate, that is, it shall be disabled, frustrated, or overthrown. The appeal abates by covin, that is, that the accusation is defeated by deceit. Card.

TO ABATE, [in horsemanship.] A puer is said to abate or take down his curves, when working upon curves, he puts his two hind-legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times. Dut.

ABATEMENT, n. f. [from abate, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or lessening.

The law abates them, in fact, is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatment; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every title. Locke.

2. The state of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of oil exhales in roasting to the abatement of more one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contains about ten thousand kind houses, and allowing one man to every house, who could have any there in the government, (the rest, consisting of women, children and servants) and making other obvious abatements, these tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective.

Swift on the Sentiments in Athens and Rome.

4. The cause of abating; extenuation.

At our advantages towards praeclaring and promoting piety and virtue were greater than those of other men; so will our excuse be less, if we neglect to make use of them. We cannot plead, in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepossession of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education.

Atterbury's Sermons.

5. ABATIMANT. [In law.]

The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affliction or passion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ. Cowel.

ABATIMENT [with heralds] is an accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abated, by reason of some stain or dishonourable quality of the bearer. Ditt.

ABATLER. n. f. The agent or cause by which an abatement is procured.

Metaphors of acrimony or sharpness: expressed out of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of such; as of almonds, pistachios, and other nuts. Abatant on diet.

ABATOR. n. f. [a law-term.] One who intrudes into houses or land, that is void by the death of the former possessor, as yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Ditt.

ABATIDE. n. f. [old records.] Any thing diminished. Bailey.

ABATURE. n. f. [a hunting term.] Those sprigs of grass which are thrown down by a flag in his passing by. Ditt.

ABE. n. f. The yarn or weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

ABBA. n. f. [Heb. 2N.] A Syriac word, which signifies father.

ABBAY. n. f. [abbatia, Lat.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY.

According to Felinus, an abbay is the dignity itself, since an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a secular person, who has the care of souls, is sometimes, in the canon law, also styled an abbot.

Abbay's Peragone Turci Canonici.

ABBEY. n. f. [abbatium, Lat.] from whence the Saxon abbu, then probably abbet, and by contraction abbey in Fr. and abbeys, Eng. The superior or government of a monastery or moniality of women.

They fled

Into this abbey, whither we pursued them;

And here the abbess thrusts the gate on us,

And will not suffer us to fetch him out.

Shakspeare, Comedy of Errors.

I have a sister, abbess in Teraces,

Who lost her lover on her bridal-day. Dryd. D. Scholl.

Constance's heart was so elevated with the discourse of Father Francis, that the very next day she entered upon her vow.

As soon as the solemnities of her reception were over, we retired, as it is usual, with the abbess into her own apartment.

Abbay's Spect. N° 164.

ABBEY, or ABBAY. n. f. [abbatia, Lat.] from whence probably the ABBAY, which see. A monastery of religious persons, whether men or women; distinguished from religious houses of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.

With easy roads he came to Leicester;

Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,

With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

ABBEY-LUBBER. n. f. [See LUBBER.] A foolish loiterer in a religious house, under pretence of retirement and austerities.

This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive looking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

ABBOT. n. f. [in the lower Latin abbas, from 2N father, which sense was implied; so that the abbot was called pater, and abbat pater monasterii.] Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis optime pater, Paternus, gratia.

The chief of a convent, or fellowship of canons. Of these, some in England were mitred, some not; those that were mitred, were exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, having in themselves episcopal authority within their precincts, and being also lords of parliament. The other sort were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. Cowel.

See ABBEY.

ABBEY. See ABBEY.

ABBEYSHIP. n. f. The state or privilege of an abbot. Ditt.

ABBEY-VIATE. v. a. [abbreviare, Lat.]

1. To shorten by contraction of parts without loss of the main substance.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon, Essay 26.

The only invention of late years, which hath any way contributed towards perspicuity in discourse, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many syllables into one, by dropping off the rest.

Swift's Introduction to Gentel Conversation.

2. To shorten, to cut short.

Against this opinion we may very well feel the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and in half this space contracted into hundreds and three scores.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

ABBREVIATION. n. f.

1. The act of abbreviating.

2. The means used to abbreviate, as characters signifying whole words.

Such is the propriety and energy of expression in them all, that they never can be changed, but to disadvantage, except in the circumstance of using abbreviations.

Swift's Introduction to Gentel Conversation.

ABBREVIATOR. n. f. [abbreviator, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

ABBREVIATURE. n. f. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark used for the sake of shortening.

2. A compendium or abridgement.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own suffering; who prays for him, that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who lowers shows mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to subdue the flesh to the spirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a christian.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ABBREVIOPR. [in French, a watering-place. This word is derived by Ménage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adhibere for adhibere; but more probably it comes from the same root with brew. See BREW.] It signifies, among masons, the joint or juncture of two stones, or the interstice between two stones to be filled up with mortar. Ditt.

Old Saturn, here, with upcall eyes,

Beheld his *abdicated*acies.

Abdican.

ABDICATOR. n. f. [abdicator, Lat.] The act of abdicating; resignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the usual or stated expiration.

Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other sort of vacancy in the throne, than would be caused by his death; since he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwise than by his own consent in form to a bill from the two houses. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

ABDICATIVE. adj. That which causes or implies an abdication.

Ditt.

ABDITIVE. adj. [from abds, to hide.] That which has the power or quality of hiding.

Ditt.

ABDOMEN. n. f. [Lat. from abds, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower vent or belly: It contains the stomach, guts, liver, spleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritoneum. The lower part is called the hypogastrium; the foremost part is divided into the epigastrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago transversa and the diaphragm, sideways by the short or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebrae of the lumbi, the bones of the cœxidia, that of the pubes and os sacrum. It is covered with several muscles, from whose alternate relaxations and contractions in respiration, digestion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for secretion and expulsion.

1. The act of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.

2. A particular form of argument.

ABDUCTOR. n. f. [Latin.] The name given by anatomists to the muscles, which serve to draw back the several members.

In pursuance of this theory, he supposed the contractors of the eyelids must be strengthened in the superciliary; the abductor in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the same ready and grave motion of the eye.

disquisitum end Papæ. Giovanni Sordani.

ABCEDEARIAN. n. f. [from the names of a, b, c, the three first letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or first rudiments of literature.

This word is used by Wad in his Abnæ Oxoniensis, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in some part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

ABECEDARY. adj. [See ABCEDEARIAN.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.
2. Incribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the sympathy of two needles touched with the loadstone, and placed in the center of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, described round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.

Brewer's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

ABE'd adv. [from a, for at. See (A) and BED.] In bed.

It was a shame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abe'd: and that, when the was of their age, the trowed, she would have made a handkerchief by that time o' day.

Sidney, b. ii.

She has not been abe'd, but in her chapel

All night devoutly watch'd, and br'd'd the faints

With prayers for her deliverance. Dryd, Span. Friar.

ABERRANCE. n. f. [from aberrare, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an error; a mistake; a false opinion.

Could a man be compell'd to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the crasis of his understanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrance, as now.

Glanville's Scripta Scientifica, c. 16.

ABERRANCY. The fame with ABERRANCE.

They do not only swarm with errors, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he defects his reason, or complies with their aberrancies.

Brewer's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

ABERRANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way.

ABERRATION. n. f. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common track.

And if it be a mistake, it is only so; there is no hetely in such an harmless aberration; at the worst, with the ingenious, the probability of it will render it a lapse of easy pardon.

Glanville's Scripta Scientifica, c. 11.

ABERRING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberrare, Lat.] Wandering, going astray.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were, and others might be, out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.

Brewer's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

TO ABERRUNCATE. v. a. [from averruncare, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly.

Diut.

TO ABET. v. a. [from abere, Sax. signifying to enkindle or animate.] To push forward another, to support him in his designs by connivance, encouragement, or help. It is generally taken, at least by modern writers, in an ill sense; as may be seen in ABETTER.

To abet signifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or set on.

Cruel.

Then shall I soon, quoth he, return again,

As yet that virgin's cause discomfite,

And shortly back return unto this place,

To walk this way in pilgrim's poor citate. Fairy Q. b. i.

A widow who by solemn vows,

Contracted to me, for my spouse,

Combin'd with him to break her word,

And has abetted all. —

Men lay to great weight upon their being of right opinions, and their egerness of abetting them, that they account that the unum necessarium. Decay of Piety.

In the reign of king Charles the first, though that prince was married to a daughter of France, and was personally beloved and esteemed in the French court; it is well known that they abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furnished supplies to the weaker side, till there should be an end put to these fatal divisions.

Adrian's Frecholder, N° 28.

ABETMENT. n. f. The act of abetting.

Diut.

ABETTER. or ABETTOR. n. f. He that abets; the supporter or encourager of another.

You shall be still plain Torrismond with me,

Th' abetter, partner, (if you like the name)

The husband of a tyrant, but no king;

Till you devise that title by your justice.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Whilst this sin of calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth; as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing. Governor of the Tongue.

These and the like considerations, though they may have no influence on the headstrong unuly multitude, ought to sink into the minds of those who are their abettors, and who, if they escape the punishment here due to them, mult very well know, that these several mischiefs will be one day laid to their charge.

Adrian's Frecholder, N° 50.

ABRE'VANCE. n. f. [from the French aboyer, ablatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Discontinuance, is thus used. The right of fee-simple lieth in abre'vance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment, and consideration of the law. The frank tenement of the globe of the parsonage, is in no man during the time that the parsonage is void, but is in abre'vance.

Cruel.

ABREGA'TION. n. f. [abregatio, Lat.] A separation from the flock.

Diut.

TO ABHOR. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to detest to extremity; to loath.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,

Who having seen me in my worster state,

Shunn'd my abhor'd society. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

To whom thus Michael: jully thou abhor'st

That son, who on the quiet face of men

Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue

Rational liberty. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xii. l. 79.

The self-same thing they will abhor

One way, and long another for. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to sling icadales upon the clergy in general; which, besides the disgrace to the reformation, and to religion itself, cast an ignominy upon the kingdom that it doth not deserve.

Swift's on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

ABHORRE'NCE. n. f. [from abhor.]

1. The act of abhorring, detestation.

It draws upon him the just and universal hatred and abhorrence of all men here and there, and finally, subjects him to the wrath of God, and eternal damnation hereafter.

South's Sermon.

2. The disposition to abhor; hatred.

He knew well that even a just and necessary offence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off somewhat from the abhorrence of it, and insensibly dispose them to farther hostilities.

Decay of Piety.

ABHORRENCY. n. f. The fame with ABHORRE'NCE.

The first tendency to any injustice that appears, must be suppressed with a show of wonder and abhorren, in the parents and governors.

Locke on Education, § 110.

ABHORRE'NT. adj. [from abhor.]

1. Struck with abhorrence.

— — — For if the worlds

In worlds inclos'd would on his senses burst,

He would abhorrent turn. Thomson's Summer, l. 310.

2. Contrary to, foreign, inconsistent with. It is used with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be a hypothesis, well worthy rational belief; and yet is it so abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as soon believe Anaxagoras, that snow is black, as him that should affirm it is not white; and if any should in effect assert, that the fire is not formally hot, it would be thought that the heat of his brain had fired him for Amicrya, and that his head were so to madness.

Glanville's Scripta Scient. c. 12.

Why then these foreign thoughts of state employments,

Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?

Poor droning trunants of unprais'd cells,

Bred in the fellowship of beardless boys,

What wonder is it if you know not men?

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

ABHORRER. n. f. [from abhor.] The person that abhors; a hater, detester.

The representatives of the lower clergy were railed at, for disputing the power of the bishops, by the known abhorers of episcopacy, and abused for doing nothing in the convocations, by these very men who wanted to bind up their hands.

Swift's Examiner, N° 21.

ABHORRING. The object of abhorrence. This seems not to be the proper use of the participial noun.

And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

Isaiah, lxvi. 44.

TO ABIDE. v. n. I abide or abide. [from abian, or aubian, Sax.]

1. To dwell in a place, not remove.

Thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, if I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. Gen. xlv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

Shute's Richard III.

3. To remain, not cease or fall.

They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever.

Palm cxav. 1.

4. To continue in the same state.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it shall abide justified. Prov. xix. 23.

Those who apply themselves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the highest heavens, from whence he beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth. Stillingbr. Defence of the Jews on Rom. xlii.

There can be no fludy without time; and the mind must abide and dwell upon things, or be always a stranger to the inside of them. South.

5. It is used with the particle with before a person, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19.

For thy servant vowed a vow, while I abode at Gethur in Syria, saying, if the Lord shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 8.

6. It is used with by before a thing; as, to abide by his testimony; to abide by his own skill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion, to maintain it; to abide by a man, is, to defend or support him. But these forms are something low.

(Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward.

7. ABIDE. v. a.

1. To bear or support, without being conquered or destroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King: at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall have a fair presumption in favour of the truth.

It must be allowed, that they have abide a very rigorous test now for above thirty years, stand yet firm; and the longer and more bravely they are look'd into, the more they are confirmed to this very day. Woodward, Letter i.

2. To bear or suffer.

That chief (rejoind the God) his race derives From Ithaca, and wondrous woes survives; Laertes' son: girt with circumstantial tides He still calamitous constraint abides. Pope's Odyssey. b. iv. l. 750.

3. To bear without aversion; in which sense it is commonly used with a negative.

Thou canst not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyself. Sidney, b. ii.

Though thou didst learn, had that in't, which good natures Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou Deferentially confin'd into this rock. Shakspeare, Tempest.

4. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await; used of things prepared for persons, as well as of persons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous bed, Where many slyful leeches him abide, To save his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. stanza. 17.

While lions war, and battle for their dens, Poor harmless lambs abide their enemy. Shakspeare, Henry VI. Bonds and afflictions abide me. Act. xx. 23.

5. To bear or support the consequences of a thing.

Al me! they little know. How dearly I abide that bane to vain. Milton's Par. Lost.

ABIDE. n. f. [from abide] The person that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in use.

ABIDING. n. f. [from abide.] Continuance; duration. We are strangers before thee and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding. 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is so violently removed, and carried about with such swiftness, as nothing in that place can consist or have abiding. Raleigh's History of the World.

ABJECT. adj. [abjectus, Lat.] Thrown away as of no value.]

1. Mean, or worthless, spoken of persons.

That rebellion Came like itself in base and abject routs, Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage, And countenance'd by boys and beggary. Shakspeare, Henry IV. Honest men, who tell their sovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they shall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with such base and abject flatterers; and are therefore always in danger of being the last in the royal favour. Addison's Whig Examiner.

2. Contemptible, or of no value; used of things.

I was at first, as other beasts that graze The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 57.

3. Without hope or regard; used of condition.

The rarer thy example stands, By how much from the top of wondrous glory, Strongest of mortal men, To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n. Milton's Samson Agonistes.

We see man and woman in the highest innocence and perfection, and in the most abject state of guilt and infirmity. Addison, Spectator, N^o. 273.

Vol. I.

4. Destitute, mean and despicable; used of actions.

To what base ends, and by what abject ways, Are mortals urg'd thro' sacred lust of power? Pope's Essay on Criticism.

The rapine is so abject and profane.

They are taken on trifles, not from gods refrain. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 8.

A'BJECT. n. f. A man without hope; a man whose miseries are irremediable.

But in mine adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceased not. Psalms xxxv. 15.

To A'BJECT. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely used.

ABJECTNESS. n. f. [from abject.] The state of an abject.

He would love at no less rate than death; and, from the supereminent height of glory, stooped and abased himself to the suffrance of the extremest of indignities, and sunk himself to the bottom of abjectness, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJECTION. n. f. [from abject.] Meanness of mind; want of spirit; servility; baseness.

That this should be termed baseness, abjection of mind, or servility, is it credible? Hooker, b. v. § 47.

Now the just medium of this case lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.

A'BJECTLY. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, basely, servilely, contemptibly.

A'BJECTNESS. n. f. [from abject.] The same with abjection; servility, meanness.

Servility and abjectness of humour is implicitly involved in the charge of lying; the condescending to that, being a mark of a disingenuous spirit. Government of the Tongue, § 8.

By humility I mean not the abjection of a base mind; but a prudent care not to over-value ourselves upon any account.

Cress's Cypriologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

AB'ILITY. n. f. [habilitas, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon skill, or riches, or strength, or any other quality.

Of singing thou hast got the reputation, Good Thythis, mine I yield to thy ability; My heart doth seek another estimation. Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may serve To heighten what thou suffer'st, and appease Thy mind with what amends is in my power. Milton's Samson Agonistes, l. 744.

They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work. Ezra ii. 69.

If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

2. Capacity.

Children in whom there was no blemish, but well-favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently signifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and sometimes the force of understanding given by nature, as distinguished from acquired qualifications.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he assures us of the assistance of his holy spirit. Rogers's Sermons.

Whether it may be thought necessary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call parishes, there should be one man, at least, of abilities to read and write?

Swift's Arguments against abolishing Christianity.

ABINTESTATE. adj. [of ab, from, and intestatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To A'BJUGATE. v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke, to un-couple. Ditt.

To A'BJURE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To call off upon oath, to swear not to do something.

Either to die the death, or to abjure

For ever the society of man. Shakspeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reason, and sworn allegiance to a preconceived fantastical hypothesis, can undertake the defence of such a supposition.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. To retract, or recant, or anathematize, a position upon oath.

ABJURA'TION. n. f. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the usual trial of law, but confessing his fault to the justices, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forsake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are some abjurations still in force among us here in England; as, by the statute of the 25th of king Charles II. all persons that are admitted into any office, civil or military, mult take the left : which is an abjuratio of some doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewise another oath of abjuration, which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take ; and that is, to abjure the Pretender.

Abjurer's Pardon Juris Canonici.
To ABLACATE. v. a. [ablatio, Lat.] To wean from the breast.

ABLACTION. n. f. One of the methods of grafting ; and, according to the signification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother stock, not cutting it off wholly from the stock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEATION. n. f. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The art or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring ; prepare also soil, and use it where you have occasion : Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaqueatio is requisite.

The tenure in chief ought to be kept alive and nourished ; the which, as it is the very root that doth maintain this filer stem, that by many rich and fruitful branches spreadeth itself into the chancery, exchequer, and court of wards : so if it be suffered to starve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good husbandry, not only this yearly fruit will much decrease from time to time, but also the whole body and boughs of that precious tree itself, will fall into danger of decay and dying.

Bacon.
ABLACTION. n. f. [ablatis, Lat.] The act of taking away.

ABLATIVE. n. a. [ablatus, Lat.]

1. That which takes away.
2. The sixth case of the Latin nouns ; the case which, among other significations, includes the person from whom something is taken away. A term of grammar.

A'BLE. adj. [habile, F. habilis, Lat. fitful, ready.]

1. Having strong faculties, or great strength or knowledge, riches, or any other power of mind, body, or fortune.

He was not afraid of an able man, as Lewis the Eleventh was. But, contrariwise, he was served by the ablest men that were to be found ; without which his affairs could not have prospered as they did.

Such other gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him : for the prince himself is such another : the weight of an hair will turn the scales.

2. Having power sufficient ; enabled.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South's Sermon. Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee. Deut. xvi. 17.

3. Before a verb, with the participle to, it signifies generally having the power ; before a noun with for, it means qualified.
Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous ; but who is able to stand before envy ?

4. There have been some inventions also, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words.

Watkins's Mathematical Magic.
To A'BLE. v. a. To make able ; to enable, which is the word commonly used. See ENABLE.

Plate fin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless break :
Arm it with rage, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it :
None does offend, none, I say none ; I'll able 'em ;
Take that of me, my friend, who have the pow'r
To seal th' accuser's lips.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
ABLE-BODIED. adj. Strong of body.
It lies in the power of every fine woman, to secure at least half a dozen able-bodied men to his majesty's service.

Abdijon, F. abdiger, N. 4.
To A'BLEGATE. v. a. [ablego, Lat.] To send abroad upon some employment ; also to send a person out of the way that one is weary of.

DiD.
ABLEGATION. n. f. [from ablegare.] A sending abroad, or out of the way.

DiD.
A'BLENESS. n. f. [from able.] Ability of body or mind ; vigour, force ; faculties.

That nation doth so excel, both for comelines and ableness, that from neighbour countries they ordinarily come, some to strive, some to learn, some to behold.

Sidney, b. ii.
A'BLESSY. n. f. [Aβλῆσις, Gr.] Want of sight, natural blindness ; also unadvisedness.

DiD.
ABLUCTION. n. f. [abluo, Lat.] A prodigal spending on meat and drink.

DiD.
To A'BLIGATE. v. a. [abligo, Lat.] To bind or tie up from.

DiD.
To A'BLICATE. v. a. [ablicare, Lat.] To let out to hire. Perhaps properly by him who has hired it from another.

Cervin's Lexicon Juridicum.
ABLOCATION. n. f. [from ablocare.] A letting out to hire.

DiD.
A'BLUENT. adj. [abluens, Lat.] To be unlike.

1. That which washes clean, as water wash away.]

2. That which has the power of cleansing.

DiD.
ABLUTION. n. f. [ablutio, Lat.]

1. The act of cleansing, or washing clean.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul ; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred chalice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ.

Yonder's Monthly Communicant.

Wash'd by the briny wave, the pious train

Are cleans'd, and cast th' ablution in the main. P. p. 1. line.

2. The rinsing of chymical preparations in water, to dissolve and wash away any acrimonious particles.

3. The cup given, without consecration, to the laity in the popish churches.

To A'BNEGATE. v. a. [from abnegare, Lat.] To deny.

ABNEGATION. n. f. [abnegatio, Lat. denial, from abnegare, to deny.] Denial, renunciation.

The abnegation or renouncing of all his own holds and interests, and trusts of all that man is most apt to depend upon, that he may the more expeditely follow Christ.

Hammont's Practical Catechism.

ABNODATION. n. f. [abnodatio, Lat.] The act of cutting away knots from trees ; a term of gardening.

DiD.

ABNORMOUS. adj. [abnormis, Lat. out of rule.] Irregular, misshapen.

DiD.

ABORD. adv. [a term, but adopted into common language ; derived immediately from the French à bord, as aller à bord, en voyer à bord. Bord is itself a word of very doubtful origin, and perhaps, in its different acceptations, deducible from different roots. Borg, in the ancient Saxon, signified a buoy ; in which sense, to go aboard, is to take up residence in a ship.] In a ship, which, when it is old, Cymochles heard and saw,

He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,

The little bark unto the shore to draw,

And him to ferry over that deep foal. Fairy Queen.

I made this answer, that he might land them, if it pleased him, or otherwise keep them aboard. Sir W. Raleigh's Essay.

When morning rose, I sent my mates to bring Supplies of water from a neighbouring spring ;

Whilst I the motions of the winds explor'd ;

Then summon'd in my crew, and went aboard.

Abdijon's Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. iii.

ABORD. n. f. [from abide.]

1. Habitation, dwelling place of residence.

But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in and thy rage against me. 2 King's, xix. 27.

Others may use the ocean as their road,

Only the English make it their abode ;

Whose ready sails with every wind can fly,

And make a cov'nant with th' unconstant sky. Wallar.

2. Stay, continuance in a place.

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode ;

Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Making a short abode in Sicily the second time, landing

Italy, and making the war, may be reasonably judged the business but of ten months.

Dryden's Dedication to Aeneid.

The woodcocks early visit, and abode

Of long continuance in our temperate clime,

Foretell a liberal harvest. Philips.

3. To make abode ; to dwell, to reside, to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode ;

Thence full of fate returns, and of the god. Dryd. Æn. 6.

To A'BORN. v. a. [See BORN.] To foretoken or foretell ; to be a prognostic, to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in the sense either of good or ill.

Every man,

After the hideous storm that follow'd, was

A thing inspir'd, and, not consulting, broke

Into a general prophecy, that this tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, abode

The sudden breach of it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

A'BORMENT. n. f. [from to abide.] A secret anticipation of something future ; an impression upon the mind of some event to come ; prognostication ; omen.

I like not this.

For many men that fumble at the threshold,

Aie well foretold that danger looks within.—

—Tush ! none, abodements must not new afflict us.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

My lord bishop, being somewhat troubled, took the freedom to ask him, Whether he had never any secret abodement in his mind ? No, replied the duke : But I think some adventure may kill me as well as another man.

Watson.

To A'BOULISH. v. a. [from aboles, Lat. to blot out.]

1. To annul.

For us to abolish what he hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hosier, b. iii. § 10.

On the parliament's part it was proposed, that all the bishops, deans, and chapters, might be immediately taken away, and abolish'd. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To put an end to ; to destroy.

The long continued wars, between the English and the Scots, had then rais'd invincible jealousies and hate, which long continued peace hath since abolish'd. Sir John Hayward.

That shall Pericles well acquire, I wot,
And, with thy blood, abolish to reproachful blot.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. Stanza 45.
More destiny'd than they,
We should be quite abolish'd, and expire.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 92.

Or wilt thou thyself

Abolish thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou hast made? Id. b. iii. l. 163.
Fermented spirits contract, harden, and consolidate many fibres together, abolishing many canals; especially where the fibres are the tenderest, as in the brain. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Nor could Vulcanian flame

The flesh abolish, or the favour tame. Dryd Virg. Gr. iii.
ABOLISHABLE, adj. [from abolish.] That which may be abolished.

ABOLISHER, n. f. [from abolish.] He that abolishes.

ABOLISHMENT, n. f. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing.

The plain and direct way against us herein, had been only to prove, that all such ceremonies, as they require to be abolished, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with less benefit than the abolishment of them would bring. Hooker, b. iv.
He should therefore think the abolishment of that order among us, would prove a mighty scandal and corruption to our faith, and manifestly dangerous to our monarchy.

Sifts on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

ABOLITION, n. f. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing. This is now more frequently used than abolishment.

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing thereof to its ancient condition, proposed by Agrippa, been accepted instead of Mæ-cenas's model, that state might have continued unto this day.

Grout's Cyclopedia Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

An apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves dedicated for those motions. Arbutnot on Diet.

ABOMINABLENESS, n. f. [from abominable.] The quality of being abominable; hatefulnefs, odiousnefs.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and essential difference between virtue and vice, we must forbear to urge atheists with the corruption and abominableness of their principles. Bentley's Sermons.

ABOMINABLE, adj. [abominabilis, Lat.]

1. Hateful, detestable.

Return!

Successful beyond hope, to lead thee forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit
Abominable, accurs'd, the house of woe. Par. Lost, b. x.
It is not to be questioned, but the queen and ministry might easily redress this abominable grievance, by enlarging the number of justices of the peace, by endeavouring to choose men of vir-tuous principles. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.
2. Unclean.

The soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. Leviticus, vii. 21.

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of loose and indeterminate censure.

They say you are a melancholy fellow.—I am so: I do love it better than laughing.—Those that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards. Shakspeare's As you like it.

ABOMINABLY, adv. [from abominable.] A word of low or familiar language, signifying excessively, extremely, exceedingly; in the ill sense.

Since I have been your wife, I have observed great abuses and disorders in your family; your servants are mutinous and quarrelsome, and cheat you most abominably.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

TO ABOMINATE, v. a. [abominari, Lat.] To abhor, detest, hate utterly.

We are not guilty of your injuries,
No way consent to them; but abhor,
Abominate, and loath this cruelty. Southern's Orizansla.

He professed both to abominate and despise all mystery, refuse-ment, and intrigue, either in a prince or minister. He could not tell what I meant by secrets of state, where an enemy, or some other nation, were not in the case. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

ABOMINATION, n. f.

1. Hatred, detestation; as, to hate in abomination.
To afflict king Charles by English or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new subjects, who have nothing in fo great abomination, as those whom they hold for heretics.

Swift's Miscellanies.

2. The object of hatred.

That ye shall say, thy servant's trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now, both we and also our fathers:
that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen for every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Genesis, xlii. 34.

3. Pollution, defilement.

And there shall in no wife enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie.
Rev. xxi. 27.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you;
Only th' adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That notes it against us. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

4. The cause of pollution.

And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Aftterthor the abomination of the Zadonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile. 2 Kings, xxiii. 13.

ABORIGINES, n. f. [Lat.] The earliest inhabitants of a country;
those of whom no original is to be traced; as the Welsh in Britain.

TO ABORT, v. n. [abortus, Lat.] To bring forth before the time; to miscarry. Dict.

ABORTION, n. f. [abortus, Lat.]

1. The act of bringing forth untimely.

2. The produce of an untimely birth.

His wife miscarried; but as the abortion proved only a female fetus, he comforted himself, that, had it arrived to perfection, it would not have answered his account.

Arbutnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Behold my arm thus blasted, dry and wither'd,

Shrunk like a false abortion, and decay'd;

Like some untimely product of the seasons,

Robb'd of its properties of strength and office.

Rowe's Jane Shore.

ABORTIVE, n. f. That which is born before the due time. See

ABORTIVE, adj.

No common wind, no custom'd event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral causes,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, and prelates, tongues of heav'n Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John. Shakspeare's King John.
Take the fine skin of an abortive, and, with starch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet. Peachum on Drawing.

This is certain, that many are, by this means, preferred, and signal service to their country, who, without such a provision, might have perished as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought, upon their guilty parents, the like destruction. Addison's Guardian, N° 106.

ABORTIVE, adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have 'child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light. Shakspeare's Richard III.
All th' unaccomplish'd works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Dissolv'd on earth, fleet hither. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 456.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

This is the true cause, why so many politic conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive.

South's Sermons.

False hopes

He cherishes, nor will his fruit expect
Th' autumnal season, but, in summer's pride
When other orchards smile, abortive fall. Philips.

How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
When I have feasted with queen Margaret?

Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakspeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

3. That which brings forth nothing.

Thine pass'd, if any pass, the void profound
Of unessential night receives him next,
Wide-gaping! and with utter loss of being Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 451.

ABORTIVELY, adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturally, untimely.

ABORTIVENESS, n. f. [from abortive.] The state of abortion.

ABORTIVEMENT, n. f. [from abort.] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth.

I shall not then doubt the happy issue of my undertakings in this design, whereby concealed treasures, which now seem utterly lost to mankind, shall be confined to so universal a pity, and brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose wretched carcasses the impartial laws have, or shall, decree, as untimely seals, to the worms of the earth, in whose womb those defecated mineral riches must ever lie buried as lost abortments, unless these be made the active midwives to deliver them. Bacon's Physicall Remains.

ABOYE, prep. [from a, and buyan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. Higher in place.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise.

Atter

Above the brims they force their fiery way;
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.

Dryden, Æneid vii. l. 643.

2. More in quantity or number.

Every one that passeth among them, that are numbered from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord.
Exodus, xxx. 14.

3. Higher in rank, power or excellence.

The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens.
Psalms cxlii. 4.

The public power of all societies is above every fool contained in the false societies.
Hosker, b. i.

There is no riches above a found body, and no joy above the joy of the heart.
Lucifasthani, xxx. 10.

To her

Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
Wherein God let thee above her, made of thee,
And for thee: whose perfection far excell'd
Her's, in all real dignity. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 147.
Latona sees her shine above the rest,
And feeds with secret joy her silent breast. Dryden's Æneid.

4. Superior to; unattainable by.

It is an old and true distinction, that things may be above our reason, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the universal presence of God, with innumerable other points.
Swift.

5. Beyond; more than.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength; infomuch that we defeated even of life.
2 Cor. i. 8.

In this, of having thoughts unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists, in a great measure, the exactness of judgment and clearness of reason, which is to be observed in one man above another.
Locke.

The inhabitants of Tirol have many particular privileges above those of the other hereditary countries of the emperor.
Adelstein on Italy.

6. Too proud for; too high for. A phrase chiefly used in familiar expression.

Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life.
Pope's Odyssey, Nott.

ABOVE, adv.

1. Over-head.

To men standing below, men standing aloft seem much lessened to those above, men standing below, seem not so much lessened.
Bacon.

When he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth: then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him.
Proverbs, viii. 28.

2. In the regions of heaven.

Your praise the fids shall chant in every grove,
And winds shall waft it to the pow'r's above. Pope's Psalter.

3. Before. [See ABOVE-CITED.]

I laid above, that these two machines of the balance, and the data, were only ornamental, and that the success of the duel had been the same without them. Dryd. Dedicat. Æneid.

FROM ABOVE.

1. From an higher place.

The Trojans from above their foes beheld;
And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd. Dryd. Æneid.

2. From heaven.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.
James, i. 17.

ABOVE ALL. In the first place; chiefly.

I had also studied Virgil's design, his disposition of it, his manners, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure; but above all, the elegance of his expression, and the harmony of his numbers. Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

ABOVE-BOARD. In open fight; without artifice or trick. A figurative expression, borrowed from gamblers, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is used only in familiar language.

It is the part also of an honest man to deal above-board, and without tricks.
L'Estrange.

Though there have not been wanting such heretofore, as have practised these unworthy arts (for as much as there have been villains in all places, and all ages) yet now-a-days they are owned above-board.
South's Sermons.

ABOVE-CITED. Cited before. A figurative expression, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls; as whatever is cited or mentioned before in the same page, must be above.

Nor would I mention this particular, did it not appear from the authority above-cited, that this was a fact contested by hearers themselves.
Adelstein on the Christian Religion.

ABOVE-GROUND. An expression used to signify, that a man is alive; not in the grave.

ABOVE-MENTIONED. See ABOVE-CITED.

I do not remember, that Homer any-where falls into the faults above-mentioned, where were indeed the false refinements of later ages.
Adelstein, Spectator, No 279.

TO ABOVE. v. n. [abunde, Lat. abonder, French.]

1. To have in great plenty; used sometimes with the particle in, and sometimes the particle with.

The king-becoming graces,

I have no relish of them, but abound

In the division of each several crime,

Acting it many ways.

Corn, wine, and oil, are wanting to this ground,

In which our countries fruitfully abound. Dryd. Indian Emp.

A faithful man shall abound with blessings; but he that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent. Prov. xxviii. 20.

Now that languages are made, and abound with words, standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them.

Locke.

2. To be in great plenty.

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.
Matthew, xxiv. 12.

Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ABOUT. prep. [aburzon, or aburzon, Sax. which seems to signify encircling on the outside.]

1. Round, surrounding, encircling.

Let not mercy and truth forsake thee. Bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thy heart. Proverbs, iii. 3.

At this the loudly shriek'd,

'Tis he, 'tis he, she cries, and tears her cheeks,

Her hair, her vest; and, stooping to the lands,

About his neck she cast her trembling hands. Dryd. Fables.

2. Near to.

Speak unto the congregation, saying, get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.
Exodus.

Thou dost nothing, Sergius,

Thou canst endeavour nothing, nay, not think,

But I both see and hear it; and am with thee.

By and before, about and in thee too. Ersk. John's in's Castile.

3. Concerning, with regard to, relating to.

When Constantine had finished an house for the service of God at Jerusalem, the dedication he judg'd a merit not unworthy, about the solemn performance whereof, the greatest part of the bishops in christendom should meet together.
Hesler, b. v. § 12.

The painter is not to take so much pains about the drapery as about the face, where the principal resemblance lies.

Dryd. Pref. to Duffresney.

They are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. Tillot. Sermon i.

Theft is always a sin, although the particular species of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth suppose positive laws about dominion and property.

Stillington's Defence of Discourses on Romish Idolatry.

They should always be heard, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after any thing they would know, and desire to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully checked in children, as other appetites suppressed.

Locke on Education, § 108.

It hath been practised as a method of making men's court, when they are asked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the state of trade and manufacture, to answer, that, in their neighbourhood, all things are in a flourishing condition.

Swift's short View of Ireland.

4. Engaged in, employed upon.

Our blessed Lord was pleased to command the representation of his death and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking of bread and effusion of wine; to signify to us the nature and sacredness of the hurgry we are about.

Taylor's Worthy Communion.

Labour, for labour's sake, is against nature. The understanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooses always the shortest way to its end, would presently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then set upon some new enquiry. But this, whether laziness or haste, often misleads it.
Locke.

They ought, however, to be provided with secretaries, and assisted by our foreign ministers, to tell their story for them in plain English, and to let us know, in our mother-tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about. Adelstein, Spect. No 309.

5. Appendant to the person; as, cloaths, &c.

If you have this about you,

As I will give you when we go, you may Boldly assault the necromancer's hall.

It is not strange to me, that persons of the latter sex should like, in all things about them, that handsomeneess for which they find themselves most liked.

Bayle on Calvary.

6. Relating

6. Relating to the person, as a servant.
Liking very well the young gentleman, such I took him to be, admitted this Delphian about me, who well shewed there is no service like his that serves because he loves. Sidney, b. ii.
Good master, corporal, captain, for my old dame's sake, find my friend: he hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and she is old and cannot help herself.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

AROUT, adv.

1. Circularity.

The weyward fifters, haid it hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, adv.
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. In circuit.

My honest lady, I'll tell you what I am about.—Two yards and more.—No quips now Pistol: indeed I am in the waste two yards about; but I am about no waste, I am about thrift.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,

A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear. Dryd. Fables.

3. Nearly.

When the boats were come within about sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther; yet so as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. Here and there; every way.

Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy
Her lovely knight to move his manly pace.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 2. stanza. 33.

A wolf that was past labour, had the wit in his old age, yet to make the belt of a bad game; he borrows a habit, and so about he goes, begging charity, from door to door, under the disguise of a pilgrim.

L'Estrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about it fly; upon the point, within a small distance of.

These dying lovers, and their floating souls,
Suspend the fight, and silence all our guns:
Beauty and youth, about to perish, finds
Such noble pity in brave English minds.

H'uller.

6. The longest way, in opposition to the short straight way.

Gold hath these natures; greatness of weight; closeness of roll; fixation; splendor; softness; immunity from rust; colour; or tincture of yellow: Therefore the sure way (though most about) to make gold, is to know the causes of the several natures before rehearsed.

Bacon's Natural Hist. N^o 328.

Spies of the Volcians

Held me in chafe, that I was forc'd to wheel

Three or four miles about; else had I, Sir,

Hall an hour since brought my report. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

7. To bring about; to bring to the point or state desired; as, he has brought about his purpose.

Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much question. Spektator.

8. To come about; to come to some certain state or point.

Wherefore it came to pass, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son. 1 Sam. i. 20.

One evening it befel, that looking out,

The wind they long had wish'd was come about;

Well pleas'd they went to rest; and if the gale

'Till morn continu'd, both refus'd to fail. Dryd. Fables.

9. To go about a thing; to prepare to do it.

Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? John vii. 19.

In common language, they say, to come about a man, to circumvent him.

Some of these phrases seem to derive their original from the French a bout; venir a bout d'une chose; venir bout de quelqu'un.

A. Bp. for Archbishop; which fec.

ABRACADA BRA. A superstitious charm against agues.

ABRADE. v. a. [abrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away from the other parts; to waste by degrees.

By this means there may be a continued supply of what is successively abraded from them by decurion of waters.

Hall's Origin of Mankind.

ABRAHAM'S BALM. The name of an herb.

ABRAWON. [See ABRAD.]

1. The act of abrad; a rubbing off.

2. [In medicine.] The wearing away of the natural mucus, which covers the membranes, particularly those of the stomach and guts, by corrosive or sharp medicines, or humours. Quincy.

3. The matter worn off by the attrition of bodies.

ABRAST. adv. [See BREAST.] Side by side; in such a position that the breasts may bear against the same line.

My cousin Suffolk,

My soul shall think keep company to heaven:

Thy, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abroast. Shakespeare's Henry V.

For honour travels in a freight to narrow,

Where one but goes abroast. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The riders rode abroast, and one his shield,
His lance of cornel-wood another held;
The third his bow, and glorious to behold!
The costly quiver, all of burnish'd gold. Dryden's Fables.

ABRICOT. See APRICOT.

TO ABRIDGE. v. a. [abridge, Fr. abridge, Lat.]

1. To make shorter in words, keeping still the same substance.

All these sayings, being declared by Jason of Cyrene in five books, we will essay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc. ii. 23.

2. To contract, to diminish, to cut short.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as such determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty consists. Locke.

3. To deprive of; in which sense it is followed by the particle from or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have disabled mine estate,

By shewing something a more swelling port,

Than my faint means would grant continuance;

Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd

From such a noble rate. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

They were formerly, by the common law, discharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them since by several statutes. Alty's Perpetual Juris Communi.

ABRIDGMENT. n. s. Deprived of, debarr'd from, cut short.

1. He that abridges; a shortener.

2. A writer of compendiums or abridgments.

ABRIDGMENT. n. s. [abregement, Fr.]

1. The contraction of a larger work into a small compas.

Surly this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of scripture.

Hosier, b. ii. § 5.

Myself have play'd

The int'rim, by remembering you 'tis past;

Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance

After your thought, straight back again to France?

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Idolatry is certainly the first-born of folly, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and sum total of all absurdities.

South's Sermons.

2. A diminution in general.

All trying, by a love of littleness,

To make abridgments, and to draw to left,

Even that nothing which at first we were.

Denne.

3. Restriction, or abridgment of liberty.

The constant desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us, no body, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty, or at least an abridgment of liberty, to be complained of.

Locke.

ABROACH. adv. [See TO BROACH.]

1. In a posture to run out; to yield the liquor contained; properly spoken of vessels.

The Templer spruce, while ev'ry spout's abroach,

Stays 'till his rival, yet seems to call a coach. Savage's Mis.

The jars of gen'rous wine (Accesse) giv,

When his Trincarian shores the navy left

He et abroach, and for the feast prepar'd,

In equal portions with the ven'ison shar'd.

Dryden's Virgil's Enid, vol. ii.

2. In a figurative sense; in a state to be diffused or advanced; in a state of such beginning as promises a progress.

That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,

And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,

Would be abuse the count'nance of the kings

Alack! what mischief might be et abroach,

In shadow of such greatness! Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABROAD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large.

Intermit no watch

Against a wakeful sleep, while I abroad,

'Till hie all the coasts of dark destruction, seek Deliverance. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 463.

Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,

On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;

Now haunts the cliff, now traverses the lawns,

And flies the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the house.

Welcome, Sir,

This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,

And subjects none abroad. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Lady—walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it; at least in the time I staid; though she seem'd to be fainting, and had convulsive motions several times in her head.

Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.

They thought it better to be somewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and disaffected.

Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Sir J. Denham.

What?

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land? Dryd. Span. Friar.
He who sojourns in a foreign country, refines what he sees and hears abroad, to the state of things at home. Atterb. Sermon.

4. In all directions, this way and that.
Full in the midst of this infernal road,
An elm displays her dusky arms abroad. Dryd. Virgil. Æn. vi.

5. Without, not within.
Bodies politic, being subject, as much as natural, to dissolution, by divers means, there are undoubtedly more states overthrown through diseases bred within themselves, than through violence from abroad. Hester, Dedication.

To ABROGATE v. a. [abroge, Lat.] To take away from a law its force, to repeal, to annul.

Such laws, as have been made upon special occasions, which occasions ceasing, laws of that kind do abrogate themselves.

Hester, b. iv. § 14.
The negative precepts of men may cease by many instruments, by contrary customs, by public disfigure, by long omission: but the negative precepts of God never can cease, but when they are expressly abrogated by the same authority.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
ABROGATION, n. f. [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogat-ing: the repeal of a law.

The commissioners from the confederate Roman catholics, demanded the abrogation and repeal of all those laws, which were in force against the exercise of the Roman religion.

Clarendon, b. viii.
To ABROGATE, v. a. [from To break, with a superabundant, a word not in use.] To break, to hear, to endure.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people gazing on thy face
With envious looks, still laughing at thy shame.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
ABRUPT, adj. [abruptus, Lat.] Broken off.

1. Broken, craggy.
Refill'd, roaring, dreadful down it comes
From the rude mountain, and the mossy wild,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt. Thomson's Winter.

2. Divided, without any thing intervening.
Or spread his airy flight,
Upborn with indefatigable wings,
Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy ile. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 409.

3. Sudden, without the customary or proper preparatives.
My lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
The abrupt and unkind breaking off the two first parliaments, was wholly imputed to the duke of Buckingham. Clar.

Abrupt, with eagle-speed he cut the sky;
Instant invisible to mortal eye.
Then fast he recogniz'd 'th' ethereal guest. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

4. Unconnected.
The abrupt stile, which hath many breaches, and doth not seem to end but fall. Ben. Johnson's Discourse.

ABRUPTED, adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in use.] Broken off suddenly.

The effects of whose activity are not precipitously abrupted, but gradually proceed to their cessations.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. 10.
ABRUPTION, n. f. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and sudden separation.

Those which are inclosed in stone, marble, or such other solid matter, being difficultly separable from it, because of its adhesion to all sides of them, have commonly some of that matter still adhering to them, or at least marks of its abruption from them, on all their sides. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ABRUPTLY, adv. [See ABRUPT.] Hastily, without the due forms of preparation.

The sweetness of virtue's disposition, jealous even over itself, suffered her not to enter abruptly into questions of Multi-tudo. Sidney, b. ii.

Now missing from their joy so lately found,
So lately found and so abruptly gone. Par. Regain, b. ii.

They both of them punctiliously observed the time thus agreed upon, and that in whatever company or business they were engaged, they left it abruptly, as soon as the clock warned them to retire. Addison, Spectator, N° 241.

ABRUPTNESS, n. f. [from abrupt.]
1. An abrupt manner, haste, suddenness, untimely vehemence.
2. The state of an abrupt thing; unconnectedness, roughness, cragginess.

The crystallized bodies found in the perpendicular intervals, are easily known from those that are lodged in the strata. The former have always their root, as the jewellers call it, which is only the abruptness, at the end of the body whereby it adhered to the stone, or sides of the intervals; which abruptness is caused by its being broke off from the said stone.

Woodward's Natural History, p. 4.
ABSCESS, n. f. [abscessus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour filled with matter; a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies in eight days, the inflammation ends in a suppuration and an abscess in the lungs, and sometimes in some other part of the body. Arbuth. of Diet.

Lindanus conjectured it might be some hidden abscess in the menstruary, which, breaking some few days after, was discovered to be an abscess of the menstruary. Hartley on Consumption.

To ABSCESS, v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative sense.

ABSCISSA, [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic section, intercepted between the vertex and a semi-ordinate.

ABSCISSION, n. f. [abscessio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off.

Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abscessio of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Weyman's Surgery.

2. The state of being cut off.

By cessation of oracles, with Montacutus, we may understand this intercession, not abscessio, or consummate delation.

To ABSCOND, v. n. [abscondo, Lat.] To hide one's self;
to retire from the public view; generally used of persons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

ABSCONDER, n. f. [from abscond.] The person that absconds.

ABSCONCE, n. f. [See ABSCOND.]

1. The state of being absent, opposed to presence.

1. You have strong party to defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in danger. Shakespeare's Coriol.

His friends behold, and pity'd him in vain,
For what advice can ease a lover's pain?

Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind. Dryd. Fal.

2. Want of appearance, in the legal sense.

Absence is of a fourfold kind or species. The first is a necessary absence, as in banished persons; this is entirely necessary. A second, necessary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the service of the church.
The third kind the civilians call a probable absence, as, that of students on the score of study. And the fourth, an absence entirely voluntary, as, on the account of trade, merchandise, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of absence, which is committed cum dolo et culpa, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as, in a contentious person, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is, by the law, in some respects, reputed as a person present. Alty's Practise of Juris Civilis.

You have given no disputation upon the absence of lovers, nor laid down any methods how they should support themselves under those separations. Addison, Spectator, N° 241.

3. Inattention, heedlessness, neglect of the present object.

I continued my walk, reflecting on the little absence and distractions of mankind. Addison, Spectator, N° 77.

4. It is used with the particle from.

His absence from his mother off he'll mourn,
And, with his eyes, look wishes to return. Dryd. Jew.

ABSENT, adj. [absens, Lat.]

1. Not present; used with the particle from.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I love;
At noon the plains, at noon the shady grove;
But Delia always: absent from her sight.

Nor plains at noon, nor groves at noon delight. Pope's Poet.

Where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whether they were absent or present, they were vexed alike. Wisd. xi. 11.

2. Absent in mind; inattentive; regardless of the present object.

I distinguish a man that is absent, because he thinks of something else, from him that is absent, because he thinks of nothing. Addison, Spectator, N° 77.

To ABSENT, v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into presence.

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity a while,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But if thou think'st trial unfought may find Us both securer, than thus warn'd thou seem'st,
Go—for thy stay, not free, absent thee more.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 372.

Thou I am forc'd, thus to absent myself
From all I love, I shall contrive some means,
Some friendly intervals, to visit thee.

Southern's Spartan Dancer.

The Arengo, however, is still called together in cases of extraordinary importance; and if, after due summons any member absents himself, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny English. Addison's Rem. on Italy.

ABSENTA NEUS, adj. Relating to absence; absent. Diitz.

ABSENTE, n. f. He that is absent from his station, or employment, or country. A word used commonly with regard to freemen living out of their country.

Then

Then was the first statute made against absentees, commanding all such as had land in Ireland, to return and reside thereupon.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A great part of estates in Ireland are owned by absentees, and such as draw over the profits raised out of Ireland, refunding nothing.

ABSENTIATED. part. [from absentium, Lat. wormwood.] Imbittered, impregnated with wormwood. Dict.

ABSIS. See APIS.
ABSIST. v. n. [absist, Lat.] to stand off, to leave off. Dict.

ABSOLVÉ. v. a. [absolve, Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime in a judicial sense.

Your great goodness, out of holy pity,

Absolv'd him with an axe. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Our victors, blest in peace, forget their wars, Tickell.

Enjoy past dangers, and absolve the stars.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth, to be here absolv'd; in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general scandal, of redeeming the credit lost by former judgments. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To set free from an engagement or promise.

Compell'd by threats to take that bloody oath,

And the act ill, I am absolv'd by both. Waller's Minia's Tragic.

This command, which must necessarily comprehend the person of our natural fathers, must mean a duty we owe them, distinct from our obedience to the magistrate, and from which the most absolute power of princes cannot absolve us. Lodge.

3. To pronounce a sin remitted, in the ecclesiastical sense.

But all is calm in this eternal sleep;

Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;

Ev'n superstition loses ev'ry fear;

For God, not man, absolves our faults here.

Pope's Eliza to Abolard.

4. To finish, to complete.

If that which is to be supposed infinitely distant from what is now current, is distant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely, then that one circulation which preceded it must necessarily be like ours, and consequently absolv'd in the space of twenty-four hours.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

What cause

Mov'd the creator, in his holy rest

Through all eternity, so late to build

In chaos; and the work begun, how soon

Absolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 94.

ABSOLVÉ. adj. [absolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied as well to persons as things.

Because the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or main; it cannot be, but that the words of his mouth are absolute, and lack nothing which they should have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hosier, b. ii. § 6.

2. Unconditional; as, an absolute promise.

Although it runs in forms absolute, yet it is indeed conditional, as depending upon the qualification of the person to whom it is pronounced. South's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, absolute space.

I see still the distinctions of sovereign and inferior, of absolute and relative worship, will bear any man out in the worship of any creature with respect to God, as well at least as it doth in the worship of images. Stillingfleet, Def. of Desc. an Rom. Idol.

An absolute mode is that which belongs to its subject, without respect to any other beings whatsoever: but a relative mode is derived from the regard that one being has to others.

Watt's Logic.

In this sense we speak of the ablativæ case absolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as, absolute power.

My crown is absolute, and holds of none;

I cannot in a base subjection live,

Not suffer you to take, though I would give. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

5. Positive, certain, without any hesitation. In this sense it rarely occurs.

Long is it since I saw him,

But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour,

Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,

And burst of speaking were as his: I'm absolute,

'Twas very Cloten. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

What is his strength by land? —

—Great and increasing: but by sea

He is an absolute master. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABSOLUTELY. adv. [from absolute.]

1. Completely, without restriction.

All the contradictions which grow in those minds, that neither absolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely sink into the sea of vanity. Sidney.

What merit they can build upon having joined with a pro-fluent army, under a king they acknowledged, to defend their own liberties and properties, is, to me, absolutely inconceivable;

and, I believe, will equally be so for ever. Swift's Pref. to Plain.

2. Without relation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die.

Hosier, b. v.

These then being the perpetual causes of zeal; the greatest good, or the greatest evil; either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Spencer's Sermons.

No sensible quality, as light, and colour, and heat, and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves, absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense. These qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions, upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and positions. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependance.

The prince long time had courted fortune's love,

But once possess'd, did absolutely reign:

Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes strove,

And conquer'd first those beauties they would gain.

Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.

And of that nature, for the most part, are things absolutely unto all mens salvation necessary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. Heister's Preface.

5. Peremptorily, positively.

Being as I am, why didst not thou

Command me absolutely not to go

Going into such danger, as thou didst? Parad. Lost, b. ix.

ABSOLUTENESS. n. f. [from absolute.]

1. Completeness.

The absoluteness and unlimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is nothing that can raise a man to that generous absoluteness of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that which gives him that happiness within himself, for which men depend upon others. South's Sermon.

3. Despoticism.

He kept a strict hand on his nobility, and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obsequious to him, but had less interest in the people; which made for his absoluteness, but not for his safety. Bacon's Henry VII.

ABSOLUTION. n. f. [absolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.

Absolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a person by some final sentence of law; also, a temporary discharge of his farther attendance upon a mefine process, through a failure or defect in pleading; as it does likewise in the canon law, where, and among divines, it likewise signifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of some sentence pronounced either in a court of law, or else in foro penitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of absolution, termed judicial, and another, filed a declaratory or extrajudicial absolution. Ayliffe's Pererogon Juris Canonici.

2. The remission of sins, or penance, declared by ecclesiastical authority.

The absolution pronounced by a priest, whether papist or protestant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the person, so absolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

ABSOLUTORY. adj. [absolutivus, Lat.] That which absolves.

Though an absolutory sentence should be pronounced in favour of the persons, upon the account of nearness of blood; yet, if adultery shall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded against as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Pererogon.

ABSONANT. adj. [See ABSOUND.] Contrary to reason, wide from the purpose.

ABSOUND. adj. [absimus, Lat. ill-founding.] Absurd, contrary to reason.

To suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties; yes, most absound to our reason.

Glennville's Scripta Scientifica, c. 4.

TE ASSO'RS. v. a. [assorbes, Lat. preter. assorb; part. pret. assorb, or assorpt.]

1. To swallow up.

Some tokens shew

Of scarleth friendship, and their sinking mates

Sulliaz; vain love, tho' laudable, assorpt

By a fierce eddy, they together found

The vast profundity. Phillips.

Moses imputed the deluge to the disruption of the abyss; and St. Peter, to the particular constitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be assorpt in water. Burn. Theory.

2. To suck up. See ABSORBENT.

Supporting the forementioned consumption should prove so durable, as to assorb and extenuate the said fanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts must necessarily come into danger. Harvey on Consumption.

ABSORBENT. n. f. [absorbens, Lat.]

A medicine that, by the softness or porosity of its parts, either causes, the absorption of pungent humours, or dries away superfluous moisture in the body.

There is a third class of substances, commonly called assorbents; as, the various kinds of shells, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which likewise raise an effervescence, and are therefore called called alkalies, though not so properly, for they are not false.

Arbutus an Alimenti.
ABSORPT. part. [from absorb.] Swallowed up; used as well, in a figurative sense, of persons, as in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked these five days; who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the present world, its customs and its manners, to be fully possessed and absorpt in the past. Pope's Letters.

ABSORPTION. n. f. [from absorb.] The act of swallowing up. It was below the dignity of those sacred penmen, or the spirit of God that directed them, to throw us the causes of this disruption, or of this absorption; this is left to the enquiries of men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTAIN. v. n. [abstine, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's self any gratification; with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and difficult,
 Converting, looking, loving, to abstain
 From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet;
 And, with desires, to languish without hope.

Milton's Paradise Lost, l. x. l. 993.
 To be perpetually longing, and impatiently desirous of any thing, so that a man cannot abstain from it, is to lose a man's liberty, and to become a servant of meat and drink, or smoke. Locke's Rule of Living Holy.

Even then the doubtful billows scarce abstain
 From the toils'd vessel on the troubled main. Dryden's Virgil.
ABSTEMIOUS. adj. [abstemius, Lat.] Temperate, sober, abstinent, refraining from excess or pleasures. It is used of persons; as, an abstemious hermit: and of things; as, an abstemious diet. It is spoken likewise of things that cause temperance.

The influences of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Abstinence in extremity will prove a mortal disease; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbutus an Alimenti.

Clytemnestra streams the love of wine exact,
 (Such is the virtue of th' abstemious well)

Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
 Extinguishes, and basks the drunken god:

Or that Melampus (so have fame assur'd)
 When the mad Prædæe with charms he cur'd,

And powerful herbs, both charms and simples cast
 Into the fiery ring, where fill the virtues last. Dryd. Est.

ABSTEMIOUSLY. adv. [from abstemius.] Temperately, soberly, without indulgence.

ABSTEMIOUSNESS. n. f. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abstemious.

ABSTENTION. n. f. [from abstine, Lat.] The act of holding off, or restraining; resistant. Dict.

To ABSURGE. v. a. [absurgete, Lat.] To cleanse by purging; to wipe.

ABSTERGENT. adj. Cleansing; having a cleansing quality.
To ABSTERGE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanse, to purify: a word very little in use, and less analogous than absolve.

Not will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the stomach of the olivine, no alteration; but we suspect this effect rather from corrosion than digestion, not any tendency to chylification by the natural heat, but rather some attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the stomach, which may absterge and shave the scoriaceous parts thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, l. iii.

ABSTERSION. n. f. [absterse, Lat.] The act of cleansing. See ABSTERGE.

The seventh cause is absterse; which is plainly a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which scours linen cloth speedily from the foulness. Bacon's Natural History, N° 47.

ABSTERGENT. adj. [from absterge.] That has the quality of absterging or cleansing.

It is good, after purging, to use apozemes and broths, not so much opening as those used before purgings: but absterge and mundifying clysters also are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Nat. History.

A table flood of that absterge tree,
 Where Æthiops' warthy bird did build to nest. Sir J. Denb.

There, many a flow'r absterge grew,
 Thy fav'rite flow'r of yellow hue. Swift's Miscellany.

ABSTINENCE. n. f. [abstinencia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.
 Because the abstinence from a present pleasure, that offers itself, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that that operates after the same manner pain does, and lessens, in our thoughts, what is future; and so forces us, as it were blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Fasting, or forbearance of necessary food. It is generally distinguished from temperance, as the greater degree from the less; sometimes as single performance from habit; as, a day of abstinence, and a life of temperance.

See, can you fast? your stomachs are too young:
 And abstinence engenders maladies. Shaksp. Love's Lab. Lost.

Religious men, who higher must be lent
 As awful guides of heavenly government;

To teach you penance, fasts, and abstinence.
 To punish bodies for the soul's offence. Dryden's Ind. Fery.
 And the faces of them, which have used abstinence, shall shine above the stars; whereas our faces shall be blacker than darkness. 2 Esdras, vii. 55.

ABSTINENCY. n. f. The same with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards for the abstinencia, or riots, of this present life, under the prejudices of short or finite, the promises and threats of Christ would lose much of their virtue and energy. Hummond's Fundam.

ABSTINENT. adj. [abstinens, Lat.] That uses abstinence, in opposition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is used chiefly of persons.

ABSTRACTED. adj. [abstractus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRACT. v. a. [abstracto, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.

Could we abstract from these pernicious effects, and suppose this were innocent, it would be too light to be matter of praise. Deacy of Piety.

2. To separate ideas.

Those, who cannot distinguish, compare and abstract, would hardly be able to understand and make use of language, or judge or reason to any tolerable degree. Locke.

3. To reduce to a epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the discourses we hear, or what we design to speak, let us abstract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

ABSTRACT. adj. [abstractus, Lat.] See the verb To ABSTRACT.

1. Separated from something else, generally used with relation to mental perceptions; as, abstract mathematics, abstract terms, in opposition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is usually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that which is mixed, doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. So astronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, music of sounds; and mechanics, of weights and powers. Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

Abstract terms signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it is; as, whiteness, soundness, length, breadth, wisdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logic.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the considering things in themselves, abstract from our opinions and other mens notions and discourses on them, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method, which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

ABSTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You shall there find a man, who is the abstract
 Of all faults all men follow. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are false, these epithets are small;

You're then the things, and abstract of them all. Dryd. Aur.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the sentiments he had remarked; so that he could give a tolerable analysis and abstract of every treatise he had read, just after he had finished it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. The state of being abstracted.

The hearts of great princes, if they be considered, as it were in abstract, without the necessity of states, and circumstances of time, can take no full and proportional pleasure in the exercise of any narrow bounty. Watts.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [from abstract.]

1. Separated.
 That space the evil one abstracted flood
 From his own evil, and for the time remain'd Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined, abstracted.
Abstracted spiritual love, they like
 Their souls exhal'd. Denn.

3. Absent of mind, inattentive to present objects; as, an abstracted scholar.

ABSTRACTEDLY. adv. With abstraction, simply, separately from all contingent circumstances.

Or whether more abstractedly we look,
 Or out the writers, or the written book:
 Whence, but from heav'n, could men unskill'd in arts,
 In several ages born, in several parts,
 Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
 Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
 Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden's Religio Lati.

ABSTRACTION. n. f. [abstractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abstracting.

The word abstraction signifies a withdrawing some part of

An idea from other parts of it; by which means, such abstracted ideas are formed, as neither represent any thing corporeal or spiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body.

Watts's Logic.

2. The state of being abstracted.
3. Absence of mind, inattention.
4. Disregard of worldly objects.

ABSTRACTIVE. adj. [from abstract.] Having the power or quality of abstracting.

ABSTRACTLY. adv. [from abstract.] In an abstract manner, absolutely, without reference to any thing else.

Matter abstractly and absolutely considered, cannot have born an infinite duration now past and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [abstractus, Lat.] Unbound. Dict.

TO ABSTRACT. v. a. [abstractus, Lat.] To unbind. Dict.

TO ABSTRUDE. v. a. [abstrude, Lat.] To thrust off, or pull away. Dict.

ABTRUSIVE. adj. [abtrusus, Lat.] Thrust out of sight.

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whose fight discerns
Abstract thoughts, from forth his holy mount,

And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nighly before him, law, without their light,

Re-illumine rising. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 712.

2. Difficult, remote from conception or apprehension. It is opposed to obvious and easy.

So spoke our fire, and, by his count'nance, seem'd Ent'ring on studious thoughts abstract. Parad. Lost, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abstract, and not easy to be distinguished, especially those of the tongue, which is moved, through the help of many muscles, so easily, and habitually, and variously, that we are scarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed.

Hilder's Elements of Speech.

No man could give a rule of the greatest beauties, and the knowledge of them was to be abstract, that there was no manner of speaking which could express them. Dryden's Dissertions.

ABSTRACTLY. adv. In an abstract manner; obscurely, not plainly, or obviously.

ABTRUSENESS. n. f. [from abtrusus.] The quality of being abstract; difficulty, obscurity.

It is not oftentimes so much what the scripture says, as what some men persuade others it says, that makes it seem obscure; and that as to some other passages that are of indeed, since it is the abstractness of what is taught in them, that makes them almost inevitably so; it is little less fauty, upon such a score, to find fault with the style of the scripture, than to do so with the author for making us but men. Blythe on the Scriptures.

ABSTRACTIVE. n. f. [from abstract.] A word seldom used.

2. That which is abstract. A word seldom used.

Authors are also suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to write of secret agents; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. Swift's Sermons.

A man who cannot write with wit on a proper subject, is dull and stupid; but one who shews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and absurd. Addison, Spectator, N° 491.

But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat;
'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:

Who wickedly is wife, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope's Essay on Man.

ABSTRACT. adj. [abstractus, Lat.]

1. Unreasonable, without judgment, as used of men.

Seeming wife men may make shift to get opinion; but let no man choose them for employment; for certainly you had better take for business a man somewhat absurd, than over formal. Bacon's Essay 27.

2. Inconsistent, contrary to reason, used of sentiments or practices.

The thing itself appeared desirable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and desire it; but then, it was after a very irrational and absurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. Swift's Sermons.

A man who cannot write with wit on a proper subject, is dull and stupid; but one who shews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and absurd. Addison, Spectator, N° 491.

But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat;
'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:

Who wickedly is wife, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope's Essay on Man.

ABSTRACTLY. n. f. [from abstract.]

1. The quality of being absurd; want of judgment applied to men; want of propriety applied to things.

How clear forever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the absurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. In which sense it has a plural.

In which sense it has a plural.

That satisfaction we receive from the opinion of some pre-eminence in ourselves, when we see absurdities of another, or when we reflect on any past absurdities of our own.

No II. Addison, Spectator, N° 249.

ABSURDLY. adv. [from absurd.] After an absurd manner; improperly, unreasonably.

But man we find the only creature,
Who, led by folly, combats nature;

Who, when the loudly cries, forbear,
With obstinacy fixes there;

And where his genius least inclines,
Absurdly bends his whole designs. Swift's Miscellany.

We may proceed yet further with the atheist, and convince him, that not only his principle is absurd, but his consequences also as absurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSURDNESS. n. f. [from absurd.] The quality of being absurd; injudiciousness, impropriety. See ABSDURDITY; which is more frequently used.

ABUNDANCE. n. f. [abundantia, Fr.]

1. Plenty; a sense chiefly poetical.

At the whisper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance spreads my board. Cresspue.

The doubted charge his subjects love supplies,
Who, in that bounty, to themselves are kind;

So glad Egyptian feed their Nilus rise,
And, in his plenty, their abundance find. Dryd. Ass. Mir.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn, during its course through the Tyrol, is generally shut up between a double range of mountains, that are most of them covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peasants are employed in hewing down the largest of these trees, that, after they are barked and cut into shape, are tumbled down. Addison on Italy.

3. A great quantity.

Their chief enterprise was the recovery of the Holy land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been shed with very small benefit unto the Christian state.

Sir Walter Raleigh's Essay.

4. Exuberance, more than enough.

For well I wot, most mighty sovereign,
That all this famous antique history,

Of some, th' abundance of an idle brain
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spens. Faery Q. b. ii.

ABUNDANT. adj. [abundant, Lat.]

1. Plentiful.

Good the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;

The author not impair'd, but honour'd more. Par. Lost, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the vessels are in a state of too great rigidity, so as not to yield, a strong projectile motion occasions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; especially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Full stored. It is followed sometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but some ages before these were found out, and was abundant with all things at first; and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put to much to the use of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiously. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. It is applied generally to things, sometimes to persons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth. Exod. xxxiv, 6.

ABUNDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Genesis, i. 20.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath also pour'd;

Inward and outward both, his image fair. Par. Lost, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than sufficiently.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly supplied in the imaginations of friendship, and the repeated influences of a constant conversation. Rogers's Sermon.

Heroic poetry has ever been esteemed the greatest work of human nature. In that rank has Aristotle placed it; and Longinus is so full of the like expressions, that he abundantly confirms the other's testimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

TO ABUSE. v. a. [abusus, Lat.]

In abusi the verb, f has the sound of z; in the noun, the common sound.

1. To make an ill use of.

They that use this world, as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away. 1 Cor. vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverseness of men, no longer suffer his compassion to be abused. Rogers's Sermon.

2. To deceive, to impose upon.

The world hath been much abused by the opinion of making gold: the work itself I judge to be possible; but the means hitherto propounded are, in the practice, full of error.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 126.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with such spirits,
Abuses me to damn me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

E

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions; and so, by this artifice, making evil pass for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of South's Sermons.

Nor be with all these tempting words abused;
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
Pope's Supplic to Phœon.

3. To treat with rudeness, to reproach.
I am no trumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakespeare's Othello.
But he mocked them, and laughed at them, and abused them flamefully, and spake proudly. 1 Mac. vii. 34.
Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by then is like a mistress us'd.
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd. Pope's Essay on Crit.
The next criticism upon the stars seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every-where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison.
ABUSE, n. f. [from the verb abuse.]
1. The ill use of any thing.

The calling away things profitable for the subsistence of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hucker, l. v. § 9.

2. Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worth abuse, or to their meanest use. Parad. Lost, l. iv.
3. A corrupt practice, bad custom.
The nature of things is such, that, if abused be not remedied, they will certainly encrease. Swift, Advancem. of Relig.
4. Seducement.
Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and through the deceit abused me, and, after the abuse, forsaken me, but that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney, b. ii.
5. Unjust censure, rude reproach, contumely.
I dark in lights, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong. Samson Ag. on.

ABUSER, n. f. [from the verb abuse.]
1. He that make an ill use.
2. He that deceives.

3. Next thou, th' abuser of thy prince's ear. Denb. S. 17.
4. He that reproaches with rudeness.
5. A ravisher, a violator.
ABUSIVE, adj. [from abuse.]
1. Practising abuse.

The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was slow,
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, thy most abusive foe. Pope's Miscell.
Dame Nature, as the learned show,
Provides each animal its food;
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To persecute the mule's fame,
On poets in all times abusive,
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Containing abuse; as, an abusive lampoon.
Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive tongue
Waken'd the magistrates coercive power. Johnson.
3. Deceitful; a false little used, yet not improper.
It is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum. Bacon's Considerations on It as with Spain.

ABUSIVELY, adv. [from abuse.]
1. Improperly, by a wrong use.
The oil, abusively call'd spirit, of roses swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have observed in any other oil drawn in any limbeck. Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.

2. Reproachfully.
ABUSIVENESS, n. f. [from abuse.] The quality of being abusive; foulness of language.

Pick out of mirth, like flames out of thy ground,
Profaneness, filthiness, abusiveness.
These are the scum, with which coarse wits abound:
The fine may flow these well, yet not go loss. Herrick.
Te ABU' T, v. u. obsolete. [obsolete, to touch at the end, Fr.]
To end at, to border upon; to meet, or approach to, with the particle upon.

Two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upheared and abutting fronts
Perilous the narrow ocean parts asunder. Shakspeare, Henry V.
In entering the fame, we will first pitch at the Loos, two several corporations, distinguished by the addition of call and well, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Curwen's Survey of Cornwall.

ABUTTAL, n. f. [from abut.] The abutting or boundaries of any land. A writing declaring on what lands, highways, or other places, it does abut.

ABUTMENT, n. f. [from abut.] That which abuts, or borders upon another.

ABYSM, n. f. [obsolete, old Fr. now written contractually abine.]
A gulf; the fame with abyss.

My good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abysm of hell. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABYSS, n. f. [obsolete, Lat. "Abyssus", bottomless, Gr.]

1. A depth without bottom.
Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss,
And, through the palpable obscure, find out
This uncouth way. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 405.
2. A great depth, a gulph.

The yawning earth disclos'd th' abyss of hell:
The weeping fountains did the wars foretell,
And holy sweat from brazen idols fell. Dryden, Virg. Georg. i.

3. In a figurative sense, that in which any thing is lost.
For sepulchres themselves must crumbling fall

In time's abyss, the common grave of all. Dryden, Juv. Sat. x.
If, dis-ov'ring how far we have clear and distinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of those things that are within the reach of our understandings, and launch not out into that abyss of darkness, out of a presumption, that nothing is beyond our comprehension. Locke.

4. The body of waters supposed at the center of the earth.
We are here to consider what is generally understood by the great abyss, in the common explication of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted either to be the sea, or subterranean waters hid in the bowels of the earth. Burton's Tour, Earth.

In the language of divines, hell.

From what insatiable abyss,
Where flames devour, and serpents hiss,
Promote me to thy seat of bliss. Roscommon.

AC, AK, or AKE.

Being initials in the names of places, as Acen, signify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak. Gibson's Camden.

ACACIA, n. f. [Lat.]

1. A drug brought from Egypt, which, being suppled the inspissated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of sloes, boiled to the same consilience. Dictionary of Comm. Sacros. Treasures.
2. A tree commonly so called here, the thorn of which is said that which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed psaladia, or virginian acacia.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, wrapped in a fibriated membrane, which afterwards becomes a pod, opening into two parts, in which are contained several kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

ACADEMICAL, adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy, belonging to an academy.

ACADEMIAN, n. f. [from academy.] A scholast of an academy or university; a member of an university. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienfes, mentions a great feast made for the academicians.

ACADEMICK, n. f. [from academy.] A student of an university.

A young academick shall dwell upon a journal that treats of trade in a dictatorial style, and shall be lavish in the praise of the author; while, at the same time, perfidious well skilled in those different subjects, bear the taste with contempt.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 5.

ACADEMICK, adj. [from academy, Lat.] Relating to an university.

While through poetic fœces the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves. Dunciad, b. iv. l. 481.

ACADEMICALLY, adv. [from academy, Lat.] Belonging to an university.

He drew him first into the fatal circle, from a kind of resolved privateness at his house at Lampis in South Wales; where, after the academic life, he had taken such a taste of the rural,
as I have heard him say, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired course. Watts.

ACADEMICIAN, n. f. [from academick, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally used in speaking of the professors in the academies of France.

ACADEMIST, n. f. [from academy.] The member of an academy.

It is observed by the Parisian academists, that some amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the sea-calf, or seal, hath his engorgis extraordinarily large. Ray on the Creation.

ACADEMY, n. f. [anciently, and properly, with the accent on first syllable, now frequently on the second. Académie, Lat.
from Academy of Athens, whose house was turned into a school, from whom the Academy of Academy in Milton.]

1. An assembly or society of men, uniting for the promotion of some art.

Our court shall be a little academy,
Still and contemplative in living arts. Shakspeare's Love's Lab. Lost.

2. The place where sciences are taught.

Amongst the academies, which were composed by the rare genius of those great men, these four are reckoned as the principal; namely, the Athenian school, that of Sicily, that of Rhodes, and that of Corinth. Dryden's Dissert.

3. An university.

A place of education, in contradistinction to the universities or public schools. Academy.

ACANTHUS.

ACANTHUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the herb bears-foot, remarkable for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian chapter.

On either side

Acanthus, and each od'rous bushy shrub,

ACATALYTIC. n. f. [ἀκαταλυστικός, Gr.] A verb which has the complete number of syllables, without defect or superfluity.

ACCEDE. v. n. [accēdo, Lat.] To be added to, to come to; generally used in political accounts; as, another power has accēdēd to the treaty; that is, has become a party.

ACCELERATE. v. a. [accelerā, Lat.]

1. To make quick, to hasten, to quicken motion; to give a continual impetus to motion, so as perpetually to encrease.

Take new beer, and put in foune quantity of stale beer into it; and see whether it will not accelerate the clarification, by opening the body of the beer, whereby the grosser parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Natural History, N° 307.

If the rays endeavour to recede from the densit part of the vibration, they may be alternately accelerated and retarded by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Optick.

Spices quicken the pulse, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and dissipate the fluids from whence leannefs, pains in the stomach, loadings, and fevers. A husband on Asinants.

Let from the dread immensity of space

Returning, with accelerated course,

The rushing comet to the far descends. Tranf. Sum. l. 1600.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and used chiefly in philosophical language; but is sometimes used on other occasions.

In which council the king him elf, whose continual vigilancy did suck in sometimes caudle's fufpitions, which few else knew, inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps it may point out to a student now and then, what may employ the most useful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate his diligence in the most momentous enquiries. Hart's Imp.

ACCELERATION. n. f. [acceleratio, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, discovered first by Galileo, is, that the velocities acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls, the spaces through which it pulls will be as the squares of the velocities, and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the spaces.

2. The state of the body accelerated, or quickened in its motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravitation of the air, the existence or non-existence of empty spaces, either moderate or interperfed, and many the like, have taken up the thoughts and times of men in disputes concerning them.

Hale's Origin of Minerva.

ACCE'ND. v. a. [accēdo, Lat.] To kindle, to set on fire; a word very rarely used.

Our devotion, if sufficiently accēdēd, would, as theirs, burn up innumerable books of this sort. Deay of Piety.

ACCESSION. n. f. [accessio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the state of being kindled.

The fulmination: damp will take fire at a candle, or other flame, and, upon its accession, gives a crack or report, like the discharge of a gun, and makes likewise an explosion so forcible as sometimes to kill the miners, break their limbs, shake the earth, and force coals, flames, and other bodies, even though they be of very great weight, to rise up from the bottom of the pit or mine. Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

ACCENT. n. f. [accentus, Lat.]

1. The manner of speaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know, sir, I am no flatterer: he that begailed you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shakespeare's As you like it.

2. In grammar, the marks made upon syllables to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regulated the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice in some certain syllables to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Hall's Elem.

3. Poetically, language or words.

How many ages hence Shall this our body scene be acted o'er,

In times unborn, and accents yet unborn. Shak. Tyl. Caesar.

Winds, on your wings to heav'n her accents bear;

Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear. Dryd. Virg. Paff. 3.

4. A modification of the voice, expressive of the passions or sentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry Will pass unheard, with unregarded die;

When the rough seaman's louder shouts prevail, When fair occasion shows the springing gale. Prior.

To ACCENT, v. a. [accentus, Lat.]

1. To pronounce, to speak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules.

Having got somebody to mark the last syllable but one, where it is long, on words above two syllables which is enough to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words) let her read daily in the gospels, and avoid understanding them in Latin, if she can. Locke on Education, § 177.

2. In poetry, to pronounce or utter in general.

O my unhappy lines! you that before Have serv'd my youth to vent some wanton cries, And, now congeal'd with grief, can scarce implore Strength to accēnt, Here my Albertus lies! Warton.

3. To write or note the accents.

To ACCENTUATE. v. a. [accentuare, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ACCENTUATION. n. f. [from accentuare.]

1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.

2. Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCEPT. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.]

1. To take with pleasure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is distinguished from receive, as specific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, faith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. Malachi, i. 10.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but, in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciously pleased to accept this tender of my duty. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by submitting away,

Yet have your humour met when you obey. Page.

2. It is used in a kind of juridical sense; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd

To keep it better than the first he made. Dryden's Fables.

3. In the language of the bible, to accept persons, is to act with personal and partial regard

He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons. Job, xii. 10.

4. It is sometimes used with the particle of.

I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept of me. Genes, xxvii. 20.

ACCEPTABILITY. n. f. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his natural blood to be shed, for the remission of our sins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance. Taylor's Holy Communion.

ACCEPTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by some with the accent on the first syllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the second.

1. That which is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleasing. It is used with the particle to before the verb accepting.

This woman, whom thou mad'st it to be my help,

And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,

So fit, so acceptable, to divine,

That from her hand I could expect no ill. Parad. Lost, b. ii.

I do not see any other method left for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Scott's Essay, &c.

After he had made a peace so acceptable to the church, and so honourable to himself, he spent the remainder of his life at Kippille, and died with an extraordinary reputation of sanctity. Addison on Holy.

ACCEPTABleness. n. f. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableness of that conjunction.

Greav's Cymbeline Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

ACCEPTABLY. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; so as to please; with the particle ly. For the accent, see ACCEPTABLE.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's accounts, cares not what he suffers, so he be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he prays, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

If you can teach them to love and respect other people, they will, as your age requires it, find ways to express it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education, § 145.

ACCEPTANCE. n. f. [acceptio, Fr.]

1. Reception with approbation.

By that acceptance of his sovereignty, they also accepted of his laws; why then should any other law be now used amongst them? Seniors's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some men cannot be fools with good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

Thus I imbolden'd spake, and freedom us'd

Permissive, and acceptance found. Per. Lost, b. viii. l. 415.

2. The meaning of a word as it is received or understood; acceptance.

That pleasure is man's chiefest good, because indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleasure, is an assertion most certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only false but odious: for, according to this, pleasure and sensuality pass for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this sense, alters the subject of the discourse. South.

ACCEPTANCE [in law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himself, for ever, to allow a former fact done by another, whether it be in itself good or not. Cowd.

ACCEPTATION. n. f. [from accept.] This large sense seems now wholly out of use.

Yet, poor soul! knows he no other, but that I do suspect, neglect, yea, and desert him: for, every day, he finds one way or other to set forth himself unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldness of acceptation. Sidney, b. ii.

What is new finds better acceptation, than what is good or great. Dunham's Sephy.

2. Good reception, acceptance.

Cain, envious of his brother's prayer and sacrifice, flew him; making himself the first man-slayer, and his brother the first martyr. Keble's History of the World, b. i.

3. The state of being acceptable, regard.

Some things, although not so required of necessity, that, to leave them un-received, excludeth from salvation, are, notwithstanding, of so great dignity and acceptation with God, that most ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Leakey, b. ii.

They have those enjoyments only as the consequences of the state of esteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governors. Locke on Education, § 53.

5. Acceptance in the juridical sense. This sense occurs rarely. As, in order to the passing away a thing by gift, there is required a surrender of all right on his part that gives; so there is required also an acceptation on his part to whom it is given. Sau. b's Sermons.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Thetoupon the earl of Lauderdale made a discourse upon the fever 1 questions, and what acceptation these words and expressions had. Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or solid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Ben. l. Sermon.

AN ACCEPTER. n. f. [from accept.] The person that accepts.
ACCEPTILATION. n. f. [from acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil law, importing the remission of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, testifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCEPTION. n. f. [from acceptio, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received sense of a word; the meaning.

That this hath been esteemed the due and proper acceptation of this word, I shall testify by one evidence, which gave me the first hint of this notion. Hannond on Fundamentals.

ACCES. n. f. [In fine of its senses, it seems derived from access, in others, from accessus, Lat. acces, Fr.]

1. The way by which any thing may be approached.

There remained very advantageous access for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very slender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no assurance that repentance would be admitted for sin. Hannond on Fundamentals.

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends;
 And here th' unnavigable lake extends;
 O'er whole unhappy waters, void of light,
 No bird pretumes to steer his airy flight. Dryd. Æneid vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men. When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs, We are deny'd access unto his person, Ev'n by those men that most have done us wrong. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

They go commission'd to require a peace,
 And carry presents to procure access. Dryden, Æneid vii.

He grants what they becloud;
 Infructed, that to God is no access
 Without Mediator, whose high office now
 Moses in figure bears. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

3. Encrease, enlargement, addition. The gold was accumulated, and store treasure, for the most part; but the silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire by the same enterprize. Bien's History of War.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with atheism; yet doth it deducively, and upon inference, include the same; for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

Not think superfluous their aid,
 I, from the influence of thy looks, receive Access in every virtue; in thy sight
 More wise, more watchful, stronger. Paradise Lost.

Of virtuous actions pass, if not kept up
 With an access, and fresh supply, of new ones,
 Is lost and soon forgotten. Dunham's Sephy.

4. It is sometimes used, after the French, to signify the returns of fits of a distemper; but this sense seems yet scarcely received into our language.

For as relapses make diseases
 More desperate than their first access. Hudibras.
ACCESSARINESS. n. f. [from accessary.] The state of being accessory.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative accessariness to the mischiefs. Deacy of Piety.

ACCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it seems, of the word accessory, which sees; but now more commonly used than the proper word.]

That which, without being the chief agent in a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general sense.

As for those things that are accessory hereto, those things that so belong to the way of salvation. Holier.

He had taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehension or imagination, that it would ever make him accessory to rebellion. Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCESSIBLE. adj. [from accessibilis, Lat. accessibile, Fr.] That which may be approached; that which we may reach or arrive at.

It is applied both to persons and things, with the particle to. In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and what is spoken is generally more affecting, and more apposite to particular occasions. Rogers.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions; against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea. Addison's Freeholder.

Those things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been rackt and tortured to discover themselves, while the plainer and more accessible truths, as if defpicable while easy, are clouded and obscured. Deacy of Piety.

Some life more open to our senses and daily observation; others are more occult and hidden, and though accessible, in some measure, to our senses, yet not without great fear and scrutiny, or some happy accident. See the Origin of Misbelief.

ACCESSION. n. f. [from accessio, Lat. accession, Fr.]

1. Encrease by something added, enlargement, augmentation.

There would not have been found the difference here set down between the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory, but that the included inch of air received some little accession during the trial. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an addition of property, used all means to prevent it. Swift on the Contests in Athens and Rome.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence, are the proper discharge of such over-proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them. Rogers's Sermons.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to; as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares
 Against my late accession to the wars?
 Does not the fool perceive his argument
 Is with more force against Achilles bent? Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the king's accession to the throne.

ACCESSORILY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessory.

ACCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to encrease it; additional.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss. Holier.

ACCESSORY. n. f. [from accessorius, Lat. accessorie, Fr.] This word, which had anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to form of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts, by the common law, or by statute: and, by the common law, two ways also; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof; for his presence makes him also a principal: wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact in manslaughter; because manslaughter is sudden and not premeditated. Accessory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory, by statute, is, that who abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed an offence made felony by statute. Cowell.

By the common law, the accessory cannot be proceeded against till the principal has received his trial. Spencer's State of Ireland.

But pause, my soul! a d d fly, ere thou fall
 On accidental joys, th' essential.
 Still before access to abide
 A trial, must the principal be tried. Dennis.

Now were all transform'd
 Alike, to serpents all, as accessories
 To his bold riot. Donne's Sermons, b. x. l. 520.

2. Applied

2. Applied to things.

An accident is said to be that which does accede unto some principal fact or thing in law; and, as such, generally speaking, follows the reason and nature of its principal.

Accident's Power Jon. Canonici.

ACCIDENT. n. f. [a corruption of accident, from accident, a. Lat.]

The little book containing the first rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of speech.

I do confess I do want eloquence,

And never yet did learn mine accidence. Taylor the Water-poet.

ACCIDENT. n. f. [accident, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any beings, which may be separated from it, at least in thought.

If the were but the body's accident,

And her sole being did in it subsist,

As white in snow, the might herself absent,

And in the body's substance not be mis'd. Sir John Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is such a mode as is not necessary to the being of a thing; for the subject may be without it, and yet remain of the same nature that it was before; or it is that mode which may be separated or abolished from its subject.

Watts's Logic.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing else but the informing of ourselves, what composites of letters are, by consent and institution, to signify flesh certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Hilder's Elements of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeseen; or casually, chance.

General laws are like general rules in physics, according whereunto, as no wife man will desert himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard whereof, that whereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, recover health, would be, to him, either hurtful, or, at the least, unprofitable. Heber, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common

Field and pasture with the land of Eden. Riccioli's Hist. W. world.

Thus we rejoice'd, but soon our joy is turn'd

Into perplexity, and new amazement.

For whether is he gone? What accident

Hath rapt him from us? Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

And trivial accidents shall be forborn,

That others may have time to take their turn. Dryd. Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of King Henry. He was only an instrument of it (as the logicians speak) by accident. Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDENTAL. n. f. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property nonessential.

Conceive, as much as you can, of the essentials of any subject, before you consider its accidental. Watts's Logic.

ACCIDENTAL. adv. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, nonessential; used with the particle it, before that in which the accident inheres.

A distinction is to be made between what pleases naturally in itself, and what pleases upon the account of machines, actions, places, and circumstances, which are merely accidental to the object. Kymer's Tragedies of the 1st Age.

This is accidental to a state of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotson.

2. Casual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

Thy lin's not accidental, but a trade. Shakspeare, As you like it.

So shall you hear

Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;

Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cause. Shakspeare, Ham.

Look upon things of the most accidental and mutable nature;

accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance; yet God's preference of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us. South's Sermons.

3. In the following passage it seems to signify adventitious.

Ay, such a minister as wind to fire,

That adds an accident of fierceness to

Its natural fury. Denham's Satire.

ACCIDENTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; nonessential.

Other useful points of publick matters, no less concerning the good of the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenser's State of Ireland.

I conclude choler accidentally better, and acrimonious, but not in itself. Hursey on Conjunctions.

2. Casually, fortuitously.

Although virtuous men do sometimes accidentally make their way to preferment, yet the world is so corrupted, that no man can consistently be so rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDENTALNESS. n. f. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental.

ACCIDENT. n. f. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps sometimes used for recipient. Dict.

ACCITE. v. a. [accite, Lat.] To call, to summon; a word not in use now.

Our coronation done, we will accite

No prince, no peer, shall have just cause to say,

How short Harry's happy life one day. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

N III.

ACCLAM. n. f. [acclam, Lat. from which prob. bly. first the verb acclam, now lost, and then the noun.] A shout of praise, acclamation.

Back from pursuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclam,

Thou only extoll'd. Milnes's Par. Lett. b. iii. l. 377.

The heralds ends; the vaulted firmament

With loud acclamations, and vast applause, is rent. Dryd. Fables.

ACCLAMATION. n. f. [acclamatio, Lat.]

Shouts of applause; such as those with which a victorious army salutes the general.

It hath been the custom of christian men, in token of the greater reverence, to stand, to utter certain words of acclama- tion, and, at the name of Jesus, to bow. Hester, b. v. § 29.

Gladly then he mix'd

Among those friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd

With joy, and acclamations loud, that one,

That, of so many myriads fall'n, yet one

Return'd, not lost. Milnes's Par. Lett. b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words, and to fine a thing does it seem to some, to be ruin'd plausibly, and to be offered to their destruction with paucity and acclamation. South.

ACCLIVITY. n. f. [from acclivus, Lat.] The steepness or slope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the ascent of an hill is the acclivity, the descent is the declivity. Quincy.

The men, leaving their wives and younger children below, do, not without some difficulty, clamber up the acclivity, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheese, and do all the dairy-work.

Ray on the Creation.

ACCLIVOUS. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Rising with a slope.

To ACCLIV. v. a. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill up, in an ill sense; to crowd, to stuff full: a word almost obsolete.

At the well-head the purest streams arise:

But nooky with his branching arms annoys,

And with uncumely weeds the gentle wave accliv. Fairy Q.

2. To fill to satiety; in which force cliv is still in use.

They that escape best in the temperate zone, would be ac- cliv'd with long nights, very tedious; no less than forty days.

Ray on the Creation.

To ACCLIV. v. n. [See COLL.] To crowd, to keep a crowd about, to bulle, to be in a hurry; a word now out of use.

About the cauldron many cooks accliv'd.

With books and ladies, as need did require;

The while the vizards in the vessel bud.

They did about their business sweet, and silently to'd. Fairy Q.

ACCOLENT. n. f. [accolens, Lat.] He that inhabits near a place;

a borderer. Dict.

ACCOMMODABLE. adj. [accommodabilis, Lat.] That which may be fitted; with the particle is.

As there is infinite variety in the circumstances of persons, things, actions, times and places; so we must be furnished with such general rules as are accommodable to all this variety, by a wise judgment and discretion. Watts's Logic.

To ACCOMMODATE. v. a. [accommodare, Lat.]

1. To supply with conveniences of any kind.

I shall three,

Three thousand confident, in act as many;

For three performers are the file, when all

The rest do nothing; with this word stand, stand,

Accommodate by the place, (more charming

With their own indolence, which could have turn'd

A distast to a Lance) gilded pale looks. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

2. With the particle it, to adapt, to fit, to make consistent with;

He had altered many things, not that they were not natural before, but that he might accommodate himself to the age in which he lived. Dryden on Dramatic Portraits.

'Twas his misfortune to light upon an hypothesis, that could not be accommodate to the nature of things, and human affairs;

his principles could not be made agree with that constitution and order which God hath settled in the world. Locke.

ACCOMMODATE. adj. [accommodatus, Lat.] Suitable, fit; used sometimes with the particle for, but more frequently with to.

They are so acted and directed by nature, as to cast their eyes in such places as are most accommodate for the exclusion of their young, and where there is food ready for them so soon as they be hatched. Key on the Creation.

In these effects, we examine the why, the what, and the how,

of things, and propose means accommodate to the end. L'Estrange.

God did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon them as that which was most proper and agreeable to him; but that he considered that it was most accom- modate to their present state and inclination. Till of Sermon.

To make agree to adjust one thing to another; with the particle to.

The full sports the shepherds showed, were full of such leaps and gambols, as being accord to the pipe which they bore in their mouths, even as they danced, made a right picture of their chief god Pan, and his companions the satyrs. Steele.
Her hands accord the lute's music to the voice; her painting heart danced to the music. Steele.

The lights and shades, whose well *accord*ed strife,

Gives all the strength and colour of our life. Pope.

TO ACCORD. v. n. To agree, to suit one with another; with the particle with.
Things are often spoke, and seldom meant;
But that my heart *accord*eth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereignty from his foe. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Several of the main parts of Moses's history, as concerning the flood, and the first fathers of the several nations of the world, do very well accord with the most ancient accounts of profane history. Tillemont.

ACCORD. n. f. [accord, Fr.]

1. A compact; an agreement.

If both are satisfy'd with this accord,

Swear by the laws of kinshipood on my sword. Dryden.

2. Concurrence, union of mind.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,

That I that lady to my spouse had won,

Accord of friends, consent of parents fought,

Adiance made, my happiness begun. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

They gathered themselves together, to fight with Joshua and Israel, with one accord. Joshua.

3. Harmony, symmetry, just correspondence of one thing with another.
Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and mutual harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution. Dryden's Discreetness.

4. Musical note.

Try if there were in one steeple two bells of unison, whether the striking of the one would move the other, more than if it were another accord. Bacon's Natural History.

We must not blame Apollo, but his lute,

If false accords from her false things be sent. David.

5. Voluntary motion.

Ne Guyon yet spoke word,

Till that they came unto an iron door,

Which to them open'd of its own accord. Fairy Queen.

Will you blame any man for doing that of his own accord, which all men should be compelled to do, that are not willing of themselves. Hesiod.

All animal subsistence, exposed to the air, turn alkaline of their own accords, and some vegetables, by heat, will not turn acid, but alkaline. Arctabot.

6. Action in speaking, correspondent to the words.

Thus, I am come to talk with thee.—

—No, not a word: how can I grace my talk,

Wanting a hand to give it that accent?

Shakepeare.

And prays he may in long accordance bide,

Wish that great worth which hath such wonders wrought.

Fairfax.

2. Conformity to something.

The only way of defining of sin, is, by the contrariety to the will of God; as of good, by the accordance with that will.

Hommond's Fanalistical.

ACCORDANT. adj. [accordant, Fr.]

Willing; in a good humour.

The prince discovered to Claudio, that he loved your niece my daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and infinitely break with you of it.

Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

ACCORDING prop. [from accord.]

1. In a manner suitable to, agreeably to, in proportion.

Our churches are places provided, that the people might there assemble themselves in due and decent manner, according to their several degrees and orders.

Hobbes.

Our zeal, then, should be according to knowledge. And what kind of knowledge? Without all question, first, according to the true, saving, evangelical knowledge. It should be according to the gospel, the whole gospel: not only according to its truths, but precepts: not only according to its free graces, but mercenary duties: not only according to its mysteries, but also its commandments.

Bryant's Sermons.

How much more noble is the fame that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to their beautiful lines of Sir John Denham, in his Poem on Fletcher's works.

Addison.

A man may, with prudence and a good conscience, approve of the professed principles of one party more than the other, according as he thinks they best promote the good of church and state.

Swift.

2. With regard to.

God made all things in number, weight, and measure, and gave them to be considered by us according to these properties which are inherent in created beings.

Hobbes on Time.

ACCORDINGLY. adv. [from accord.] Agreeably, suitably, conformably.

Unah, thou'lt said to have a stubborn soul,

That apprehends no further than this world;

And quarrel it thy life accordingly.

Shakespeare.

As the actions of men are of sundry different kinds, to the laws thereof must accordingly be distinguished.

Hobbes.

Wherever is so assured of the authority and sense of scripture, as to believe the doctrine of it, and to live accordingly, shall be saved.

Tiddys.

Mealy substantives, fermented turn four. Accordingly, given to a weak child, they still retain their nature; for bread will give the child a cold.

Abbott on Aliments.

ACQUAINT. v. a. [acquiesce, Fr.] To speak to first; to address; to salute.

You mistake, knight: acquaint her, front her, board her, woo her, adul her.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,

With soothing words renewed, him thus acquaint.

Milton.

I acquaint him: I said, I sought,

And, with a loving force, to Phœbus brought.

Dryden.

ACQUAINTABLE. adj. [from acquaint.] Easy of access; familiar.

They were both indubitable, strong, and high-minded men, yet of sweet and acquaintable nature, almost equally delighting in the society and affluence of dependents and followers.

Hobbes.

ACCOUNT. n. f. [from the old French account, from comptare, Lat. originally written account, which see; but, by gradually inflecting the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expenses; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I thought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honesty.

Shakespeare.

When my young master has once got the skill of keeping accounts [which is a business of reason more than arithmetic] perhaps it will not be amiss, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concernsments.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold this have I found, with the Preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account.

Ecclesiasticus.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning. Value, or estimation.

For the care that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolks, was in least account with them: but the greatest and principal fear was for the holy temple.

2 Maccab. xv. 15.

That good affection, which things of smaller account have once let on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher.

Hobbes, &c. v. §. 3.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of knife, and yet have never touched a pencil, than of the opinion given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden's Tragedy.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice.

Addison.

4. Distinction, dignity, rank.

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing Eumæus, and speaking of him in the second person: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction.

Pope's Odyssey.

5. A reckoning verified by finding the value of a thing equal to what was accounted.

Considering the usual motives of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and ambition, I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three.

Swift's Address to Parliament.

6. A reckoning referred to, or furnished upon any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard, consideration, value. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on my account.

Plutarch, i. 8.

This must be always remembered, that nothing can come into the account of recreation, that is not done with delight.

Luthe.

In matters where his judgment led him to oppose men on a public account, he would do it vigorously and heartily.

Herbert.

The assertion is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the person of Abraham, the father of the faithful; who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced.

Adam.

These tribunals, a year or two after their institution, kindled great dissensions between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman, whom the latter had impeached.

Swift.

Nothing can recommend itself to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our present, or is a means to assure to us a future happiness.

Seneca.

Scipio says he does not think on this account.

Addison.

7. A narrative, relation; in this use it may seem to be derived from center, Fr. a tale, a narration.

8. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents.

Matt. xix. 2, 21.

9. The relation and reasons of a transaction given to a person in authority.

Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afraid! What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God, who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender.

10. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account, how it came to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them to contrary.

Luthe.

If being in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power to too, and impossible to be inherited.

Luthe.

11. An opinion concerning things previously established.

I have been delighted to join with the forces at sea, these being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats to transport the land-forces, under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas.

Bayly's Congratulations on War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes, upon the fight of a swallow, made account that summer was at hand, and away went his flur too.

L'Esrange.

12. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour, as that of any other person to which they themselves were not actually eyewitnesses, they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith, and of right reason, to give credit to this history.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

13. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action brought against a man, that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as, a bailiff toward his master, a guardian to his ward.

Cowell.

To ACCOUNT. v. n. [See ACCOUNT.]

1. To esteem, to think, to hold in opinion.

That also was accounted a land of giants.

Deut.

2. To

2. To reckon, to compute.

The calendar months are likewise arbitrarily and unequally fettered by the fame power, by which months we, to this day, account, and they measure, and make up, that which we call the Julian year.

Helder on Time.

3. To give an account, to assign the causes; in which sense it is followed by the particle for.

If any one should ask, why our general continued so easy to the last? I know no other way to account for it, but by that unmeasurable love of wealth, which his best friends allow to be his predominant passion.

Swift.

4. To make up the reckoning; to answer for practices.

Then thou shalt feel him plung'd when least he fears,
At once accounting for his deep arrears.

Dryden.

They have no uneasy prefaces of a future reckoning, wherein the pleasures they now taste, must be accounted for; and may, perhaps, be outweighed by the pains, which shall then lay hold of them.

Atterbury.

5. To appear as the medium by which any thing may be explained.

Such as have a faulty circulation through the lungs, ought to eat very little at a time; because the increase of the quantity of fresh chyle, must make that circulation still more uneasy; which, instead, is the case of consumptive and some asthmatic persons, and accounts for the symptoms they are troubled with after eating.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

6. To assign to, with the particle to.

For many years, really accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds to the king's coffers: and it was, in truth, the only project that was accounted to his own service.

Ciarendon.

7. To hold in esteem.

Silver was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon. Chron.
ACCOUNTABLE, adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be required; who must answer for: followed by the particle to before the person, and for before the thing.

Accountable to none.

But to my conscience and my God alone. Oldham.
Thinking themselves excused from standing upon their own legs, or being accountable for their own conduct, they very seldom trouble themselves with enquiries. Lake.

The good magistrate will make no distinction; for the judgment is God's; and he will look upon himself as accountable at his bar for the equity of it.

Atterbury.

ACCOUNTANT, adj. [from account.] Accountable to; responsible for.

His office is so, as it appears

Accountant to the law upon that pain. Shakespeare.

I love her roo,

Not out of absolute lust (though, peradventure,

I lend accountant for as great a sin)

But partly led to diet my revenge. Shakespeare.

ACCOUNTANT, n. f. [See ACCOMPANY.] A computer; a man skilled or employed in accounts.

The different compute of divers rates; the short and irreconcilable years of some; the exceeding error in the natural frame of others; and the false deductions of ordinary accountants in most.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ACCOUNT-BOOK, n. f. A book containing accounts.

I would endeavour to comfort myself upon the loss of friends, as I do upon the loss of money; by turning to my account-book, and seeing whether I have enough left for my support.

Swift.

ACCOUNTING, n. f. [from account.] The act of reckoning, or making up of accounts.

This method faithfully observed, must keep a man from breaking, or running behind hand in his spiritual estate; which, without frequent accounting, he will hardly be able to prevent.

South's Sermons.

To ACCOUNT, v. a. [accompt, Fr.] To join; to link together.

He sent a solemn embassy to treat a peace and league with the king; accounting it with an article in the nature of a request. Bacon.

To ACCOUNTAGE, v. a. [obsolete. See COURAGE.] To animate.

That forward pair the ever would assuage,
When they would strive due reason to exceed;
But that same forward twin would accountage,
And of her plenty add unto her need. Fairy Queen.

To ACCOUNT, v. a. [See To COURT.] To entertain with courtesy, or courtesy; a word now not in use.

Who all this while were at their wanton rest,

Accounting each her friend with lavish feast. Fairy Queen.

To ACCOUTRE, v. a. [accoutre, Fr.] To dress, to equip.

Is it for this they study? to grow pale,

And miss the pleasures of a glorious meal?

For this, in rags accoutred are they seen,

And made the may-game of the public spleen? Dryden.

ACCOUTREMENT, n. f. [accoutrement, Fr.] Dress, equipage, turniture relating to the person; trappings, ornaments.

I profess myself to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

I have seen the pope officiate at St. Peter's, where, for two hours together, he was buled in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them. Addison.

How gay with all th' accoutrements of war,

The Britons come, with gold well-fraught they come. Phil.
Christianity is lost among them, in the trappings and accoutrements of it; with which, instead of adorning religion, they have strangely disguised it, and quite stilled it in the crowd of external rites and ceremonies. Tillotson.

ACCRETION, n. f. [accretio, Lat.] The act of growing to another, so as to encrease it.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon.

The changes seem to be effected by the exhaling of the moisture, which may leave the tinging corpuscles more dense, and something augmented by the accretion of the oily and earthy parts of that moisture. Newton's Optics.

Infants support abstinence worst, from the quantity of aliment consumed in accretion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ACCRETIVE, adj. [from accretion.] Growing; that which by growth is added.

If the motion be very flow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants and animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial; and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Gloss. Script. Scient.

To ACCROUCH, v. a. [acroucher, Fr.] To draw to one as with a hook; to gripe; to draw away by degrees what is another's.

ACCROACHMENT, n. f. [from acrouach.] The act of accroaching.

To ACCRUE, v. n. [from the participle acru, formed from acrescere, Fr.]

1. To accrue to, to be added to; as, a natural production or effect, without any particular respect to good or ill.

The Son of God, by his incarnation, hath changed the manner of that personal subsistence; no alteration thereby accreting to the nature of God. Hesler.

2. To be added, as an advantage or improvement, in a sense inclining to good rather than ill; in which meaning it is more frequently used by later authors.

From which compact there arising an obligation upon every one, so to convey his meaning, they accrue also a right to every one, by the same signs, to judge of the sense or meaning of the person so obliged to express himself. South's Sermons.

Let the evidence of such a particular miracle be never so bright and clear, yet it is still but particular; and mult therefore want that kind of force, that degree of influence, which accrues to a standing general proof, from its having been tried or approved, and consented to, by men of all ranks and capacities, of all tempers and interests, of all ages and nations.

Atterbury.

3. To append to, or arise from; as, an ill consequence. This sense seems to be less proper.

His scholar Aristotle, as in many other particulars, so likewise in this, did justly oppose him, and became one of the authors; choosing a certain benefit, betwixt the hazard that might accrue from the disrespect of ignorant persons. Wilk. Math. Diss.

4. In a commercial sense, to be produced, or arise; as, profits.

The yearly benefit, that, out of those his works, accrue to her majesty, amounteth to one thousand pounds. Carver's Bos v.

The great profits which have accrued to the duke of Florence from his free port, have fed several of the states of Italy on the same subject. Addison.

5. Sometimes to follow, as loss; but less properly.

The benefit or loss of such a trade accruing to the government, until it comes to take root in the nation. Temple's M. f.

ACCRUITION, n. f. [from accruere, or lying down to, Lat.] The ancient posture of leaning at meals.

It will appear, that accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by very many nations.

To ACCUBARE, v. a. [accubare, Lat.] To lie at the table, according to the ancient manner. Dill.

To ACCUMULATE, v. a. [from accumulo, Lat.] To heap one thing upon another; to pile up, to heap together. It is used either literally, as, to accumulate money, or, figuratively, as, to accumulate merit or wickedness.

If thou dost flatter her, and torture me,

Never pray more; abandon all remorse;

On horrors head horrors accumulate;

For nothing can't thou to damnation add. Shakespeare.

Crush'd by imaginary treason's weight,

Which too much merit did accumulate. Sir John Denham.

ACCUMULATION, n. f. [from accumulo.]

1. The act of accumulating.

Some, perhaps, might otherwise wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering, or killing of one favour upon another. Wotton.

One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,

For quick accumulation of renown,

Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

2. The

2. The fear of being accumulated.

By the regular returns of it in some people, and their freedom from it after the morbid matter is exhausted, it looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of it, as of other humors in the body, growing perhaps on some people as corn.

Arbutnot on Diet.
ACCUMULATIVE. adj. [from accumulate.]

1. That which accumulates.

2. That which is accumulated.

If the injury meet not with meekness, it then acquires another accumulative guilt, and stands unfavorable not only for its own positive ill, but for all the accidental, which it causes in the sufferer.

Government of the Tongue.
ACCUMULATOR. n. f. [from accumulate.] He that accumulates; a gatherer or heaper together.

Injuries may fall upon the passive man, yet there would be no bruils and quarrels, the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries; which demonstrates how unjustly meekness is charged with so much as accidental production of them. Ducay's Piety.

ACCURACY. n. f. [from accurate, Lat.] Exactness, nicety.
The man who hath the stupid ignorance, or hardened effrontery to insult the revealed will of God; or the petulant conceit to turn it into ridicule; or the arrogance to make his own perceptions the measure of the Divinity; or, at best, that can collate a text, or quote an authority, with an insipid accuracy; or demoralize a plain proposition, in all the formality of A's and B's; these now are the only men worth mentioning.

Dr. any.
We consider the uniformity of the whole design, accuracy of the calculations, and skill in retorting and comparing passages of ancient authors.

Arbutnot on Coins.
ACCURATE. adj. [from accuratus, Lat.]

1. Exact, as opposed to negligence or ignorance, applied to person.

2. Exact, without defect or failure, applied to things.

No man living has made more accurate trials than Rousseau, that brightest ornament of France. Cassan.

ACCURATELY. adv. [from accurate.] In an accurate manner; exactly, without error, nicely.

The fin of incidence is either accurate, or very nearly, in a given ratio to the sine of refraction. Newt. Opt.

[That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of its system, is above the tortuous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

ACCURATENESS. n. f. [from accurate.] Exactness, nicety.

But sometime after, supposing that in making this observation I had not determined the diameter of the sphere with sufficient accuracy, I repeated the experiment. Newt. Opt.

TO ACCUSE. v. a. [from accusare, Lat.] To doom to misery; to involve misery upon any one.

As if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had so assigned it, that it should never shine to give light in things concerning our duty any way towards him. Hosker.

ACCUSED. part. adj.

1. That which is curied or doomed to misery.

'Tis the most certain sign the world's accused,
That the best things corrupted are all worst. Danham.

2. That which deserves the curse; execrable; hateful; detestable; and, by consequence, wicked; malignant.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our sultering country,
Under a hand accus'd! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The chief part of the misery of wicked men, and those accused spirits, the devil, is this, that they are of a disposition contrary to God.

They, like the feed from which they sprung, accuse!
Against the gods immortal hatred nurs'd. Dryden's Ovid.

ACCUSABLE. adj. [from the verb accuse.] That which may be censured; blamable; culpable.

There would be a manifest defect, and her improvisation justly accus'd; if animals, so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler.

B. own's Vulgar Errors.

ACCUSATION. n. f. [from accuse.]

1. The act of accusing.

Thou art in mutual accusation spent
Thou fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning,
And of their vain contest appear'd no end. Milton.

2. The charge brought against any one by the accuser.

These accusations, and these grievous crimes
Committed by your person, and your followers.

Richard II.
All accusation, in the very nature of the thing, still supposing, and being founded upon some law: for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, I am sure there ought to be no accusation. South.

N^o III.

3. In the sense of the courts.

A declaration of some crime preferred before a competent judge, by the intervention of an accuser lawfully made, in order to inflict some judgment on the guilty person. Asyl. Pater.
ACCUSATIVE. adj. [from accusare, Lat.] A term of grammar, signifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCUSATORY. adj. [from accuse.] That which produceth or containeth an accusation.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth in the accusatory libel, some certain and definite time. Asyl. Pater.

TO ACCUSE. v. a. [from accuse, Lat.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of before the subject of accusation.

He stripp'd the bears-foot of its leasty growth;
And, calling western winds, accus'd the spring of Bosh. W. Glen's Virg.

The professors are accus'd of all the ill practices which may seem to be the ill consequences of their principles. Arbuth.

2. It sometimes admits the particle for.

Never stand up a leg of a fowl at supper, while there is a cat or dog in the house, that can be accus'd for running away with it; but, if there happen to be neither, you must lay it upon the rats, or a strange greyhound. Swift.

3. To blame or censure, in opposition to applause or justification.

Their conscience bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another. Rom. ii. 15.

Your valour would your flesh too much accuse,
And therefore, like themselves, they prices choose.

Dryden's Tynant's Love.

ACCUSER. n. f. [from accuse.] He that brings a charge against another.

There are some persons forbidden to be accusers, on the score of their sex, as women; others, of their age, as pupils and infants; others, upon the account of some crimes committed by them; and others, on the score of some filthy lure to people to gain thereby; others, on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrons; and others, through a suspicion of calumny, as having once already given false evidence; and, lastly, others on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty aurei. Arbuth.

—That good man, who drank the poisonous draught,
With mind serene, and could not with to fee

His vile accusers drink as deep as he. Dryd. Juu.

If the person accus'd maketh his innocence plain to appear upon his trial, the accuser is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent person is quadsuply recompens'd. Galliot's Travels.

TO ACCUSTOM. v. a. [from accustomare, Fr.] To habituate, to enure, with the particle to. It is used chiefly of persons.

How shall we breathe in other air
Less pure, accus'd to immortal fruit?

It has been some advantage to accusom one's self to books of the same edition. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

ACCUSTOMABLE. adj. [from accustomare.] Of long custom or habit; habitual; customary.

Animals even of the same original, extraction, and species, may be diversified by accusomable residence in one climate, from what they are in another. Holt's Origin of Mankind.

ACCUSTOMABLY. adv. According to custom.

Touching the king's fines accusomably paid for the purchasing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them, and do therefore think that they also grew up with the chancery.

Bacon's Alienation.

ACCUSTOMANCE. n. f. [from accustomare, Fr.] Custom, habit, use.

Through accusomance and negligence, and perhaps some other causes, we neither feel it in our own bodies, nor take notice of it in others.

ACCUSTOMABLY. adv. In a customary manner; according to common or customary practice.

ACCUSTOMARY. adj. [from accustomare.] Usual, practised; according to custom.

ACCUSTOMED. adj. [from accustomare.] According to custom; frequent; usual.

Look how the rubs her hands.—It is an accusom'd action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

ACE. n. f. [At not only signified a piece of money, but any integer, from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Thus At signified the whole inheritance. Arbutnot on Coins.

1. An unit; a single point on cards or dice.

When lots are thrust together in a lap, urn or pitcher; or if a man blindfold casts a die, what reason in the world can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a six. Swift.

2. A small quantity.

He will not bate an ace of absolute certainty; but however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it must go for an indisputable truth. Government of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world shall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ACERHALOUS. adj. [ἀκίφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Diit.

ACERB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughness, as most fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACERBITY. n. f. [acerbitas, Lat.]

1. A rough four taste.

2. Applied to men, sharpness of temper; feverity.

True it is, that the talents for criticism, namely, smartness, quick censure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, seem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pepr.

TO ACERVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Diit.

ACERVATION. n. f. [from acervo.] The act of heaping together.

ACERVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Diit.

ACERVENT. adj. [acerbens, Lat.] That which has a tendency to sourness or acidity.

The same persons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a sufficient quantity of ascetics; as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ACETOSE. adj. That which has in it acids or vinegar. Diit.

ACETO'SITY. n. f. [from acetos.] The state of being acetose, or of containing vinegar. Diit.

ACETOUS. adj. [from acetum, vinegar, Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar, four.

Raisins, which consist chiefly of the juice of grapes, impurified in the skins or hulls by the avolation of the superfluous moisture through their pores, being distilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an actus spirit. Boyle.

ACHE. n. f. [ace, Sax. æþ, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one syllable; the primitive manner being preserved chiefly in poetry, for the sake of the measure.]

I'll rack thee with old cramps;

Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar, Shakespeare.

That beats shall tremble at thy din.

A coming show'r thy shooting corns preface,

Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage. Swift.

TO ACHIE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our senses are dulled and spent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fix'd upon any difficultly discerned object. Glanville.

TO ACHIEVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform, to finish a design prosperously.

Our souls, my friends, are crown'd with sure success:

The greater part perform'd, achieve the less. Dryden.

2. To gain, to obtain.

Experience is by industry achiev'd.

And perfected by the swift course of time.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,

If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakespeare's Taming the Shrew.

Thou hast achiev'd our liberty, confin'd

Within hell-gates till now. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And show all the spoils by valiant kings achiev'd,

Granting nations by their arms relief'd. Prior.

AN ACHIEVER. n. f. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

AN ACHTIVEMENT. n. f. [achievement, Fr.]

1. The performance of an action.

From every coast that heaven walks about,

Have thither come the noble martial crew,

'Tis famous hard achievments still pursue. Fairy Queen.

2. The elutchon, or ensigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife

Immortal, be the business of my life;

And in thy lane, the dusty spoils among,

High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung;

Rank'd with my champions bucklers, and below

With arms revers'd, th' achievments of the foe. Dryden.

Achievement, in the first sense, is derived from achieve, as it signifies to perform; in the second, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

ACHOR. n. f. [acher, Lat. ἀχρη, Gr. suffer.]

A species of the herpes; it appears with a crusty scab, which causes an itching on the surface of the head, occasioned by a salt sharp serum oozing through the skin. Quincy.

ACID. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, sharp.

Wild trees last longer than garden trees; and in the same kind, those whose fruit is acid, more than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon's Natural History, N^o 585.

Acid, or sour, proceeds from a salt of the same nature, without mixture of oil; in austere tastes the oily parts have not disentangled themselves from the salts and earthy parts; such is the taste of unripe fruits. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Liquids and substances are called acids, which being composed of pointed particles, affect the taste in a sharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with syrup of violets, which it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that syrup green. Quincy.

ACIDITY. n. f. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taste; sharpness; sourness.

Fishes, by the help of a dissolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meats, skin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor; and yet this liquor manifests nothing of acidity to the taste. Ray on the Creation.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the case of acidity or sourness. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ACIDNESS. n. f. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACIDULATE. n. f. [that is, aque acide.]

Medicinal springs impregnated with sharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum-springs are. Quincy.

The acidule, or medical springs, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than usual; and even the ordinary springs, which were before clear, fresh and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with sulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake lasts. Woodward's Natural History, p. 4.

TO ACIDULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a slight degree.

The muriatric icury is evidently a diet of fresh unaltered things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient substances, four milk, butter, and acid fruits. Arbutnot.

TO ACKNOWLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it seems, between the Latin and English, from agnosce, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon, cnapan, to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or person in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica,
In place of lord Bassanio and myself. Shakespeare.

None that acknowledge God, or providence,

Their souls eternity did ever doubt. Sir John Davies.

2. To confess; as a fault.

For I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me. Psalms li. 3.

3. To own; as, a benefit; sometimes with the particle to before the person conferring the benefit.

His spirit

Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Par. Lost.

In the first place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the assistance he has given me in the beginning, and the prosecution of my present studies. Dryden.

ACKNOWLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received.

He has shewn his hard acknowledging and ungrateful, compassionate and hard acknowledg'd; but, at the bottom, fickle and self-interested. Dryden's Virgil.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. n. f. [from acknowledge.]

1. Confession of any character in another, as existence, superiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a necessary connexion and chain of causes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; because it carries every thinking man to an original of every successive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Confession of the truth of any position.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the christian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hosier.

3. Confession of a fault.

Confession of a benefit received; gratitude.

4. Act of attestation to any confession; such as homage.

There may be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never established, nor any acknowledgment of subjection made. Spencer's State of Ireland.

The second is an acknowledgment to his majesty for the leave of fishing upon his coasts; and though this may be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our side and custom on theirs, not determined or extinguished by any treaty between us, it may with justice be insisted on. Temple's Miscellaneous.

ACME. n. f. [ἀκμῆ, Gr.]

The height of any thing; more especially used to denote the height of a distemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arctos, the beginning or first attack. 2. Anthesis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declension of the distemper. Quincy.

AC'LOTHIST. n. f. [ἀκλωθιστής, Gr.] One of the lowest order in the Romish church, whose office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

In the Romish communion it is duty, according to the papal law, when the bishop flings mass, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to see that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the accolyth, to keep the sacred vessels, &c. Ayliffe's Pars gen.

ACCO-

ACOLYTE. n. f. The flame with ACOLYTHIST.

ACONITE. n. f. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfs-bane, but commonly used in poetical language for poison in general.

Our land in from the rage of tigers freed,
Nor nourishes the lion's angry feed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, refus'd. Dryden.
Despair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others, love,
That poison never yet withstood,
Does nourish mine, and turns to blood. Gloverville.

ACORN. n. f. [Æcern, Sax. from æ, an oak, and corn, corn or grain; that is, the grain of the oak.]

The feed or fruit born by the oak.
What roots old-age contradicted into errors, and how such as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become indelible. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornsels and bramble-berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden's Ovid.
He that is nourish'd by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himself. Locke.

ACOSTICKS. n. f. [Acoustica of akou, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of sounds. Quincy.
2. Medicines to help the hearing.

TO ACQUAINT. v. a. [acquaint, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to persons or things.

We that acquaint ourselves with every zone,
And pass the tropics, and behold each pole;
When we come home, or to ourselves unknown,
And unacquainted fill with our own foul, Devins.

There with thee, new welcome taking,
Like fortunes may her soul acquaint;
With thee there clad in radiant thence. Milton.

Before a man can speak on any subject, it is necessary to be acquainted with it. Locke on Education.

Acquaint yourselves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domestic and national; things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourselves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own spirits. Patiss's Logic.

2. To inform.

But for some other reasons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
I have lately received a letter from a friend in the country, whom he acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought down particular words and phrases, which were never before in those parts. Tatler.

ACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [acquaint, Fr.]

1. The state of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge.
It is applied as well to persons as things, with the participle with.

Nor was his acquaintance less with the famous poets or his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man lessens upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we seldom hear of a celebrated person, without a catalogue of some notorious weaknesses and infirmities. Addison, Spectator, N° 256.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God: let us try to resemble him. We must be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance.
Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Familiar knowledge, simply without a proposition.

Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from my tongue,
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear. Shakspeare.
This keeps the understanding long in converse with an object, and long converse brings acquaintance. South.

In what manner he lived with those who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to say. Atterbury.

3. A fight or initial knowledge, short of friendship, as applied to persons.

I hope I am pretty near seeing you, and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance; because if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long novice of acquaintance must precede the vows of friendship. Bolingbroke.

4. The person with whom we are acquainted; him of whom we have some knowledge, without the intimacy of friendship.

In this sense, the plural is, in some authors, acquaintances, in others acquaintance.

But she, all vow'd unto the red-cross knight,
His wand'ring peril closely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dead heart with anguish did torment. F. Queen.

That young men travel under some tutor, I allow well, so that he be such a one that may be able to tell them, what ac- quaintances they are to seek, what exercises or discipline the place yieldeth. Bacon.

This, my lord, has justly acquired you as many friends, as there are persons who have the honour to be known to you; meer acquaintance you have none, you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

We see he is ashamed of his nearest acquaintances.

Boyle against Bentley

ACQUAINTED. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;

That war or peace, or both at once, may be

As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakspeare Henry IV.

ACQUAINT. n. f. [acquies, Fr. from acquiesce, written by some acquies, with a view to the word acquiesce, or acquies.] Attachment, acquisition; the thing gained.

New acquies are more burden than strength. Bacon.

Mud, reposed near the outlet of those rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the sea, and preserving these shells as trophies and signs of its new acquies and encroachments. Woodward.

TO ACQUIESCE. v. n. [acquiesce, Fr. acquiescere, Lat.] To rest in, or remain satisfied with, without opposition or discontent.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wishing, nor un-active complacency in; nor, lastly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can pass before God for a man's willing of such things; and, consequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquiesce in an airy ungrounded persuasion, that they will those things which really they do not will, they fall thereby into a gross and fatal delusion. South.

He hath employed his transcendent wisdom and power, that by these he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they ultimately acquiesce. Gravel.

ACQUIESCENCE. n. f. [from acquiesce.]

1. A silent appearance of content, distinguished on one side from avowed content, on the other from opposition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought most averse from it, there appeared any sign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquiescence in all the bishops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, rest, content.

Many indeed have given over their pursuits after fame, either from disappointment, or from experience of the little pleasure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldness of old-age; but seldom from a full satisfaction and acquiescence in their present enjoyments of it. Addison.

3. Submission.

The greatest part of the world take up their persecutions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full ac- quiescence in the word of those, who shall represent things to them under these characters. South.

ACQUIRABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Those rational instincts, the connate principles engraven in the human soul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational consequence and argumentation, yet they seem to be inscribed in the very crasis and texture of the soul, antecedent to any acquisition by industry or the exercise of the discursive faculty in man. Hale.

If the powers of cogitation and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it necessarily follows, that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.

TO ACQUIRE. v. a. [acquirere, Fr. acquirere, Lat.] To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or transmitted by inheritance.

I've done enough. A lower place not well,

May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius,

Better to leave undone, than by our deed

Acquire too high a fame, while he, we serve, 's away. Shakspeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

ACQUIRED. particip. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's self, in opposition to those things which are bestowed by nature.

We are seldom at ease, and free enough from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasiness, out of that flock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

AN ACQUIRER. n. f. [from acquire.] The person that acquires a gain.

AN ACQUIREMENT. n. f. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly used in opposition to the gifts of nature.

These his acquirements, by industry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature. Huyard on Edward VI.

By a content and acquiescence in every species of truth, we embrace

embrace the shadow thereof: or so much as may palliate its just and substantial acquirements. Deacon's Fugate Errors.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of such a taste as that I am here speaking of. The faculty itself, in some degree, be born with us. Adison.

ACQUISITION. n. f. [acquirere, Lat.] The act of acquiring or gaining. Adison.

1. The act of acquiring or gaining. Adison.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compass the possession of these things, is by his own industrious acquirement of them. South.

2. The thing gained; acquirement. South.

Great art, all acquirement
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before Your royal feet. Deacon's Fugate Errors.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when one prince has hovering like a vulture to dismember its dying state; by which means it becomes only an acquisition to some mighty monarchy, without hopes of a resurrection. South.

ACQUISITIVE. adj. [acquisitivus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained. South.

He died not in his acquirement, but in his native soil; nature herself, as it were, claiming a final interest in his body, when fortune had done with him. South.

ACQUIT. v. a. [See ACQUIT.] Acquirement; attainment; gain. South.

His servant he with new acquit
Of true experience from this great event,
With peace and consolation hath dismiss'd. Adison.

TO ACQUIT. v. a. [acquiesce, Fr. See QUIT.]

1. To let free. South.

Ne do I with (for wishing were but vain)
To be acquit from my continual sin;
But joy her thrall for ever to remain,
And yield for pledge my poor captured heart. South.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to absolve; opposed to condemn, either imply with an accusative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime. South.

If I sin, then thou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the language of the most and best he is already acquitted, and, by the sentence of some, condemned. South.

He that judges, without informing himself to the utmost that he is capable, cannot acquit himself of judging amiss. South.

Neither reflect upon the memory of his majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. South.

3. To clear from any obligation. South.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in some measure, acquitted myself of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a similar sense, it is said, The man hath acquitted himself well; that is, he discharged his duty. South.

ACQUITMENT. n. f. [from acquit.] The state of being acquitted; or act of acquitting. South.

The word imports properly an acquittal or discharge of a man upon some precedent accusation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cause had thereupon. South.

ACQUITTING. n. f. in law, is a deliverance and setting free from the suspicion or guiltiness of an offence. South.

The constant design of both these orators, was to drive some one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accused person, a persuasive to war, and the like. South.

TO ACQUITANCE. v. a. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in present use. South.

But if black scandal and foul-faced reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek endurance shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shak. Rich. III.

ACQUITANCE. n. f. [from acquit.]

1. The act of discharging from a debt. South.

But soon shall find
Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
Justice shall not return, as beauty, scorn'd. Paradise Lost.

2. A writing testifying the receipt of a debt. South.

You can produce acquittances
For such a sum, from special officers
Of Charles his father. Shaksp. Love's Labour Lost.

They quickly pay their debt, and then Take no acquittances, but pay again. Dunne.

They had got a worse trick than that; the same man bought and sold to himself, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbutnot.

ACRE. n. f. [Acre, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thousand eight hundred and forty square yards. Dick.

Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. Shakspere's K. Lear.

ACRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taste; bitter, so as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taste. South.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the sharp particles of the first, being involved in a greater quantity of oil than those of the last. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ACRIMONIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; sharp; corrosive. South.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itself, then whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds to it, must be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Conjunctions.

ACRIMONY. n. f. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpness, corrosiveness. South.

These be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, low-thistles, spurge, &c. The cause may be an incipient of putrefaction; for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire, congealable again by cold into brittle globes or crystals, soluble in water, so as to disappear, not inflammable, and having something in it which affects the organs of taste with a sensation of acrimony or sharpness. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Sharpness of temper, severity, bitterness of thought or language. South.

This made John the Baptist set himself, with so much acrimony and indignation, to baile the Jewish arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

ACRIDITY. n. f. [from acrid.] An acid taste; a biting heat on the palate. South.

Green vitriol, mixed with some rays of a pale blue, from the same place; with its shining and sweetenings, is joined some acridities. Grew's Dispensary.

ACRIMONIOUS. adj. [acrimonia, Gr.] Of or pertaining to acrimony; the opposite of lenient. South.

ACRIMONIOUS. n. f. [Acrimonia Gr.] Aristotle's lectures on the metaphysics and principal parts of philosophy, to whom none but friends and scholars were admitted by him. South.

ACRONOMICAL. adj. [from ἀκρον, Gr.] Importing the beginning of night; A term of astronomy, applied to the stars, of which the rising or setting is called acronical, when they either appear above or sink below the horizon at the time of sunset. It is opposed to crepuscular. South.

ACRONOMICAL. n. f. [from ἀκρον, Gr.] At the acronomical time. South.

He is temperate in the summer, when he rises heliacally, and rainy in the winter, when he rises acronomically. Dryden's Euclid.

ACROSPICE. n. f. [from ἀκρον, Gr.] A shoot or sprout from the end of seeds, before they are put in the ground. South.

Many corns will split, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream; and most of those which come without extraordinary pains, will send forth their substance in an acrospice. Arbutnot.

ACROSTIC. part. adj. Having sprouts, or having shot out. South.

For want of turning, when the malt is spread on the floor, it comes and ferments at both ends, which is called acrostic, and is fit only for wine. Arbutnot.

ACROSTIC. adv. [from ἀκρον, Gr.] or the French à, as it is used in a traverse, and crois. Atwart, laid over something so as to cross it. South.

The harp hath the concave not along the strings, but acrostic the strings; and the harp hath the sound so melting and prolonged as the Irish harp. Bacon.

This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms acrostic,
He stood, reflecting on his country's loss. Dryden.

There is a set of arrians, who, by the help of several poles, which they lay acrostic each others shoulders, build them selves up into a kind of pyramid; so that you see a pile of men in the air of four or five rows rising one above another. Arbutnot.

ACROSTIC. n. f. [from ἀκρον, Gr.] A poem in which the first letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the person or thing on which the poem is written. South.

ACROSTIC. adj.

1. That which relates to an acrostic. South.

2. That which contains acrostics. South.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command
Some peaceful province in acrostic land:
I here thou may'st it wings display, and altars raise,
And torture one poor word ten thousand ways. Dryden.

ACROTERES, or ACROTERIA. n. f. [In architecture; from ἀκρον, Gr. the extremity of anybody.] Little pedestals without bases, placed at the middle and the two extremities of pediments, sometimes serving to support statues. South.

ACT

3. To practise the arts or duties of life ; to conduct one's self.

'Tisplain, that the who, for a kingdom now,
Would sacrifice her love, and break her vow,
Not out of love, but interest, act alone,
And would, ev'n in my arms, lie thinking of a throne.

Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

The desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts an abridgement of liberty. Lace.

The splendor of his office, is the token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears : and one of these ought constantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole course of his administration.

Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty to co-operate with this grace, vigorously to exert those powers, and act up to those advantages to which it redress us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To bear a borrowed character, as, a stage-player.

Honour and frame from no condition rise ;
Act well your part, there all the honour lies.

Pope's Essay on Man.

5. To counterfeit ; to feign by action.

His former trembling once again renew'd,
With acted fear the villain thus purfue'd.

Dryd. Æneid.

6. To produce effects in some passive subject.

Hence 'tis we wait the wound'rous cause to find
How body acts upon impactive mind. Garth's Dispensary.

The stomach, the intestines, the muscles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment ; besides, the chyle is not sucked, but squeezed into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the pum.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

7. To advance ; to put in motion ; to regulate the movements.

Most people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by strange and irrational changes. Saunders.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as false as Judas, and, in the whole course of their conversation, act, and are acted, not by devotion, but design. Saunders.

We suppose two distinct incommunicable consciousnesses acting the same body, the one constantly by day, the other by night ; and, on the other side, the same consciousness acting by intervals two distinct bodies. Lace.

Act. n. f. (action, Lat.)

1. Something done ; a deed ; an exploit, whether good or ill.

I've done enough. A lower place, not well,
May make too great an act : for learn this, Ælius,
Better to leave undone than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when he, we serve, 's away.

Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The conscious wretch must all his acts reveal ;
Loth to confess, unable to conceal ;
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death.

Dryd. Æneid.

2. Agency ; the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces
Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging ; but none human ;
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act ; and by them gather
Their several virtues and effects. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action ; the performance of exploits ; production of effects.

'Tis in much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many, as the sun is always carrying his light to some part or other of the world.

Dryden's Fables.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will and act, his word and work the same.

Prior.

4. The doing of some particular thing ; a step taken ; a measure executed.

That this act persuades me,
That his remission of the duke and her,
Is practice only. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

5. A state of action.

The seeds of herbs and plants at the first are not act, but in possibility that which they afterwards grow to be. Hobbes.

God alone excepted, who actually and everlastingly is what-ever he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which now he is not ; all other things besides are somewhat in possibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker.

Hooker.

Sure they're conscious
Of some intended mischief, and are fled
To put it into act. Dehnam's Sophy.

Dehnam's Sophy.

Her legs were huskin'd, and the left before ;
In act to bow, a silver bow the bore.

Dryd. Fables.

6. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt but the whole condition required by Christ, the repentance he came to preach, will, in that last scene of their last act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives. Harwood's Fundamentals.

Harwood's Fundamentals.

Five acts are the just measure of a play. Rifanment.

Rifanment.

7. A decree of a court of justice, or edict of a legislature.

They make edicts for usury to support usurers, repeal daily
No III.

Repeal daily

ACT

any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. Shakspeare's Cæsar.

Shakspeare's Cæsar.

You that are kings, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

8. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all those muters, which relate to judicial proceedings ; and being reduced into writing by a public notary, are recorded by the authority of the judge. Hyffes's Parergon.

Hyffes's Parergon.

ACTION, n. f. (action, Fr. action, Lat.)

1. The quality or state of acting, opposite to rest.

On noble English, th' t could entertain
With half their forces the full power of France ;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakspeare's Henry V.

Shakspeare's Henry V.

2. An act or thing done ; a deed.

This action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination instead of a good action, where that action may be done ; nay, so much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not seconded by a good action, the want of that action is made so much the more criminal and inexcusable. Saunders's Sermons.

Saunders's Sermons.

3. Agency, operation.

It is better, therefore, that the earth should move about its own center, and make those useful vicissitudes of night and day, than expose always the fame side to the action of the sun.

Bentley's Sermons.

He has settled laws, and laid down rules, conformable to which natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

4. The series of events represented in a fable.

This action should have three qualifications. First, it should be but one action ; secondly, it should be an entire action ; and, thirdly, it should be a great action. Addison.

Addison.

5. Gesticulation ; the accordance of the motions of the body with the words spoken ; a part of oratory.

—He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist ;
While he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakspeare's King John.

Shakspeare's King John.

Our orators are observed to make use of less gesture or action than those of other countries. Addison.

Addison.

6. [In law.] It is used with the preposition against before the person, and for before the thing.

Actions are personal, real, and mixt : action personal belongs to a man against another, by reason of any contract, offence, or cause, of like force with a contract or offence made or done by him or some other, for whose fault he is justly answerable. Action real is given to any man against another, that possesses the thing required or sued for in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt is that which lies as well against us for the thing which we seek, as against the person that hath it ; called mixt, because it hath a mixt respect both to the thing and to the person.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us ; as, a sum of money lawfully lent. Action penal is that which aims at some penalty or punishment in the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary : as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniously slain shall pursue the law against the murderer. Action mixt is that which seeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty also for the unjust detaining of the same.

Action upon the case, is an action given for redress of wrongs done without force against any man, by law not specially provided for.

Action upon the statute, is an action brought against a man upon breach of a statute.

Cruell.

There was never man could have a juster action against filthy fortune than I, since all other things being granted me, her blindness is the only left.

Sidney.

For our reward then,
First, all our debts are paid ; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments, against us quitted.

Ben. Jonson's Casimire.

7. In the plural, in France, the same as facts in England.

ACTIONABLE, adj. [from action.] That which admits an action in law to be brought against it ; punishable.

After he had been thus, as a man would think, quite extinguished, his process was formed ; whereby he was found guilty of nought else, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition. Hume's Final Speech.

Hume's Final Speech.

ACTIONARY, or ACTIONIST, n. f. [from action.] One that has a share in actions or stocks.

ACTION-TAKING, adj. Accustomed to resort by means of law ; litigious.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats, a filthy worsted-stocking knave ; a lily-livered action-taking knave. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

ACTIONATION, n. f. [from action, Lat.] Action quick and frequent.

Diels.

H T

To ACTIVATE, v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps used only by the author alleged.

As snow and ice, especially being holpen, and their cold activated by nire or salt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours: so it may be, it will turn wood or stiff clay into stone, in longer time. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ACTIVE, adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or quality of acting. These particles have not only a vis inertiae, accompanied with such passive laws of motion, as naturally result from that force, but also they are moved by certain active principles, such as is that of gravity, and that which causes fermentation, and the cohesion of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

2. That which acts, opposed to passive, or that which suffers. — When an even flame two hearts did touch, His office was indolently to sit Alston to passives, correspondency Only his subject was. Donne.

If you think that by multiplying the additaments in the same proportion, that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the passive will add more resistance than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon's Physical Remains.

3. Busy, engaged in action; opposed to idle or sedentary, or any state of which the duties are performed only by the manual power.

'Tis virtuous action that must praise bring forth, Without which, flow advice is little worth; Yet they who give good counsel, praise defective, Though in the active part they cannot serve. Devinism.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical. The world hath had in these men fresh experience, how dangerous such active errors are. Hobbes, Preface.

5. Nimble; agile; quick. Some bend the stubborn bow for victory; And some with darts their active lineaments try. Dryd. JEn.

6. In grammar. A verb active is that which signifies action, as does, teach. Clark's Latin Grammar.

ACTIVELY, adv. [from active.] In an active manner; busily; nimbly. In an active figuration; as the ward is used actively.

ACTIVENESS, n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness; nimbleness. 'Tis his a word more rarely used than activity.

What strange agility and activeness do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exercise? Hobbes's Mathematical Magick.

ACTIVITY, n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or persons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increases the activity of cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Our adversary will not be idle, though we are; he watches every turn of our soul, and incident of our life, and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

ACTOR, n. f. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts, or performs any thing. The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He, who writes an Encomium Nernis, if he does it heartily, is himself but a transcript of Nero in his mind, and would, no doubt, gladly enough see such pranks; as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himself. South's Sermons.

2. He that personates a character; a stage-player. Would you have seen Such an Herculean actor in the scene, And not this hydra? They must sweat no less To fit their properties, than t'express their parts. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

When a good actor doth his part present, In every act he our attention draws, 'That at the last he may find just applause. Dehsham. These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rain-bow; when the actor ceases to shine upon them, when he gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryd. Spanish Friar.

ACTRESS, n. f. [actrix, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing. Virgil has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actress in the Æneid; but the part the acts is very short, and none of the most admired circumstances of that divine work. Addis, Spect.

2. A woman that plays on the stage. We spirits have just such natures We had, for all the world, when human creatures; And therefore I that was an actress here, Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

ACTUAL, adj. [actualis, Fr.]

1. That which comprises action. In this dumber agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Still, there in pow'r before Once actual, now in body, and to dwell Habitual habitant. Addis. Paraisée L'2.

3. In act; not purely in speculation. For he that but conceives a crime in thought, Contracts the danger of an actual fault: Then what must he expect, that still proceeds To finish sin, and work up thoughts to deeds? Dryden's Juvenal.

ACTUALITY, n. f. [from actual.] The state of being actual. The actualities of these spiritual qualities is thus imprisoned, though their potentiality be not quite destroyed; and thus a crab, extended, impenetrable, pausive, distillable, unintelligent fullness is generated, which we call matter. Cervantes.

ACTUALLY, adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really. All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. Seneca.

Read one of the chronicles written by an author of this frame of mind, and you will think you were reading a history of the kings of Israel or Judah, whose the historians were actually inspired, and where, by a particular scheme of providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idleness, or the worship of the true God. Addis.

Though our temporal prospects should be full of danger, or though the days of sorrow should actually overtake us, yet still we must repose ourselves on God. Rogers.

ACTUALNESS, n. f. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

ACTUARY, n. f. [actuarius, Lat.] The reginer who computes the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppose the judge should fly, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the custody of them with himself: certainly, in this case, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Addis's Paraisée.

ACTUATE, adj. [from the verb To actualate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form clothing with matter, grew actualate into a third and distinct perception of practice. Smith.

To ACTUATE, v. a. [from ago, a actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate or encrease the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living spirit, and seems, by some vital irradiation, to be actualized into this lustre. Brown's vulgar Errata.

Such is every man, who has not actual d the grace given him, to the subduing of every reigning sin. Dods of Every. Men of the greatest abilities are most fixed with ambition; and, on the contrary, narrow and narrow minds are the least actualized by it. Addis.

Our passions are the furies which actualize the powers of our nature. Rogers.

ACTUATE, adj. [from ago.] That which hath strong powers of action; a word little used.

To ACUATE, v. a. [acuare, Lat.] To sharpen, to invigorate with any powers of sharpness.

ACULEATE, adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That which has a point or sting; prickly; that which terminates in a sharp point.

ACUTENESS, n. f. [Lat.] A sharp point; figuratively, quickness of intellect.

The word was much affected by the learned Artificers in common conversation, to signify genius or natural acumen. Pope's Dunciad.

ACUMINATED, particip. adj. Ending in a point; sharp-pointed. 'Tis is not acuminated and pointed, as in the rest, but scameth, as it were, cut off. Jewson's Finger E rear.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a small round acuminated tubercle, which hath not much pain, unless it be touched or rubbed, or otherwise exasperated by topics. Hijeman's Surgery.

ACUTE, adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point; opposed to obtus or blunt. Having the ideas of an obtuse and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal bases and between parallels, I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other, but cannot that way know whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; opposed to dull or stupid. The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts, and uncommon reflections, has started the notion of seeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the senses, vigorous; powerful in operation. Were our senses altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute disease. Any disease, which is attended with an increased velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days. Quins.

5. Acute accent; that which raises or sharpens the voice. Acute.

ACU'TELY, adv. [from acutus.] After an acute manner; sharply; it is used as well in the figurative as primitive sense.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there, and others, as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism. Locke.

ACU'TE'NESS, n. f. [from acutus, which fee.]

1. Sharpness.

2. Force of intellect.

They would not be so apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteness and penetration of their understanding. Locke.

3. Quickness and vigour of senses.

If eyes so framed could not view at once the hand and the hour plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteness; which, whilst it discovered the secret contrivance of the machine, made him lose its use. Locke.

4. Violence and speedy crisis of a malady.

We apply present remedies according to indications, respecting rather the acuteness of the disease, and precipitancy of the occasion, than the rising and setting of stars. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

5. Sharpness of sound.

This acuteness of sound will shew, that whilst, to the eye, the bees seem to be at rest, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very brisk motion, without which they could not strike the air. Boyle.

AD'ACTED, participle adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force; a word little used. Ditt.

AD'VICE, n. f. [advisum, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects, that are confident pretenders to certainty; as if, contrary to the advice, science had no friend but ignorance. Glanville's Serpils Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool, Darest thou apply that advice of the school; As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd; And science is not science till reveal'd? Dryd.

AD'GTO, n. f. [Italian.] A term used by musicians, to mark a new time.

ADAMANT, n. f. [adamans, Lat. from ad and δύμνω, Gr. that is invincibilis, impugnabile.]

1. A stone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardness.

So great a fear my name amongst them spread, That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel, And spurn in pieces poise of adamant. Shakspeare.

Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd, Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant, and gold. Milton.

Eternal Decrees, Who rule the world with absolute decrees, And write whatever time shall bring to pass, With pens of adamant, on plates of brass. Dryd.

2. The diamond.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the fabulous stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily deceived by an ordinary lapidist. Key on the Creation.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadstone.

Let him change his lodging from one end and part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Shakspeare's Folly.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!

But yet you draw not iron; for my heart

Is true as steel. Shakspeare.

ADAMANT'AN, adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,

And weaponless himself,

Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery

Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

Adamantine proof. Milton's Samson Agonistes.

This word occurs perhaps only in this passage.

ADAM'ANTINE, adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high

With adamantine columns, threats the sky. Dryd.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardness, indissolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree,

In funder rend adamantine chain,

Whole golden links, effects and causes be,

And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain? Davies.

An eternal fertility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fixed and fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity; as if the Almighty had not spoiled and laid, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding oil, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after its kind; and it was so. Hentley's Sermons.

In adamantine chains shall death be bound,

And hell's grim tyrant feel 't' eternal wound. Pope.

Thou adamantine bonds the chief restrain,

The dire restraint his wisdom will defeat,

And soon restore him to his regal seat. Pope.

AD'AM'S-APPLE, n. f. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To AD'APT, v. a. [adaptus, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to suit; in proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,

My eyes are somewhat dimm'd with grown

For nature, always in the right, Swift.

To your decays adapts my sight.

It is not enough that nothing offends the ear, but a good poet will adapt the very sounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of. Pope's Letters.

ADAP'TATION, n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitness of one thing to another.

Some species there be of middle natures, that is, of bird and beast, as bats; yet are their parts so set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either, there being a commixture of both, rather than adaptation or comix of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Their adhesion may be in part ascribed, either to some elastic motion in the pressed glass, or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless, though very small, asperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the surfaces do lock in with one another, or are, as it were, clasped together.

ADAP'TION, n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a sufficient work to shew all the necessities, the wife contrivances, and prudent adaptations, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Chym.

To ADCO'PULATE, v. a. [from ad and copul.] To unite one body with another; more usually wrote accoprate; which see.

To ADD, v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference,

If to his words it adds one grain of sense. Dryd.

They, whose muses have the highest flown,

Ad not to his immortal memory,

But do an act of friendship to their own. Dryd.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another.

Whatever positive ideas a man has in his mind, of any quantity, he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days, or two years. Locke.

AD'DABLE, adj. [from add.] That which may be added. Ad-dible is more proper.

The first number in every addition is called the addible number, the other, the number or numbers added, and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum.

ADDE'IMATE, v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes. Ditt.

To ADDE'EM, v. a. [from dem.] To esteem; to account.

This word is now out of use.

She seems to be adde'em'd to worthless base,

As to be mov'd to such an infamy. Davies's Civil War.

ADDER, n. f. [Aster, Aetor, Naepes, as it seems from etreus, Sax. poison.] A serpent, a viper, a poisonous reptile; perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

Or is the adder better than the eel,

Because his painted skin contents the eye. Shakspeare.

An adder did it; for, with doubling tongue

Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Shakspeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head. Taylor of Living holy.

ADDER'S-GRASS, n. f. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

ADDER'S-TONGUE, n. f. [ophioglossum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no visible flower; but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue; which feed is contained in many longitudinal cells, which open, and cast forth the seeds when ripe. It grows wild in moist meadows, and is used in medicine. Müller.

The most common simples with us in England, are comfrey, tugle, squimony, fanicte, paul's-betony, fluellin, periwinkle, adder's-tongue. Wijman's Surgery.

ADDER'S-WORT, n. f. An herb so named, on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

AD'DIBLE, adj. [from add.] Possible to be added. See AD-DABLE.

The clearest idea it can get of infinity, is the confused, incompre-ensible remainder of endless, addible numbers, which affords no prospect of stop, or boundary. Locke.

ADDE'ILITY, n. f. [from addible.] The possibility of being added.

This endless addition, or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, so apparent to the mind, is that which gives us the clearest and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke.

AD'DICE, n. f. [for which we corruptly speak and write adiz, from aber, Sax. an axe.]

The adder hath its blade made thin and somewhat arching,

As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, so the addice hath its edge athwart the handle, and is ground to a bail on its inside to its outer edge. Alcibiades's Alchemical Exercises.

ADDICT. v. a. [addict, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, in a good sense; which is rarely used. Ye know the house of Srephanus, that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the fairs. 1 Cor. xvi. 15.
2. It is commonly taken in a bad sense; as, he addicted himself to vice.

ADDICTEDNESS. n. f. [from addict.] The quality or state of being addicted.

Those, that know how little I have remitted of my former addictedness to make chymical experiments, will believe, that the design was to give occasion to the more knowing artists to lay aside their restraints. Elys.

ADDITION. n. f. [additio, Lat.]

1. The act of devoting, or giving up.
2. The state of being devoted.

It is a wonder how his grace should glean it, Since his addition was to courtesies vary;
His company unletter'd, rude and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports. Shakspeare.

AN ADDITION. n. f. [additionem, Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with brass, nor other metals, of itself, by simple fire: so as the enquiry must be upon the calculation, and the addition, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In such a place there is first the cave or labrick, or moles of the structure itself, and, besides that, there are certain additions that contribute to its ornament and use; as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, curious motions of divers things appendicated to it. Hal's Origin of Mankind.

ADDITION. n. f. [from add.]

1. The act of adding one thing to another; opposed to diminution.

The infinite distance between the Creator and the noblest of all creatures, can never be measured, nor exhausted by endless addition of finite degrees. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Addition, or the thing added.

It will not be modestly done, if any of our own wisdom intrude or interpose, or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his Apostles have designed. H. mason's Fanatic.

Some such resemblances, no thinks, I find
Of our last evening's talk, in this dream,
But with addition strange! Milton.

The abolishing of addition, together with the custom permitted, among the natives, of selling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons. Swift on the Dissensions in Athens and Rome.

3. In arithmetic.

Addition is the reduction of two or more numbers of like kind, together into one sum or total. Cocker's Arith.

4. In law. A title given to a man over and above his christian name and surname, throwing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling. Cowell.

Only retain
The name, and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of the law,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. Shakspeare.

From this time,
For what he did before Coriol, call him,
With all th' applause and clamour of the host,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

There arose new disputes upon the persons named by the king, or rather against the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

ADDITIONAL. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, without any considerable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Haller on Time.

The greatest wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in so good an understanding, and celebrated one another with so much generosity, that each of them receives an additional lustre from his contemporaries. Addison.

They include in that very kind of evidence, which is supposed to be so powerful; and do, withal, afford us several other additional proofs, of great force and clearness. Aster.

ADDITIONAL. adj. [from add.] That which has the power or quality of adding.

The addition fiction gives to a great man a larger share of reputation than belongs to him, to enable him to serve some good end or purpose. Arbutnot.

ADDLE. adj. [from abel, a disease, Sax. according to Stinner and Jamies; perhaps from abel, idle, barren, unfruitful.] Originally applied to eggs, and signifying such as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen; thence transferred to brains that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle,

That carries eggs too fresh of addle;

And still at random, as he goes,

Among the rabble trust betwixts. Hudibras.
After much solitariness, fasting, or long sickness, their brains were addled, and their bellies as empty of meat as their heads of wit. Horace on M. lanius.

Thus far the poet; but his brains grow addled;
And all the rest is purely from this addled. Dryd.

TO ADDLE. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addled; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is also evidenced in eggs, whereof the found one sinks, and such as are addled swim; as do also those that are termed hypocrites, or wind-eggs. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

ADDLED. adj. Having addled brains. See ADDLE.

Poor slaves in metre, dull and addled, poet.

Who rhyme below even David's psalms translated.

TO ADDRESS. v. a. [addresser, Fr. from deresjar, Span. from dirigir, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's self to enter upon any action; as, he addresses himself to the work.

It laid up its head, and did address
Himself to motion, like as it would speak. Shakspeare.

With him the Palmer eke, in habit sad,
Himself address'd to that adventure hard;

So to the river's side they both together far'd. Fairy Q.

Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,
Address'd himself on foot to single fight. Dryd.

2. To get ready; to put in a state for immediate use.

By this means they fell directly on head on the English battle; whereupon the earl of Warwick address'd his men to take the flank. Sir J. Hayward.

Duke Frederick hearing, how that every day
Men of war worth related to this fable,
Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot,
In his own conduct purpoisely to take.

His brother here. Shakspeare, As you like it.

To night in Hatfield we will be your guest,
To-morrow for the march we are address'd. Shakspeare.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of construction.

Sometimes without a preposition.

Are not your orders to address the senate? Addison.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addressing to Pollio, his great patron, and himself no vulgar poet, he no longer could restrain the freedom of his spirit, but began to assert his native character, which is sublimity.

Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Pasts.

Among the crowd, but far above the rest,
Young Turnus to the beauteous maid address'd. Dryd.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun, as, he addresses himself to the general.

Sometimes with the accusative of the matter of the address, which may be the nominative to the passive.

The young hero had address'd his prayers to him for his assistance. Dryd. Roderick.

His name to great Apollo thus address'd. Dryd.

His suit was common; but, above the rest,
To bear the brother-prices thus address'd. Dryd.

8. To address, is to apply to the king in term.

The representatives of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, address'd the king to have it recalled. Swift.

ADDRESS. n. f. [a-dre'ss, Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of persuasion, petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
If I had coust'd and hilt conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Crew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address. Prior.

That, as the wound, the passion might increase.

Most of the persons, to whom these addresses are made, are not wise and skilful judges, but are influenced by their own sinful appetites and passions. Alati's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Courtship

They both behold thee with their sisters eyes,
And often have reveal'd their passion to me;
But, tell me, whose address does this favour it most?

I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it. Addison.

About three years since, a gentleman, whom, I am sure, you yourself would have approved, made his address to me. Addison. Spectator.

3. Manner of addressing another; as, we say, a man of an happy or a pleasing address; a man of an awkward address.

4. Skill, dexterity.

I could produce innumerable instances from my own memory and observation, of events imputed to the profound skill and address of a minister, which, in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakness, humour, passion, or pride, or, at best, but the natural course of things left to themselves.

Swift's Thoughts on the present Posture of Affairs.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a sense chiefly mercantile.

ADDRESSER.

ADDRESSEE. n. f. [from addre'ss.] The person that addresses or petitions.

ADDUCENT. adj. [adducens, Lat.]

A word applied to those muscles that bring forward, close, or draw together the parts of the body to which they are annexed.

ADDULCER. v. a. [adducere, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To sweeten; a word not now in use.

Thus did the French ambassadors, with great shew of their king's affection, and many sugared words, seek to addulce all matters between the two kings. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADULTER. n. f. [from adulter, Sax. illudicrous] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children: King Edward the Confessor, being without issue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him adulter.

ADULCERATION. n. f. [from adulcor and γὰρ, Gr.] A cautery of the glands.

ADUMPTION. n. f. [adim, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation.

ADUMPT. n. f. [from adumpt, Lat. that is ademptum.]

He that is completely filled in all the secrets of his art. It is, in its original signification, appropriated to the chymists, but is now extended to other artists.

The preservation of chastity is easy to true adumpts. Pope.

ADUMPT. adj. Skillful; thoroughly versed.

If there be really such adumpts philosophers as we are told of, I am apt to think, that, among their arcana, they are matters of extremely potent menstruums. Boyle.

ADUQUATE. adj. [aduquatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correspondent to, so as to bear an exact resemblance or proportion. It is used generally in a figurative sense, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death seems to be the whole aduquate object of popular courage; but a necessary and unavoidable coffin strikes painless into the floweriest heart. Harvey on Consumption.

The arguments were proper, aduquate, and sufficient to compass their respective ends. South's Sermons.

All our simple ideas are aduquate, because, being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce such sensations in us, they cannot but be correspondent and aduquate to those powers. Locke.

Those are aduquate ideas, which perfectly represent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial, or incomplete, representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Watt's Logic.

ADUQUATELY. adv. [from aduquate.]

1. In an aduquate manner; with justness of representation; with exactness of proportion.

Gratitude consists aduquately in these two things: first, that it is a debt; and, secondly, that it is such a debt as is left to every man's ingenuity, whether he will pay or no. South.

2. It is used with the particle to.
Pity is the necessary christian virtue, proportioned aduquately to the omniscience and spirituality of that infinite Deity.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

ADUQUATENESS. n. f. [from aduquate.] The state of being aduquate; justness of representation; exactness of proportion.

ADUQUATELY. adj. Not absolute; not despotic. Diss.

ADHERE. v. n. [adheres, Lat.]

1. To stick to; as, wax to the finger.

2. To stick, in a figurative sense; to be consistent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance— Shakspeare Twelfth Night.

3. To remain firmly fixed to a party, person, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;

And sure I am, two men there are not living;

To whom he more adheres. Shakspeare Ham.

Every man of sense will agree with me, that singularity is loathsome, when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conscience, morality, and honour. Begit.

ADHERENCE. n. f. [from adhere.] See ADHERENCE.

1. The quality of adhering, or sticking; tenacity.

2. In a figurative sense, fixations of mind; attachment; steadiness.

Their firm adherence to their religion is no less remarkable than their dispersion; considering it as persecuted or contemned over the whole earth. Audison Spectator, N° 495.

A constant adherence to one sort of diet may have bad effects on any constitution. Albucast on Diet.

Plain good food, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual than those arts, which are contemptuously called the spirit of negotiating. Swift.

ADHERENT. n. f. [The same with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.

2. That which adheres.

Vices have a native adherency of vexation. Dray of Pity.

ADHERENT. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Close to the cliff with both his hands he clung.
And fluck adherent, and suspended hung. Pope's Odyssey.

2. United with.

Modes are said to be inherent or adherent; that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes arise from the joining of some accidental substance to the chief subject, which yet may be separated from it; so when a bowl is wet, or a boy is clothed, these are adherent modes; for the water and the clothes are distinct substances which adhere to the bowl, or to the boy. Watt's Logic.

ADHERENT. n. f. [from adhere.] The person that adheres; one that supports the cause, or follows the fortune of another; a follower; a partisan.

Princes must give protection to their subjects and adherents, when worthy occasion shall require it. Sir W. Raleigh.

A new war must be undertaken upon the advice of those, who, with their partisans and adherents, were to be the sole gainers by it. Swift's A. J. Jellamius.

ADHERENT. n. f. [from adhere.] He that adheres.

He ought to be in urgent to tender consciences! but, at the same time, a firm adherent to the established church. Swift.

ADHERSION. n. f. [adhesio, Lat.]

1. The act or state of sticking to something. Adhesion is generally used in the natural, and adherence in the metaphorical sense; as, the adhesion of iron to the magnet; and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently shaped for adhesion, stick to one another, as well as stick to this spirit? Boyle.

The rest consisting wholly in the sensible configuration as smooth and rough; or else more, or less, firm adhesion of the parts, as hard and soft, tough and brittle, are obvious. Locke.

— Prove that all things, on occasion,

Love union, and desire adhesion. Prior.

2. It is sometimes taken, like adherence, figuratively, for firmness in an opinion, or steadiness in practice.

The same want of sincerity, the same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be equally a reason for their rejecting any proof whatsoever. Asterbury's Sermons.

ADHESIVE. adj. [from adhesion.] Sticking; tenacious; with its.

If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the tract.

Hot steaming up. Tomson's Autobiography, l. 140.

TO ADHIBIT. v. a. [adhibere, Lat.] To apply; to make use of.

ADHIBITION. n. f. [from adhibere.] Application; use. Diss.

ADJACENCY. n. f. [from adjacent, Lat.]

1. The state of lying close to another thing.

2. That which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Because the Cape hath sea on both sides near it, and other lands, remote as it were, equidistant from it; therefore, at that point, the needle is not distracted by the vicinity of adjacencies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

ADJACENT. adj. [adjacent, Lat.] Lying close, bordering upon something.

It may corrupt within itself, although no part of it issue into the body adjacent. Bacon's Notes, have no general reflection but in their external superficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different density. Newton's Opt.

ADJACENT. n. f. That which lies next another.

The sense of the author goes visibly in its own train, and the words receiving a determined sense from their companions and adjacent, will not consent to give countenance and colour to what must be supported at any rate. Locke's Essay, upon S. Paul.

ADIAPHOROUS. adj. [adia-phoros, Gr.] Neutral; particularly used of some spirits and salts, which are neither of an acid nor alkaline nature. Quercy.

Our adiaphorous spirit may be obtained, by distilling the liquor that is afforded by woods and divers other bodies. Fey.

ADIAPHOROUS. n. f. [adia-phoria, Gr.] Neutrality; indifference.

TO ADJECT. v. a. [adjectis, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing.

ADJECTION. n. f. [adjectio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjecting, or adding.

2. The thing adjected, or added.

That unto every pound of sulphur, an adjection of one ounce of quicksilver; or unto every pound of pectre, one ounce of sal-armoniac, will much intend the force, and consequently the report, I find no verity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

ADJECTIVIOUS. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown in upon the rest.

ADJECTIVE. n. f. [adjectivum, Lat.]

A word added to a noun, to signify the addition or separation of some quality, circumstance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives, because, in speech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their signification, or intimate the manner of existence in the things signified thereby. Clarke's Latin Gram.

All the verification of Claudian is incl. ded within the compass of four or five lines; perceptibly closing his sense at the end of a verse, and that verse commonly which they call golden, or two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb adject to them, to keep the peace. Drayd n.

ADJECTIVELY. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective; a term of grammar.

ADIEU, adv. [from à Dieu, used elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, used at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care, but now used, in a popular sense, sometimes to things inanimate; farewell.

Ne gave him leave to bid that aged fire
Adieu, but nimbly ran her wonted course. Fairy Queen.
Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you refrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu; be more expressive to them. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

While now I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear;
Lest yet my half-closed eye may view
On earth an object worth its care. Prior.

TO ADJOIN. v. a. [adjindre, Fr. adjuugo, Lat.] To join to; to unite to; to put to.

Corrections or improvements should be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places, and superadded to a regular treatise. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

TO ADJOIN. v. a. To be contiguous to; to lie next to as to have nothing between.

'Th' adjoining fane, th' assembled Greeks e-press'd,
And hunting of the Cædonian beast. Dryden's Fables.
In learning any thing, as little should be proposed to the mind at once as is possible; and, that being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining, yet unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed. Lect.

TO ADJOURN. v. a. [adjuurner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time; a term used in judicial proceedings; as, of parliaments, or courts of justice.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness,
That we adjourn this court to further day. Shakep. Hen. VIII.
By the king's authority alone, and by his writs they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved; but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon's Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

2. To put off; to defer; to let slay to another time.
Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due,
Being all to dolours turn'd? Shakep. Cymbeline.
Crown him the goblets with a cheerful draught;
Enjoy the precious hour, adjourn the future thought.
Dryden, Amid vii. l. 181.

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpose, I shall adjourn the consideration of it to another occasion.

Walsh's Nat. History, p. iii.
ADJOURNMENT. n. f. [adjournment, Fr.] An assignment of a day, or a putting off till another day. Adjournment in eye, an appointment of a day, when the justices in eye mean to sit again. Cowell.

We will and we will not, and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run our lives out in adjournments from time to time, out of a fantastical levity that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard. L'Estrange.

ADIPISUS. adj. [adiposus, Lat.] Fat. Dict.
ADITUS. n. f. [aditus, Lat.] A passage for the conveyance of water under ground; a passage under ground in general; a term among the mimen.

For conveying away the water, they stand in aid of sundry devices; as, adits, pumps, and wheels, driven by a stream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Cæsar's De v.

The adits would be so flown with waters (it being impossible to make any adit or foughs to drain them) that no guns or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray on the Great.

ADITION. n. f. [from adit, aditum, Lat.] The act of going to another. Dict.

TO ADJUST. v. a. [adjustus, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted to one of the parties by a judicial sentence; with the particle to before the person.

The way of disputing in the schools leads from it, by insisting on one topical argument; by the success of which, victory is adjusted to the opponent, or defendant. Locke.

The great competitors for Rome,
Cæsar and Pompey on Pharaliam plains,
Where stern Scellona, with one final stroke,
Adjusted the empire of this globe to one. Philips.

2. To sentence, or condemn to a punishment; with to before the thing.

But though thou art adjusted to the death;
Yet I will favour thee in what I can. Shakep. Com. of Err.

3. Simply, to judge; to decree; to determine.
He adjusted him unworthy of his friendship and favour;
purposing sharply to revenge the wrong he had received.

Andler's History of the Turks.
ADJUDICATION. n. f. [adjudicatio, Lat.] The act of judging, or of granting something to a litigant, by a judicial sentence.

TO ADJUDICATE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give something controverted to one of the litigants, by a sentence or decision.

TO ADJUGATE. v. a. [adjuugo, Lat.] To yoke to; to join to another by a yoke. Dict.

ADJUMENT. n. f. [adjumentum, Lat.] Help; support. Dict.

ADJUNCT. n. f. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something adherent or united to another, though not essentially part of it.

Learning is but an adjunct to oneself,
And where we are, our learning likewise is.

But I make haste to consider you as abstracted from a court, which (if you will give me leave to use a term of logic) is only an adjunct, not a propriety, of happiness. Dryd. Aureng. Zed.
The talent of discretion, as I have described it in its several adjuncts and circumstances, is no where so serviceable as to the clergy. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. A person joined to another. This sense rarely occurs.

He made him the associate of his air apparent, together with the lord Cottingham (as an adjunct of singular experience and trust) in foreign travels, and in a business of love. Watts.

ADJUNCT. adj. United with; immediately consequent.

So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,

I'd do't. Shaksp. King J. b.

ADJUNCTION. n. f. [adjunctio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjoining, or coupling together.

2. The thing joined.

ADJUNCTIVE. n. f. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. He that joins.

2. That which is joined.

ADJURATION. n. f. [adjuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or proposing an oath to another.

2. The form of oath proposed to another.

When these learned men flew sickness and phrenzy cured, the dead raised, the oracles put to silence, the demons and evil spirits forced to confess themselves no gods, by persons, who only made use of prayer and adjurations in the name of their crucified Saviour; how could they doubt of their Saviour's power on the like occasions? Abelton on the Christian Religion.

TO ADJURE. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impose an oath upon another, prescriptive; the form in which all shall swear.

Thou know'st, the magistrates
And princes of my country came in person,
Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,
Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty,
And of religion, press'd how just it was,
How honourable. Milton's Samson's Agony, l. 153.

Ye lamps of heav'n! be sad, and lifted high
His hands now free, thou venerable sky!

Inviolable powers! adorn'd with dread,
Ye fatal fillets! that once bound this head,
Ye sacred altars! from whose flames I fled,
Be all of you adjured. Dryden, Æneid ii.

TO ADJUST. v. a. [adjustus, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to settle in the right form.

Your lordship removes all our difficulties, and supplies all our wants, faster than the most visionary projector can adjust his schemes. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. To reduce to the true state or standard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the most part, want standards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjust their estimation; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accomplishment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Josephus, without knowing his character, and compares it with what our Saviour foretold, would think the historian had been a Christian, and that he had nothing else in view, but to adjust the event to the prediction. Adelson on the Christian Religion.

ADJUSTMENT. n. f. [adjustment, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method; settlement.

The further and clearer adjustment of this affair, I am constrained to adjust to the larger treatise. Walsh's Nat. Hist.

2. The state of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it as an instrument made to shew the hour; but it is a learned idea which the watch-maker has of it, who knows all the several parts of it, together with the various contrivances and adjustments of each part. Watts's Logic.

ADJUTANT. n. f. A petty officer, whose duty is to assist the major, by distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment, of the common men.

TO ADJUTE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjuvum, Lat.] To help; to concur; a word not now in use.

For if there be Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjusting to his company;

And each one hath his livery. Pen. Jonathan's Under worth.

ADJUTOR. n. f. [adjuutor, Lat.] A helper. Dict.

ADJUTORY. adj. [adjuvatorius, Lat.] That which helps. Dict.

AN ADJUTRIX. n. f. [Lat.] She who helps. Dict.

ADJUVANT. adj. [adjuvans, Lat.] Helpful; useful. Dict.

ADJUVATE. v. a. [adjuvo, Lat.] To help; to further; to put forward. Diët.

ADMEASUREMENT. n. f. [See MEASURE.] The adjustment of proportions; the act or practice of measuring according to rule.

Admeasurement is a writ, which lieth for the bringing of those to a mediocrity, that usurp more than their part. It lieth in two cases: one is termed admeasurement of dower, where the widow of the deceased holdeth from the heir, or his guardian, more in the name of her dower, than belongeth to her. The other is admeasurement of pasture, which lieth between those that have common of pasture appendant to their freeholds, or common by vicinage, in case any one of them, or more, do furchage the common with more cattle than they ought. Cowell.

In some countries they are not much more acquainted with admeasurement by acre; and thereby the writs of those counties contain twice or thrice so many acres more than the land hath. Bacon's High Off. Alienet.

ADMEASUREMENT. n. f. [ad and mensura, Lat.] The act, or practice, of measuring out to each his part.

ADMINICLE. n. f. [adminiculum, Lat.] Help; support; furtherance. Diët.

ADMINICULAR. adj. [from adminiculum, Lat.] That which gives help. Diët.

ADMINISTER. v. a. [administro, Lat.]

1. To give; to afford; to supply.

Let Zephyrus bland
Administer their tepid genial airs;
Naught fear he from the west, whose gentle warmth
Discloseth well the earth's all-teeming womb. Philips.

2. To act as the minister or agent in any employment or office; generally, but not always, with some hint of subordination, to administer the government.

For forms of government let fools contest,
Whate'er is best Administer'd, is best. Pope's Essay on Man.

3. To administer justice.

4. To administer the sacraments.
Have not they the old popish custom of administering the blessed sacrament of the holy eucharist with water-cakes? Hester, b. iv. § 10.

5. To administer an oath.

Swear by the duty that you owe to heav'n,
To keep the oath that we administer. Shakspeare, Richard II.

6. To administer physick.

I was carried on men's shoulders, administering physick and phlebotomy.

7. To administer to; to contribute; to bring supplies. Udall's Voyage.

I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill, and administers to the pleasure, as well as the plenty, of the place. Spenser, N° 477.

8. To perform the office of an administrator, in law. See ADMINISTRATOR.

Neal's order was never performed, because the executors durst not administer. Arbustnot and Pope's Martin Scribler.

ADMINISTRATE. v. a. [administro, Lat.] To exhibit; to give as physick.

They have the same effects in medicine, when inwardly administered to animal bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ADMINISTRATION. n. f. [administratio, Lat.]

1. The act of administering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the publick affairs; dispensing the laws.

I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power's lay then in me:
And in th' administration of his laws,
While I was busy for the commonwealth.

Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

In the short time of his administration, he shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate.

Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Pastorals.

2. The active or executive part of government.
It may pass for a maxim in state, that the administration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legislator in too many.

Saunders's Sentiments of a Church of England-minister.

3. Those to whom the care of publick affairs is committed.

4. Distribution; exhibition; dispensation.

There is, in sacraments, to be observed their force, and their form of administration. Hester, b. v.

By the universal administration of grace, begun by our blessed Saviour, enlarged by his apostles, carried on by their immediate successors, and to be completed by the rest to the world's end; all types that darkened this faith are enlightened.

Spenser's Sermons.

ADMINISTRATIVE. adj. [from administratio, Lat.] That which administers; that by which any one administers.

ADMINISTRATOR. n. f. [administrator, Lat.]

1. Is properly taken for him that has the goods of a man dying intestate, committed to his charge by the ordinary, and is accountable for the same, whenever it shall please the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell.

He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and observe what became of the king of Aragon; in holding the kingdom of Castile, and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as administrator to his daughter. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. He that officiates in divine rites.

I feel my conscience bound to remember the death of Christ, with some society of Christians or other, since it is a most plain command; whether the person, who distributes these elements, be only an occasional or a settled administrator.

Watson's Improvement of the Mind, p. l. c. 18.

3. He that conducts the government.

The reverence of the prince, or chief administrator, of the civil power. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

ADMINISTRATRIX. n. f. [Lat.] She who administers in consequence of a will.

ADMINISTRATORSHIP. n. f. [from administrator.] The office of administrator.

ADMIRABLE. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] To be admired; worthy of admiration; of power to excite wonder; always taken in a good sense, and applied either to persons or things.

The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praise, that he will not hurt. Sidney, b. ii.

God was with them in all their afflictions, and, at length, by working their admirable deliverance, did testify that they served him not in vain. Hester, b. iv. § 2.

What admirable things occur in the remains of several other philosophers? Short, I confess, of the rules of Christianity, but generally above the lives of Christians. Saunders's Sermons.

You can at most
To an indifferent lover's praise pretend;
But you would spoil an admirable friend. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

ADMIRABLENESS. n. f. [from admirable.] The quality of being admirable; the power of raising wonder.

ADMIRABILITY. n. f. [admirabilis, Lat.] The quality or state of being admirable. Diët.

ADMIRABLY. adv. [from admirable.] So as to raise wonder; in an admirable manner.

The theatre is, I think, the most spacious of any I ever saw; and, at the same time, so admirably well contrived, that, from the very depth of the stage, the lowest found may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience, as in a whispering place; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause in it the least confusion. Addison on Italy.

ADMIRAL. n. f. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. An officer or magistrate that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all causes, as well civil as criminal, belonging to the sea. Cowell.

2. The chief commander of a fleet.

He also, in battle at sea, overthrow Rojericus Rotundus, admiral of Spain; in which fight he admiral, with his son, were both slain, and seven of his galleys taken. Kestler's High-Turk.

Make the sea thine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to thy admiral. Waller.

3. The ship which carries the admiral or commander of the fleet.

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor himself was, by great mischance struck upon a sand. Kestler's High-Turk.

ADMIRALSHIP. n. f. [from admiral.] The office or power of an admiral.

ADMIRALTY. n. f. [amiralte, Fr.] The power, or officers, appointed for the administration of naval affairs.

ADMIRATION. n. f. [admiration, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Includ'd with human voice, and human sense,
Reasoning to admiration. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

They are imitations of the passions, which always move, and therefore, consequently, please; for, without motion, there can be no delight; which cannot be considered but as an active passion. When we view those elevated ideas of nature, the result of that view is admiration, which is always the cause of pleasure. Dryden's Doveson, Preface.

There is a pleasure in admiration, and this is that which properly causeth admiration, when we discover a great deal in an object, which we understand to be excellent; and yet we see, we know not how much more beyond that, which our understandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Tillotson's Sermon.

2. It is taken sometimes in a bad sense, though generally in a good.

Your boldness I with admiration see;
What hope had you to gain a queen like me?
Because a hero forc'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a second prey? Dryden.

ADMIRE. v. a. [admira, Lat. admiror, Fr.]

1. To regard with wonder; generally in a good sense.

'Tis here that knowledge wonders, and there is an admiration that is not the daughter of ignorance. 'Tis indeed stupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect; but the philosophic passion truly admires; and adores the supreme efficient. Glaville.

2. It is sometimes used, in more familiar speech, for to regard with love.

3. It is used, but rarely, in an ill sense.

You have plac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting
With most admir'd disorder. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To ADMIRE. v. n. To wonder; sometimes with the particle at.
The eye is already too perfect, that I believe the reason of a man would easily have refled here, and admir'd at his own contrivance.
Ray on the Creation.

An ADMIRER. n. f. [from admirare.]

1. The person that wonders, or regards with admiration.
Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained for great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other.
Adrijon, Spectator.

Who most to flun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope's Essay on Man.

2. In common speech, a lover.

ADMIRINGLY. adv. [from admirare] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mournfully.

We may yet further admiringly observe, that though men usually give freest where they have not given before, and make it an excuse of their desistance from giving, that they have given it elsewhere.

ADMISSIBLE. adj. [admits, admissum, Lat.] That which may be admitted.

Suppose that this supposition were admissible, yet this would not any way be inconlult with the eternity of the divine nature and ellence.

ADMISSION. n. f. [admissio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was also enacted that charitable law, for the admission of poor tutors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to sue.

By means of our solitary situation, and our rare admission of strangers, we know most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown.

2. The state of being admitted.

My father law you ill designs pursue;
And my admission shew'd his fear of you.

God did thee exercise man's hopes with the expectations of a better paradise, or a more intimate admission to himself.

ADMIT. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To suffer to enter; to grant entrance.
Does not one table admit still admit?

2. To suffer to enter upon an office; in which sense, the phrase of admission into a college, &c. is used.

The admission found it no hard matter so far to terrify him, that, for the king's service, as was pretended, he admitted, for a fix-clerk, a person recommended by him.

3. To allow an argument or position.

Suppose no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue, that by no force thou may'st be won,
Admit no fled can hurt or wound thy side,
And be it heav'n hath thee such favour done.

4. To allow, or grant in general; sometimes with the particle of.
If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted, and images raised above the life, that leads you infernally from your own principles to mine.

ADMITTABLE. adj. [from admit.] The person or thing which may be admitted.

The clerk, who is preferred, ought to prove to the bishop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwise, the bishop is not bound to admit him: for, as the law then stood, a deacon was admittable.

ADMITTANCE. n. f. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permission to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him chance in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church-polity.

2. The power or right of entering.

If I do line one of their hands?—'tis gold

Which buys admittance.

ADMITTANCE. n. f. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permission to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him chance in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church-polity.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him chance in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church-polity.

2. The power or right of entering.

If I do line one of their hands?—'tis gold

Which buys admittance.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate, is the readiest way to gain admittance into the house.

There's news from Bertran; he defies

Admittance to the king, and cries aloud,

This day shall end our fears.

There are some ideas which have admittance only through one fence, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them.

Custom, or prerogative, of being admitted to great persons; a fence now out of use.

Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations.

Concession of a position.

Nor could the Pythagorean give easy admittance thereto; for, holding that separate souls successively supplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raising of souls from other worlds.

To ADMIX. v. a. [admixo, Lat.] To mingle with something else.

ADMICTION. n. f. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined by strong waters, or by admixtion of salt, sulphur, and mercury.

The elements are so where pure in these lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, sure it is above the concave of the moon.

There is no way to make a strong and vigorous powder of saltpetre, without the admixtion of sulphur.

ADMICTION. n. f. [from admix.] The body mingled with another; perhaps sometimes the act of mingling.

A mass which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere simple earth, shall, to the smell or taste, discover a plentiful admixtion of sulphur, alum, or some other mineral.

Whatever acrimony, or amaritude, at any time redounds in it, must be derived from the admixtion of another sharp bitter substance.

To ADMONISH. v. a. [admones, Lat.]

To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counsel against wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty; with the particle off, or against, which is more rare, or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admonished him against that unskilful piece of ingenuity.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admonish, and before them set
The paths of righteousness.

But when he was admonished by his subject to defend, he come down, gently circling in the air, and singing, to the ground.

ADMONITION. n. f. [from admones.] The person that admonishes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admonisher; a court-terrist fit for the gentle times of Augustus.

ADMONITION. n. f. [from admones.] Admonition; the notice by which one is put in mind of faults or duties; a word not often used.

But yet be wary in thy foolish care.—
—Thy grave admonitions prevail with me.

To th' infinitely Good we owe Immortal thanks, and his admonishment
Receive, with solemn purpose to observe Immutably his forewarn will, the end
Of what we are.

ADMONITION. n. f. [from admones.] The hint of a fault or duty; counsel; gentle reproof.

They must give our teachers leave, for the saving of those souls, to intermingle sometimes, with other more necessary things, admonition concerning these not unnecessary.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again; so that, upon a second and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unfeelingness.

ADMONITIONER. n. f. [from admones.] A liberal dispenser of admonition; a general adviser. A ludicrous term.

Albeit the admonition is said seem at first to like no prescript form of prayer at all, but thought it the best that their minister should always be left at liberty to pray, as his own discretion did serve, their defender, and his associates, have since propounded to the world a form as themselves old like.

ADMONITION. n. f. [from admones.] That which admonishes.

The sentence of reason is either mandatory, shewing what must be done; or else permissive, declaring only what may be done; or, thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the most convenient for us to do.

ADMONITION. n. f. [from admones.] The act of murmuring, or whispering to another.

TO ADMORE. v. a. [admore, Lat.] To bring one thing to another.

If unto the powder of leadstone or iron, we admore the north-pole of the loadstone, the powders, or small divisions, will erect and conform themselves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADO. n. f. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from a and faire.]

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon prisoner, whom, with much ado, he kept alive; the Helots being villainously cruel. Sidney.

They moved, and in the end persuaded with much ado, the people to bind themselves by solemn oath. Heister.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein sundry laws were made. Sir John Davies.

With much ado, he partly kept awake;

Not falling all his eyes repose to take;

And all'd the franger, who did needs invent,

And whence began to rare an instrument. Dryden.

2. Bustle; tumult; business; sometimes with the participle about. Let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Shakspeare, Taming the Shrew.

All this ado about Adam's fatherhood, and the greatness of his power, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous sense, implying more tumult and flow of business, than the affair is worth; in this sense it is generally used.

I made no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two—

For, hark, Tybalt being slain for late,

It may be thought we held him carelessly,

Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakspeare.

Come, come, says Puff, without any more ado, 'tis time for me to go to breakfast; for cats don't live upon dialogues.

L'Estrange.

ADOLESCENCE. n. f. [adolescencia, Lat.]

The age succeeding childhood, and succeeded by puberty; more largely, that part of life in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection. See ADOLESCENCY.

The sons must have a tedious time of childhood and adolescencia, before they can either themselves assist their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of posterity. Bentley.

ADOLESCENCY. n. f. The fame with adolescencia.

He was so far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full stature, if we believe Josephus, who places him in the last adolescency, and makes him twenty-five years old. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO ADOPT. v. a. [adopts, Lat.]

1. To take a son by choice; to make him a son, who was not so by birth.

Were none of all my father's sisters left;

Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft;

None by an uncle's or a grandame's side,

Yet I could some adopted heir provide. Dryden.

2. To place any person or thing in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to something else.

Whether adapted to some neighbouring star,

Thou roll'st above us, in thy wand'ring race,

Or, in procession fix'd and regular,

Mov'd with the heav'n's majestic pace;

Or call'd to more celestial bliss,

Thou tread'st, with scrupulous, the vast abyss. Dryden.

We are seldom at ease from the solicitation of our natural or adapted desires; but a constant succession of uneasinesses, one of that flock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADOPTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of something adopted.

Adoptedly, as schools-maids change their names,

By vain, though apt, affection. Shakspeare.

ADOPTER. n. f. [from adopt.]

He that gives some one by choice the rights of a son.

ADOPTION. n. f. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's self what is not native.

See the hell of having a false woman! My bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me the wrong. Shakspeare.

2. The state of being adopted.

In which time the purpos'd,

By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to Overcome you with her shew; yes, and in time

(When he had fitted you with her craft) to work

Her son into the adoption of the crown. Shakspeare.

In every act of our christian worship, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father, to remind us of our adoption, that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Christ. Rogers's Sermons.

ADOPTIVE. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

Nº IV.

1. He that is adopted by another, and made his son.

It is impossible an elective sonship should be so free and absolute as an hereditary; no more than it is possible for a father to have to full power and interest in an adoptive son, as in a natural. Bacon.

2. He that adopts another, and makes him his son.

An adopted son cannot cite his adoptive father into court, without his leave. Hydes's Paragon Jus in Civem.

ADORABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That which ought to be adored; that which is worthy of divine honours.

On these two, viz. the love of God, and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets, viz. the adorable author of christianity; and the apostle says, the end of the law is charity. Clement's Philosophical Principles.

ADORABLENESS. n. f. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable; worthiness of divine honours.

ADORABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORATION. n. f. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the Divinity, distinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and serviceable worship we name, for distinction sake, whatsoever belongeth to the church, or publick society, of God, by way of external adoration. Hobbes.

It is possible to suppose, that those who believe a supreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all. Stillington.

2. Homage paid to persons in high place or esteem.

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth: What is thy toll, O adoration!

Art thou thought else but place, degree, and form,

Creating awe and fear in other men?

Whence thou art left happy, being fear'd,

Than they in fearing. What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,

But poison'd flattery? Shakspeare.

TO ADORE. v. a. [adore, Lat.]

1. To worship with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Thracians they adore, And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is used, popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, Nº 57.

ADOREMENT. n. f. [from adore.] Adoration; worship; a word scarcely used.

The priests of elder times deluded their apprehensions with false firing, and such oblique idolatries, and won their credulity to the literal and downright adorment of cats, lizards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADORER. n. f. [from adore.] He that adores; a worshipper; a term generally used in a low sense; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Whilst as th' approaching pageant does appear, And echoing crouds speak mighty Venus near;

I, her adorer, too devoutly stand

Fast on the utmost margin of the land. Pier.

2. A worshipper, in a serious sense.

He was so severe an adorer of truth, as not to dissimble; or to suffer any man to think that he would do any thing, which he refused not to do. Clarendon.

TO ADORN. v. a. [adorna, Lat.]

1. To deck; to deck the person with ornaments.

He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. Isaiah, lxi. 10.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,

That shews more cost than art;

Jewels at nose and lips, but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To set out any place or thing with decorations.

A gallery adorned with the pictures or statues of the invention of things useful to human life. Cowley.

3. To embellish with oratory or elegance of language.

This will supply men's tongues with many new things, to be named, adorned, and described, in their discourse. Sprat's History of the Royal Society.

Thousands there ate in darkest fame that dwell, Whose names more noble poem shall adorn;

For, though unknown to me, they were fought well. Dryden.

ADORNMENT. n. f. [from adorn.] Ornament; embellishment; elegance.

Which attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confused; nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment. Raleigh's History of the World.

She held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

ADORNED. adv. [from adorn and adorn.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice

Thrice did the sink adown in deadly found,
And thrice he her reviv'd with busy pain. Fairy Queen.
AND Wn. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher situation towards a lower.

In this remembrance Emily ere day
Arole, and dress'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryden.

ADRI'AD. adv. [from a and adri, as, afire, athirst, asleep.]
In a state of fear; frighted; terrified: now obsolete.

And thinking to make all men *adri*ed to such a one an enemy, who would not spare, nor fear to kill so great a prince. Sidney.

ADRI'ET. adv. from a and drift, from drive.
Floating at random; as, any impulse may drive.

Then, shall this mount
Of paradise, by might of waves, be mov'd
Out of his place, push'd by the horned flood;
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift
Down the great river, to the opening gulf,
And there take root. Milton.

It seem'd a corps adrift to distant fight;
But at a distance who could judge aright. Dryden.

The custom of frequent reflection will keep their minds from running adrift, and call their thoughts home from useless un-attentive roving. Locke on Education.

ADRI'IT. adj. [French.] Dextrous; adive; skilful.
An adrift about fellow would sometimes destroy a whole family, with justice apparently against him the whole time. Jervet.

ADRO'ITNESS. n. f. [from adroit.]
Dexterity; readiness; activity. Neither this word, nor adrait, seem yet completely naturalized.

ADRY'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirst; thirsty; in want of drink.
He never told any of them, that he was his humble servant, but his well-wisher; and would rather be thought a malecon-tent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Speil.

A SCIT'IOUS. adj. [adscititious, Lat.]
That which is taken in to complete something else, though originally extrinsic; supplemental; additional.

ADSTRI'CTION. n. f. [adstrictio, Lat.]
The act of binding together; and applied, generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

TO ADVANCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]
To bring forward, in the local sense.

Now morn, her rosy steps in th' eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milton.

1. To raise to preferment; to aggrandize.
The declaration of the greatnels of Mordecai, whereunto
the king advanced him. Ezther, x. 2.

3. To improve.
What laws can be advied more proper and effectual to advance the nature of man to its highest perfection, than these precepts of christianity? Tillotson.

4. To heighten; to grace; to give lustre to.
As the calling dignifies the man, so the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by
it. South's Sermoni.

5. To forward; to accelerate.
These three last were slower than the ordinary Indian wheat of idell; and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propose; to offer to the publick.
I dare not advance my opinion against the judgment of so great an author; but I think it fair to leave the decision to the publick. Dryden.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notion of the town. Pope.

TS ADVANCE. v. n.
To come forward.
At this the youth, whose vent'rous soul
No fears of magic art controul,
Advanc'd in open sight. Parnel.

2. To make improvement.
They who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and swell themselves with a little articulated air, should not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and distinct ideas of those entities. Locke.

ADVANCE. n. f. [from to advance.]
1. The act of coming forward.
All the foot were put into Abington, with a resolution to quit, or defend, the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon.

So, like the fun's advance, your tides show;
Which, as he rises, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency to come forward to meet a lover; an act of intation.
In vain are all the pleas'd wiles,
In vain those eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the smiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Hud.

His genius was below
The skill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, tho' he cannot spell, is wise
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret for a kind advance. Swift.

He has described the unworthy passion of the goddess Ca-lypto, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his own country. Pope.

3. Progression; rise from one point to another.
Our Saviour raised the ruler's daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus; the first of these, when she had just expired;
the second, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been some time buried. And having, by these gradual advances, manifested his divine power, he at last exerted the highest and most glorious degree of it; and raised himself also by his own all-quickenig virtue, and according to his own express prediction. Atterbury.

Men of study and thought, that reason right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their discoveries of it. Locke.

4. Improvement; progress towards perfection.
The principle and object of the greatest importance in the world to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale.

ADVANCEMENT. n. f. [avancement, Fr.]
1. The act of coming forward.
This refinement having begun about the time of the revolution, I had some share in the honour of promoting it; and I observe, that it makes daily advancements, and, I hope, in time, will raise our language to the utmost perfection. Swift.

2. The act of being advanced; preferment.
During whose reign, the Percies of the North
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. The act of advancing another.
In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More than in your advancement. Shakespeare.

4. Improvement.
Nor can we conceive it may be unwelcome unto those honoured worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADVANCER. n. f. [from advancer.]
He that advances any thing; a promoter; forwarder.
Soon after the death of a great officer, who was judged no advancer of the king's matters, the king said to his solicitor Bacon, who was his kinsman, How, tell me truly, what say you of your cousin that is gone? Bacon.

Let us add only this concerning this latter fort, that they are greater advancers of defamatory designs, than the very first contrivers. Government of the Tongue.

ADVANTAGE. n. f. [avantage, Fr.]
1. Superiority; often with of or ever before a person.
In the practical prudence of managing such guits, the laity may have some advantage over the clergy; whose experience is, and ought to be, less of this world than the others. Sprat.

All other forts and facts of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much surer title to happiness than we.
Atterbury.

2. Superiority gained by stratagem, or unlawful means.
The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wrest it to their bad purposes. Spenser's State of Ireland.

But specially he took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bruit of his malignity was spread every-where. 2 Mac. viii. 7.

It is a noble and a sure defiance of a great malice, backed with a great interest; which yet can have no advantage of a man, but from his own expectations of something that is without him. South's Sermoni.

As soon as he was got to Sicily, they sent for him back; designing to take advantage, and prosecute him in the absence of his friends. Swift.

3. Opportunity; convenience.
I beseech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Deidemonia alone. Shakespeare.

4. Favourable circumstances.
Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get.
A face, which is over-bush'd, appears to advantage in the deepest scarlet, and the darkest complexion is not a little alleviated by a black hood. Addison.

True wit is nature to advantage dress'd;
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

5. Gain; profit.
For thou sayst, what advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin? Joh. xxxv. 1.

Certain

Certain it is, that advantage now fits in the room of confidence, and flatters all.

6. Overplus; something more than the mere lawful gain.

O my gentle Hubert,

We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh

There is a foul countess thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love.

Shakespeare's King John.

You said, you neither lend nor borrow

Upon advantage.

7. Preponderation on one side of the comparison.

Much more should the consideration of this pattern arm us with patience against ordinary calamities; especially if we consider his example with this advantage, that though his sufferings were wholly undeserved, and not for himself but for us, yet he bore them patiently.

Tilulston.

ADVANTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey what I set down to my lady: it shall advantage

more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas.

We should have pursued some other way, more effectual, for diffusing the common energy, and advancing ourselves.

Locke.

The trial hath enmity'd thee no way,

Rather more honour left, and more esteem;

Me taught advancing, missing what I aim'd.

Milton.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground.

To enable it with the spirit that inspires the Royal Society, were to advance it in one of the best capacities in which it is impow'ring.

Glaville.

ADVANTAGED. adj. [from to advance.] Possessed of advantages.

In the most advantaged tempers, this disposition is but comparative; whereas the most of men labour under disadvantages, which nothing can rid them off.

Glaville.

ADVANTAGE-GROUND. n. f. Ground that gives superiority, and opportunities of annoyance or resistance.

This excellent man, who stood not upon the advantage-ground before, from the time of his promotion to the archbishopric, or rather from that of his being commissioner of the treasury, exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions; who agreed in nothing else.

Clarendon.

ADVANTAGEOUS. adj. [from advantage, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; useful; opportune; convenient.

The time of sickness, or affliction, is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a season of peculiar property for the voice of God to be heard; and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increasing spiritual life in the soul.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

Here perhaps

Some advantageous act may be achiev'd

By sudden onset, either with hell-fire

To waltz his whole creation; or possess

All as his own.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. It is used with relation to persons, and followed by to.

Since every painter paints himself in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himself, to the end that he may cultivate those talents which make his genius.

Dryden.

ADVANTAGEOUSLY. adv. [from advantageous.]

Conveniently; opportunely; profitably.

It was advantageously situated, there being an easy passage from it to Egypt, Ethiopia, Persia, and India, by sea. Arab.

ADVANTAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from advantageous.] Quality of being advantageous; profitableness; usefulness; convenience.

The last property, which qualifies God for the fittest object of our love, is, the advantageousness of his to us, both in the present and the future life.

Boyle's Seraphic Love.

ADVENE. v. n. [advenio, Lat.] To accede to something; to become part of something else, without being essential; to be superadded.

A fact which considered in judicature, is stiled an accidental cause; and the accidental of any act, is said to be whatever advens to the act itself already substantiated.

Ayliffe.

ADVENS. adj. [adveniens, Lat.] Advancing; coming from outward causes; superadded.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advens, be a great error in philosophy, almost all the world hath hitherto been mistaken.

Glaville's Unity of Dogmatism.

Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet further removed by advens deception; for they are daily mocked into error by subtler devices. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADVENT. n. f. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.]

The name of one of the holy seasons, signifying the coming of the Lord, or the coming of our Saviour; which is made the subject of our devotion during the four weeks before Christmas.

ADVENTINE. adj. [from adventus, adventum.] Adventitious; that which is extrinsically added; that which comes from outward causes: a word scarcely in use.

As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true, that, if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and spirits of the body, it tendeth to dissolution or notable alteration.

ADVENTITIOUS. adj. [adventitious, Lat.] That which advances; accidental; supervenient; extrinsically added, not essentially inherent.

Dificulties of continuance get an adventitious strength from custom, besides their material cause from the humours.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious; yet such changes of colours, from whatever cause they proceed, may be properly enough taken in, to illustrate the present subject.

Boyle.

If his blood boil, and the adventitious fire

Rais'd by high meats, and higher wines, require

To temper and allay the burning heat;

Waters are brought, which by decoction get

New coolness.

Dryden.

Of this we have an instance in the gem-kind; where, of all the many sorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diversities, as to lustre, colour, and hardness, arising from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter.

Westward.

ADVENTIVE. n. f. [from adventus, Lat.] The thing or person that comes from without: a word not now in use.

That the natives be not so many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and the adventive also.

Beacon's Advice to Sir George Villiers.

ADVENTUAL. adj. [from advent.]

Relating to the season of advent.

I do also daily use one other collect; as, namely, the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal, for their proper seasons.

ADVENTURE. n. f. [French.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event of which we have no direction.

The general fummoned three castles that were near: one desperate of succour, and not desirous to dispute the defence, presently yielded; but two stood upon their adventure.

Sir John Hayward.

2. In this sense is used the phrase, at all adventures, [à l'adventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational scheme.

Blows flew at all adventures, wounds and deaths given and taken unexpected; many scarce knowing their enemies from their friends.

Where the mind does not perceive this probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction.

Locke.

3. The occasion of casual events; an enterprise in which something must be left to hazard.

For I must love, and am resolv'd, to try

My fate, or, failing in th' adventure, die.

Dryden.

This noun, with all its derivatives, are frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

TO ADVENTURE. v. n. [adventurer, Fr.]

1. To try the chance; to date.

Be not angry,

Most mighty prince, that I have adventur'd

To try your taking of a false report.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to feel the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness.

Deuter. xxviii. 26.

2. In an active sense, to put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventur'd his life for, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian.

Judges, ix. 17.

3. It is often used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himself.

ADVENTURER. n. f. [adventurer, Fr.] He that seeks occasions of hazard; he that puts himself in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, said he,

That hath his sword through hard assay forgone,

And now hath vow'd, till he avenged be

Of that despiteful, never to wear none.

Fairy Queen.

The kings of England did not make the conquest of Ireland their own work; it was begun by particular adventurers, and other volunteers, who came to seek their fortunes in Ireland.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

In this action, highly commendable, he intended to hazard his own action, that is, the more easily he might win adventurers, who else were like to be left forward.

Religion.

Had it not been for the British, which the late wars drew over, and of adventurers or colonists seated here, the country had, by the last war, and plague, been left, in a manner, desolate.

Temple's Apollonius.

Their wealthy trade from pirate's rapine free,

Our merchants shall no more adventurers be.

Dryden.

ADVEN-

ADVENTUROUS. adj. [adventurus, Fr.]

1. He that is inclined to adventures; and, consequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and sea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more adventurous knight;
Who often drew his sword, and always for the right.

Dryd. Hind. and Painter.

2. Applied to things; that which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long.
Nor dare attempt a more adventurous song.
My humble verse demands a soter theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling stream.

Admisa.

ADVENTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventurus.] After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously.

Shakespeare's Ham. V.

ADVENTURE-SOME. adj. [from adventure.]

The same with adventurous: a low word, scarcely used in writing.

ADVENTURE-SOMENESS. n. f. [from adventure-some.] The quality of being adventure-some.

Lich.

ADVERB. n. f. [adverbium, Lat.]

A word joined to a verb or adjective, and solely applied to the use of qualifying and retransferring the latitude of their signification, by the intimation of some circumstance thereof; as of quality, manner, degree.

Clark's Latin Grammar.

Thus we say, he runs swiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuously.

ADVERBIAL. adj. [adverbialis, Lat.] That which has the quality or figure of an adverb.

ADVERBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.] Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I should think alia was joined adverbially with trémis, did Virgil make use of so equivocal a syntax.

Aldijou.

ADVERSABLE. adj. [from adversa.]

Contrary to; opposite to.

ADVERSARIA. n. f. [Lat.] A book, as it should seem, in which Doktor and Creditor were let in opposition. A common-place; a book to note in.

These parchment are supposed to have been St. Paul's adversaria.

Bull's Sermons.

ADVERSARY. n. f. [adversarius, Fr. adversarius, Lat.]

An opponent; antagonist; enemy: generally applied to those that have verbal or judicial quarrels; as, contrivants or litigants: sometimes to an opponent in single combat. It may sometimes imply an open profusion of enmity; as we say, a secret enemy is worse than an open adversary.

Yet am I noble, as the adversary.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

I come to cope.
Those rites and ceremonies of the church, therefore, which were the self same now that they were, when holy and virtuous men maintained them against profane and deriding adversaries i. e. her own children have in derision.

Hexter.

Mean while th' adversary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts infamous, of highest design,
Puts on swift wings.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

An adversary, on the contrary, makes a stricter search into us, and discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes.

Admisa. Spectator.

ADVERSATIVE. adj. [adversativus, Lat.]

A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes some opposition or variety; as in this sentence: This diamond is orient, but it is rough. But is an adversative conjunction.

ADVERSE. adj. [adversus, Lat.]

In prose it has now the accent on the first syllable; in verse it is accented on the first by Shakespeare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the last, by Dryden; on the fifth, by Johnson.

1. Adine with contrary directions; as, two bodies in collision.

Was I for this high wreck upon the sea,
And twice, by adverse winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

As when two polar winds blowing adverse,
Upon the Cronian sea together drive
Mountains of ice.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

With adverse blast up-turns them from the South,
Notus and Aler.

Isid. l. 701.

A cloud of smoke envelopes either hull;
And all at once the combatants are lost;
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen;
Couriers with couriers jostling, men with men.

Dryd.

2. Figuratively, contrary to the wish or desire, thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is opposed to propitious.

What if he hath decreed, that I shall miss
Be try'd in humble fate, and things adverse;
By tribulations, injuries, insults,
Contumpts, and forms, and snarers, and violence.

Milton.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,
Unhappy men, or adverse late,
Sunk deep into the galls of an afflicted state.

Reformation.

3. Personally opponent; the person that counteracts another, or contends any thing.

Well the law her father was grown her adverse party; and yet her too true fact, as the most favour her rivals.

Shakep.

ADVERSITY. n. f. [adversitas, Fr.] Adversity; calamity; that is, opposition to our wishes.

1. The cause of our sorrow, affliction; misfortune. In this sense it may have a plural.

Let me embrace these four adversities,

For wife men lay, it is the worst condition.

Shakep. Hen. VI.

2. The state of unhappiness; misery.

Sweet are the ills of adversity,

Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,

Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.

Shakespeare.

Concerning deliverance itself from all adversity, we see next to say men are in adversity, whenever they feel any small hindrance of their welfare in this world, but when some notable affliction or cross, some great calamity or trouble, befall-eth them.

Hexter.

A remembrance of the good use he had made of prosperity, contributed to support his mind under the heavy weight of adversity, which then lay upon him.

Atterbury.

ADVERSIVELY. adv. [from adversa.] In an adverse manner; oppositely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath.

Meeting two such wealthmen as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurgusies) if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it.

Shakespeare's Cardinal.

TO ADVERT. v. n. [advertis, Lat.]

1. To attend to; to regard; to observe; with the particle in before the object of regard.

The mind of men being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of such an innumerable number of vast bodies, will afford matter of admiration.

Ray on the Creation.

Now is the universal whole advert;

The earth regard as of that whole a part;

In which wide frame more noble worlds abound;

Witness, ye glorious orbs, which hang around.

Blackmore.

2. We sometimes say, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVERTENCE. n. f. [from advert.]

Attention to; regard to; consideration.

Christianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may let its foot; allow but a sober advertence to its proposals, and it will move the whole world.

Deacy of Piet.

ADVERTENCY. n. f. [from advert.] The same with advertence.

Attention; regard; heedfulness.

Too much advertency is not your talent; or else you had fled from that text, as from a rock.

Swift.

TO ADVERTISE. v. n. [from advert, Fr.] It is now spoken with the accent upon the last syllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the second.

1. To inform another; to give intelligence; with an accusative of the person informed.

The bishop did require a respite,

Wherein he might the king his lord advertise;

Whether our daughter were legitimate.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

As I by friends am well advertised,

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,

Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,

With many more considerations are in arms.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. To inform; to give notice; with of before the subject of information.

The death of Solymus nothing suspected, Fezates, understanding that Solymus expected more assured advertisement, sent unto the other Bassas; unto whom he declared the death of the emperor; of which they, by another messenger, advertised Solymus; firing those letters with all their hands and seals.

Knox's History of the Turks.

They were to advertise the ch. of her of the cities of his subjects, occasioned by his absence, to leave his successor, and to invite him to listen his return.

Dryden.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertisement in the publick prints; as, He advertised his house.

ADVERTISEMENT, or ADVERTISEMANT. n. f. [from advertise, Fr.]

1. Instruction; admonition.

—'Tis all men's office to speak patience

To those, that wing under the load of sorrow;

But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,

To be so moral, when he shall ensue

The like himself: therefore give me no counsel;

My griefs are lower than advertisement.

Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

2. Intelligence; information.

—'Tis, as a cunning prince that useth spies,

If they return no news, doth nothing know;

But if they make advertisement of his,

The prince's counsel all away do go.

Sir John Denham.

He

He had received advertisement, that the party, which was sent for his relief from London, had received some bruise in Somersetshire, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their several sounds, serve for many kinds of advertisements, in military affairs: the bells (give to proclaim a scare-fire; and, in some places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine service; the hour of the day; day of the month. Hud.

3. Notice of any thing published in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTISER. n. f. [advertiseur, Fr.]

Advertising, and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Turned at your service.

75. ADVISERATE. n. n. [adviseratus, Lat.]

To draw towards evening.

ADVICE. n. f. [avis, advise, Fr. from advise, low Latin.]

1. Counsel; instruction: except that instruction implies superiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.

Break we our match up, and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have seen to-night
Unto young Hamlet.

O troubled, weak and coward, as thou art!

Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worse extremes with swifter steps would run;
Not far'd by virtue, yet by vice undone.

2. Reflection; prudent consideration; as, he always acts with good advice.

What he hath won, that he hath fortified;

So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order, in so fierce a course,
Doth want example.

3. Consultation; deliberation; with the particle with.

Great princes, for the most part, taking advice with workmen, with no less skill, fer their things together.

4. Intelligence; as, the merchants received advice of their loss. This sense is somewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

ADVICE-BEARER. n. f. A vessel employed to bring intelligence.

ADVISABLE. adj. [from advise.] Prudent; fit to be advised.

Some judge it advisable for a man to account with his heart every day; and this, no doubt, is the best and surest course;
for still the oftener, the better.

It is not advisable to reward, where men have the tenderness not to punish.

ADVISABLENESS. n. f. [from advisable.] The quality of being advisable, or fit; fitness; propriety.

75. ADVISEE. v. a. [adviseur, Fr.]

1. To counsel; with the particle before the thing advised.

If you could sit abroad, go arm'd.—
—Arm'd, brother!

—Brother, I advise you to be stiff.

I would advise all gentlemen to learn merchants accounts, and not to think it a skill that belongs not to them.

When I consider the scruples and cautions I here lay in your way, methinks it looks as if I advised you to something which I would have offered at, but in effect not done.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing; often with the particle of before the thing told.

You were advised, his death was capable

Of wounds and fears; and that his forward spirit

Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd.

Such discourse bring on,

As may advise him of his happy fate;

Happens in his power, let free to will.

A polling messenger dispatch'd from hence,

Of this fair troop advised their aged prince.

75. ADVISE. v. n.

1. To consult; with the particle with before the person consulted; as, he advised with his companions.

2. To consider; to deliberate.

Advise if this be worth

Attempting, or to sit in darkness here,

Hatching vain empires.

ADVISER. participle adj. [from advise.]

1. Acting with deliberation and design; prudent; wife.

Let his travel appear rather in his discourse, than in his apparel or gesture; and, in his discourse, let him be rather advised in his answers, than forward to tell stories.

Th' Almighty Father, where he sits

Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,

Consulting on the sum of things foreseen,

This tumult, and permitted all, advised.

2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpose; acted with design.

By that which we work naturally, as, when we breathe, sleep, and move, we fer forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no express purpose to make that our end, nor any advised determination therein to follow a law.

Nº IV.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both.

ADVISEDLY. adv. [from advised.] Deliberately; purposely; by design; prudently.

Surprise may be made by moving things, when the party is in haste, and cannot stay to consider advisedly of that which is moved.

Thou filiest second thoughts (which are by all allowed the best) a relapse; and talkest of a quagmire, where no man ever sluck fast; and accusest constancy of mischief in what is natural, and advisedly undertaken.

ADVISEDNESS. n. f. [from advised.] Deliberation; cool and prudent procedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modestly tender their thoughts to the consideration of those that are in authority; to whose care it belongs, in preferring concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all just advisedness and moderation.

ADVISEMENT. n. f. [advisement, Fr.]

1. Counsel; information.

What strange adventure do you now pursue?
Perhaps my succour, or advisement meet,

More stead you much your purpose to subdue. Fairy Queen.
I will, according to your advisement, declare the evils which seem most hurtful.

2. It is taken likewise, in old writers, for prudence and circumspection. It is now, in both senses, antiquated.

ADVISER. n. f. [from advise.] 1. He person that advises, or gives counsel; a counsellor.

Here, free from court-compliances, he walks,

And with himself, his best advise, talks.

They never fall of their most artful and indefatigable addres, to silence this impertinent advise, whose levity ayes their excesses.

ADULTATION. n. f. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery;
high compliment.

O be sick, great Greatness's!

Think't thou that fiery fever will go out,

With titles blown from adulation?

They who flattered him most before, mentioned him now with the greatest bitterness, and called him now the corrupter of the king, and betrayer of the people; without imputing the least crime to him, committed since the time of that exalted adulation, or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now.

ADULTATOR. n. f. [adultator, Lat.] A flatterer.

ADULTATORY. adj. [adultatorius, Lat.] Flattering; full of compliments.

ADULT, adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; past the age of infancy and weakness.

They would appear less able to approve themselves, not only to the confessor, but even to the catechist, in their adult age, than they were in their minority; as having scarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, since they conned them to avoid correction.

The earth, by these applauded schools, 'tis said,

This single crop of men and women breeds;

Who grown adult, (so chance it seems enjoin'd)

Did male and female, propagate their kind.

ADULT. n. f. A person above the age of infancy, or grown to some degree of strength; sometimes full grown: a word used chiefly by medicinal writers.

The depression of the cranium, without a fracture, can but seldom occur; and then it happens to children, whose bones are more pliable and soft than those of adults.

ADULTNESS. n. f. [from adult.] The state of being adult.
See ADULESCENCE.

75. ADULTER. v. a. [adulterare, Fr. adulterare, Lat.] To commit adultery with another; a word not classical.

His chaste wife

He adulter still: his thoughts lie with a whore. B. J. J. J.

ADULTERANT. n. f. [adulterans, Lat.] The person or thing which adulterates.

75. ADULTERATE. v. a. [adulterare, Fr. adulterare, Lat.]

1. To commit adultery.

But fortune, oh!

Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;

And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France.

2. To corrupt by some foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common pot-ashes, bought of them that sell it in shops, who are not so foolishly knavish, as to adulterate them with salt-petre, which is much dearer than pot-ashes.

Could a man be compos'd to such an advantage of constitution,

tion, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind ; yet this second nature would alter the crafts of his understanding.

The present war has so adulterated our tongue with strange words, that it would be impossible for one of our great grandfathers to know what his posterity have been doing.

ADULTERATED. adj. [from adulterate.]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am polluted with an adulterate blot ;
My blood is mingled with the grime of lust ;
Being flung by thy contagion.

Shakef.

Shakef.

2. Corrupted with some foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them.

Govern. of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and silver, and may keep their adulterate copper at home ; for we are determined not to purchase it with our manufactures.

Swift's Miscellany.

ADULTERATENESS. n. f. [from adulterate.] The quality or state of being adulterate, or counterfeit.

ADULTERATION. n. f. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting by foreign mixture ; contamination.

To make the compound pafs for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration, or counterfeiting ; but if it be done avowedly, and without disguising, it may be a great saving of the richer metal.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. The state of being adulterated, or contaminated.

Such translations are like the adulteration of the noblest wines, where something of the colour, spirit, and flavour, will remain ; and, while they please some injudicious palates, do only raise the indignation of every good taste.

Fenton.

ADULTERER. n. f. [adulter, Lat.] The person guilty of adultery.

With what impatience must the muse behold,
The wife by her procuring husband fold ;
For tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed.

Dryd.

ADULTRESS. n. f. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when she was asked, What was the punishment for adulterers ? There are no such things here.

Government of the Tongue.

A robe of tiffue, stiff with golden wire ;
An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire ;
From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought ;
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought.

Dryd.

ADULTERINE. n. f. [adulterine, Fr. adulterinus, Lat.] A child born of an adulteress : a term of canon law.

ADULTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

Th' adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That notes it against us.

Shakespeare.

An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is repairable ; and to make provision for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate.

Taylor.

I think on whole faith th' adulterous youth rely'd ;
Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride ?

Dryd.

ADULTERY. n. f. [adulterium, Lat.] The act of violating the bed of a married person.

All thy comestick grifts at home be left,
The wife's adultery, with the servants theft ;
And (the most racking thought which cau intrude)
Forget false friends, and their ingratitude.

Dryd.

ADUMBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate.] That which gives a slight resemblance.

To ADUMBRATE. v. a. [ad-umbr, Lat.]

To shadow out ; to give a slight likeness ; to exhibit a faint resemblance, like that which shadows afford of the bodies which they represent.

Heaven is designed for our reward, as well as rescue ; and therefore is adumbrated by all those positive excellencies, which can endear or recommend.

Decay of Piety.

ADUMBRATION. n. f. [from adumbrate.]

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a slight and imperfect representation. See ADUMBRAIE.

To make some adumbration of that we mean, the interior is rather an impulsion or confusion of the air, than an elision or section of the same.

Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. The slight and imperfect representation of a thing ; a faint sketch.

The observers view but the backside of the hangings ; the right one is on the other side the grave : and our knowledge is but like those broken ends ; at best a most confused adumbration.

Glennville's Scripta Scientifica.

Those of the first sort have some adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the sensible.

Hales.

ADUNATION. n. f. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The state of being united ; union ; a word of little use.

When, by glaciation, wood, straw, dust, and water, are supposed to be united into one lump, the cold does not cause any real union or adunation, but only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice ; the ether bodies, being accidentally present in that liquor, are frozen up in it, but not really united.

Boyle.

ADUNCTIV. n. f. [adunctio, Lat.] Crookedness ; flexure inwards ; hookedness.

There can be no question, but the adunctivity of the pounce, and beak of the hawks, is the cause of the great and habitual immorality of those animals.

Arbuthnot.

ADUNQUE. adj. [adunqu, Lat.] Crooked ; bending inwards ; hooked.

The birds that are speakers, are parrots, pies, jays, jawn, and ravens ; of which parrots have an adunqu bill, but the rest not.

Plinius's Nat. Hist.

ADVOCACY. n. f. [from advocate.] The act of pleading ; vindication ; defence ; apology ; a word of little use.

If any there are who are of opinion, that there are no antipodes, or that the stars do fall, they shall not want herein the applause or advocacy of Satan.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADVOCATE. n. f. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He that pleads the cause of another in a court of judicature. An advocate, in the general import of the word, is that person who has the pleading and management of a judicial cause. In a strict way of speaking, only that person is styled advocate, who is the patron of the cause, and is often, in Latin, termed patronus, and, in English, a person of the long robe.

Asl. Par.

Learn what thou ow'st thy country and thy friend ;
What's requisite to spare, and what to spend ;
Learn this ; and, after, envy not the store
Of the great advocate that grinds the poor.

Dryden.

2. He that pleads any cause, in whatever manner, as a contravertist or vindicator.

If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to the loud death.

Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Of the several forms of government that have been, or are, in the world, that cause seems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by freer experience.

Temple's Miscellaneous.

3. It is used with the particle pro before the person or thing, in whose favour the plea is offered.

Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for idly dead and gone.

Pope.

4. In the scriptural and sacred sense, it stands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me his advocate,

And propitiation ; all his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingrat.

Milton.

ADVOCATION. n. f. [from advocate.] The office of pleading ; plea ; apology.

Alas ! thrice gentle Cassio,
My advocation is not now in tune ;
My lord is not my lord ; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour alter'd.

Shakespeare.

ADVOCATION. n. f. [advoca, advocatum, Lat.] The act of flying to something.

Diut.

ADVOLUTION. n. f. [advolutio, Lat.] The act of rolling to something.

He was the most perfidious man upon the earth, and he had made a marriage compounded between an advou'ry and a rape.

Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE. n. f. He that has the right of advowson. See ADVOWSON.

ADVOWSON. or ADVOWZEN. n. f. [In common law.]

A right to present to a benefice, and signifies as much as jur. Patronatus. In the canon law, it is so termed, because they that originally obtained the right of presenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto ; and are therefore termed sometimes Patrons, sometimes Advocati.

Guili.

To ADVOWE. v. n. [advow, Lat.] To burn up.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor scorch, doth mellow, and not advow.

Locke.

ADU'RY. adj. [adulus, Lat.]

1. Burnt up ; hot as with fire, scorched.

By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter ; and such a heat as will not make the body aduly, or fragile.

Bacon.

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime.

Milton.

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philosophical sense, to the complexion and humours of the body.

Such humours are aduly, as, by long heat, become of a hot and fiery nature, as cholera, and the like.

Quincy.

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state.
The same aduly complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field.

Pope.

ADU'RY. adj. [See ADU'RY.]

1. Burnt ; scorched ; dried with fire.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle art,
Compacted, and aduly, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd.

Parad. Lost.

2. Hot,

1. Hoe, as the complexion.

In regard they are but the fruits of adulst choler, and the expositions of a vindictive spirit, Hælia needs not much care for them; besides, the mult give leaders leave to speak. Howell.
And'rtell'd. v.f. [from adulst.] That which may be adulst, or burnt up.

ADDUCTION. n.f. [from adulst.] The act of burning up, or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a consequent of a burning collicative fever; the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing in adulst, upon the drier and sifter parts, changes into a marcid fever.

Harvey on Consumptions.

ADZ. n.f. See ADDICK.

ÆE, or Æ. A diphthong of very frequent use in the Latin language, which seems not properly to have any place in the English; since the e of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple, to which, in words frequently occurring, the e of the Romans is, in the same manner, altered, as in æquator, æquidistal, and even in Æneas.

ÆOLOQUE. n.f. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology. A pastoral; a dialogue in verse between goatherds.

Which moved him rather in ægleques otherwise to write, doubting, perhaps, his ability, which he little needed, or misjudging to furnish our tongue with this kind wherein it fauteeth.

ÆOLOPS. n.f. [αἰολόψ, Gr. signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment.]

A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: a fo to a plant fo called, for its supposed virtues against such a distemper.

Æglops is a tubercle in the inner canthus of the eye.

Wijemen's Surgery.

ÆGYPTIACUM. n.f. An ointment consisting only of honey, verdigrise and vinegar.

ÆI, or ÆAL, or ÆAL.

In compound names, as æa in the Greek compounds, signifies all, or altogether. So Æthiua is a complex conqueror: Albert, all illustrious: Adrad, altogether reverend: Ajrid, altogether joyful. To these Pammachius, Pancratius, Philophilus, &c. do in some measure answer.

Gibson's Camden.

ÆI, which, according to various dialects, is pronounced uif, uifp, hæp, hæp, hæp, and, at this day, hæp; implies assistance. So Æthiua is victorious, and Ælfswad, an auxiliary governor; Ælfisja, a leader of assistance: with which Barisus, Symmachus, Episcopus, &c. bear a plain analogy.

Gibson's Camden.

ÆNIGMA. See ENIGMA.

ÆIAL. adj. [æirin, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it.

The thunder, when to roll
 With terror through the dark ærial ball. Paradise Lost.

Dicit.

ÆFFAIR. n.f. [affaire, Fr.] Business; something to be managed or transacted. It is used for both private and publick matters.

I was not born for courts or great affairs;
 I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers. P. p.
 A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging, disposing, and managing all human affairs.

Harris's Lexik.

4 What

What St. John's skill in state affairs,
 What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,
 To aid their sinking country lent,
 Was all destroy'd by one event.
 To AFFECT AR. v. n. [from affect, Fr.] To confirm; to give a sanction to; to establish: an old term of law.
 Bleed, bleed, poor country!
 Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure;
 For goodness dares not check thee!
 His title is affect'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.

AFFECT. n. f. [from the verb affect.]

1. Affection; passion; sensation.
 It seemeth that as the feet have a sympathy with the head; so the wrists have a sympathy with the heart; we see the affects and passions of the heart and spirits are notably disclosed by the pulse. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. Quality; circumstance.
 I find it difficult to make out one single ulcer, as authors describe it, without other symptoms or affects joined to it. Wijm.
 This is only the antiquated word for affectation.
 To AFFECT. v. a. [affect, Fr. affect, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects in any other thing.
 The fun
 Had first his precept to move, to shine,
 As might affect the earth with cold, and heat, Scarce tolerable. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; so far as these qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons.
 Yet even those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.
2. To move the passions.
 As a thinking man cannot but be very much *affect*ed with the idea of his appearing in the presence of that being, whom none can see and live; he must be much more *affect*ed, when he considers, that this being whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or punish him accordingly. Addison's Spectator.

3. To aim at; to endeavour after: spoken of persons.
 Atuldes broke
 His silence next, but ponder'd ere he spoke:
 Wife are thy words and glad I would obey,
 But this proud man affects imperial sway. Dryden.
4. To tend to; to endeavour after: spoken of things.
 The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as, the globe of the earth and sea affects a round figure, by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity. Newton's Opticks.
5. To be fond of; to be pleased with; to love; to regard with fondness.

That little which some of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning such matter as the sacred Scripture plentifully contains, they did in wonderful sort affect. Huter.

There is your crown;
 And he that wears the crown immortally,
 Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
 'Tis as your honour, and as your renown,
 Let me no more from this obedience rise. Shaksp.
 I think not that wars we love, and strive affect; Fairfax.
 Or that we hate sweet peace.

6. To make a shew of something; to study the appearance of any thing; with some degree of hypocrisy.
 None but a woman could a man direct
 To tell us women what we most affect. Dryd.

Another nymph, amongst the many fair,
 Before the rest *affect*ed still to stand,
 And watch'd my eye preventing my command. Prior.
 These often carry the humour so far, till their *affect*ed coldness and indiffidence quite kills all the fondness of a lover. Addison's Spectator.

The conscious husband, whom like symptoms seize,
 Charges on her the guilt of their disease;
Affecting fury, acts a madman's part,
 He'll rip the fatal secret from her heart. Grawille.

7. To imitate in an unnatural and constrained manner.
 Spenser, in affecting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius. Bem. Johnson's Dictionary.

8. To convict of some crime; to attain with guilt: a phrase merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promised and not paid, the husband is not obliged to allow her alimony. But if her parents shall become insolvent by some misfortune, she shall have alimony, unless you can affect them with fraud, in promising what they knew they were not able to perform. Argie's Foreig. n.

AFFECTATION. n. f. [affectatio, Lat.] The act of making an artificial appearance.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with sound judgment, disliked conformity between the church of God and infidels, the cause thereof hath been somewhat else than only affectation of dissimulation. Heber.

It has been, from age to age, an affectation to love the pleasure of solitude, among those who cannot possibly be supposed qualified for passing life in that manner. Spectator.

AFFECTED. participial adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally disposed or inclined.
 No marvel then if he were ill *affect*ed;
 'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
 To have th' expence and waste of his revenues. Shaksp. King Lear.

He was assured, that the model they seemed *affect*ed to in their directory, was not like to any of their foreign reformed churches now in the world. Clarendon.

2. Studied with over-much care, or with hypocritical appearance.
 These antick, lipping *affect*ed phantasies, these new tuners of accents. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

3. In a personal sense, full of affectation; as, an *affect*ed lady; hypocritically; with more appearance than reality.

Perhaps they are *affect*edly ignorant; they are so willing it should be true, that they have not attempted to examine it. Government of the Tongue.

Some indeed have been by *affect*edly vain, as to counterfeit immortality, and have stolen their death, in hopes to be esteemed immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

By talking so familiarly of one hundred and ten thousand pounds, by a tax upon a few commodities, it is plain, you are either naturally or *affect*edly ignorant of our condition. South.

AFFECTEDNESS. n. f. [from affect.] The quality of being *affect*ed, or of making false appearances.

AFFECTATION. n. f. [affectatio, Fr. affectum, Lat.]

1. The state of being *affect*ed by any cause, or agent. This general sense is little in use.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
 Some that are mad it they behold a cat;
 And others, when the bag-pipe sings i'th' nose,
 Cannot contain their urine, for *affect*ation. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

2. Passion of any kind.
 Then gain the palmer thus: most wretched man,
 That to *affect*ation does the bride lend;
 In their beginning they are weak and wan,
 But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end. Fair.

Impute it to my late solitary life, which is prone to *affect*ation. South.

*Affect*ions, as joy, grief, fear, and anger, with such like, being, as it were, the sundry fashions and forms of appetite, can neither rise at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet choose but rise at the sight of some things. Huter.

To speak truth of Caesar,
 I have not known when his *affect*ions sway'd
 More than his reason. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

Zeal ought to be composed of the highest degrees of pure *affect*ions; of which some are milder and gentler, some sharper and more vehement. South's Sermons.

I can present nothing beyond this to your *affect*ion, to excite your love and desire. Trotter.

3. Love; kindness; goodwill to some person; often with us, or towards, before the person.

I have acquainted you
 With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
 Who mutually hath answer'd my *affect*ion. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

My king is tangl'd in *affect*ion to. Shaksp.
 A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.

What warmth is there in your *affect*ion towards any of these princely favorites? Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

Make his interest depend upon mutual *affect*ion and good correspondence with others. Cadogan's General History.

Nor at last light, like most, admires the fair;
 For you he lives, and you alone shall share
 His last affection, as his early care. Pope.

4. Goodwill to any object; zeal; passionate regard.
 I have reason to distrust mine own judgment, as that which may be overborn by my zeal and *affect*ion to this cause. Becon's First War.

Set your *affect*ion upon my words; desire them, and we shall be instructed. Wijm.

His integrity to the king was without blemish, and his *affect*ion to the church so notorious, that he never moderated it. Clarendon.

All the precepts of christianity command us to moderate our passions, to temper our *affect*ions towards all things below. Temple.

Let not the mind of a student be under the influence of warm *affect*ion to things of sense, when he comes to the search of truth. Wat's Improvement of the Mind.

5. State of the mind, in general.

I here grows,
 In my most ill compos'd *affect*ion, such

A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakspeare.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affliction dark as trebus: Shakspeare.
Let no such man be trusted.

6. Quality; property.
The certainty and accurateness which is attributed to what they deliver, must be restrained to what they teach, concerning those purely mathematical disciplines, arithmetic and geometry, where the afflictions of quantity are abstractly considered. Boyle.

The mouth being necessary to conduct the voice to the shape of its cavity, necessarily gives the voice some particular affliction of found in its passage before it come to the lips. Hulder's Elements of Speech.

God may have joined immaterial souls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union; and, from those different laws of union, there will arise quite different afflictions, and natures, and species of the compound beings. Bentley's Sermons.

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cause.
It seemed to me a venereal gonorrhoea, and others thought it arose from some scorbulous affluence. Went's Surgery.

8. Lively representation in painting.
Affliction is the lively representation of any passion whatsoever, as if the figures stood not upon a cloth or board, but as if they were acting upon a stage. Watt's Architecture.

Afflictionate, adj. [affliction, Fr. from afflictio.] 1. Full of affliction; strongly moved; warm; zealous.

In their love of God, and desire to please him, men can never be too afflictionate; and it is as true, that, in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too afflictionate. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; disposed to; with the particle to.
As for the parliament, it presently took fire, being afflictionate of old, to the war of France. Bacon.

3. Food; tender.
He found me sitting, beholding this picture, I know not with how afflictionate countenance; but, I am sure, with a most afflictionate mind. Sidney.

Away they fly
Afflictionate, and unduring bear
The most delicious morsel to their young. Thomson.

4. Benevolent; tender.
When we reflect on all this afflictionate care of providence for our happiness, with what wonder must we observe the little effect it has on men. Rogers's Sermons.

Afflictionate, LY. adv. [from afflictio.] In an afflictionate manner; fondly; tenderly; benevolently.

Afflictionate, adj. [from afflictio.] The quality or state of being afflictionate; fondness; tenderness; good-will; benevolence.

Afflic'tious, adj. [from afflictio.] 1. Afflicted; constricted. This sense is now obsolete.
An afflictious ale that cons late without book, and utters it by great swaths. Shakspeare.

2. Inclined; mentally disposed.
Be kindly afflictious to one to another. Rom. xii. 10.

Afflic'tious, Y. adv. [from afflictio.] In an afflictious manner. Diell.

Afflic'ti, n. adj. [from afflictio.] That which afflicts; that which strongly touches. It is generally used for painful.

Pain is so unceasing a sentiment, that very little of it is enough to corrupt every enjoyment: and the effect God intends this variety of ungrateful and afflictive sentiments should have on us, is to reclaim our affections from this valley of tears. Rogers.

Afflic'tuous, n. f. [from afflictio.] Passionateness. Diell.

Afflic'tuous, adj. [from afflictio.] Full of passion; as, an afflic'tuous speech: a word little used.

To Afflic't, v. a. [afflic't, Fr.] A law term, signifying to condemn. See Afflard.

Afflic'tors, n. f. [from afflic't.] Such as are appointed in court-leets, &c. upon oath, to mulct such as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable, and have no express penalty set down by statute. Cassell.

Affluence, n. f. [affluere, from affluere, Fr.] 1. A marriage-contract.
At his such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won,
Accord of friends, consent of parents found,
Affluence made, my happiness begun. Fairy Queen.

2. Trust in general; confidence; secure reliance.
The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.—
—Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affluence?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrowed. Shakspeare.

3. Trust in the divine promises and protection. To this sense it is now almost confined.
It receives him into a covenant of grace, where there is pardon reached out to all truly penitent sinners, and assistance promised, and engaged, and bestowed upon every easy condition. N. IV.

etc. humility, prayer, and affluence in him. Hammond.
There can be no surer way to success, than by disclaiming all confidence in ourselves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affluence. Atterbury's Sermon.

To Affluence, v. a. [from the noun affluence.] 1. To betroth; to bind any one by promise to marriage.
To me, sad maid, or rather widow sad,
He was affluenced long time before,
And sacred pledges he both gave and had;
False, ev'nt light, infamous, and forewore. Fairy Queen.

Her should Angelo have married; was affluenced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, his brother was wrecked, having, in that vessel, the dowry of his sister. Shakspeare.

2. To give confidence.
Stranger! whose'er thou art, securely rest,
Affluenced in my faith, a friendly guest. Pope's Odyssey.

Affluencer, n. f. [from affluence.] He that makes a contract of marriage between two parties. Diell.

Afflu'dition, n. f. [from affluere, Lat. See Affied.] Mutual afflu'dition, n. f. [from affluere, Lat. See Affied.] Mutual oath of fidelity. Diell.

Afflu'dit, n. f. [Afflu'dit signifies, in the language of the common law, be made oath.] A declaration upon oath.
You said, if I return'd next year in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of afflu'dit. Dome.

Count Rechteren should have made afflu'dit, that his servants had been afflu'dit, and then Monsieur Meinsinger would have done him justice. Spectator, N. 441.

Afflu'd, participle adj. [from the verb affluere, derived from affluere, Lat. Blackton using the phrase affluere maistris.] Joined by contract; afflu'd.
Be we afflu'd, and such assurance ta'en,
As shall with either part's agreement stand. Shakspeare, Iaming of a Shrew.

Afflu'dition, n. f. [from ad and fluere, Lat.] Adoption; the act of taking a son. Clanberry.

Afflu'd, n. f. [affluere, Fr. The act of refining metals by the cupel. Diell.

Afflu'd, adj. [from affluere, Lat.] Joined by affinity to another; related to another.
If partially afflu'd, or leagu'd in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier. Shakspeare.

Afflu'd, n. f. [affluere, Fr. from affluere, I. at.] 1. Relation by marriage; relation contracted by the husband to the kindred of the wife, and by the wife to those of the husband. It is opposed to conjanguinity, or relation by birth.

In this sense it has sometimes the particle with, and sometimes to, before the person to whom the relation is contracted.
And Solomon made afflu'd with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter. 1 Kings, iii. 1.

They had left none alive, who had fet his hand to their servitude, by the blindness of rage killing many guideless persons, either for afflu'd to the tyrant, or enmity to the tyrant-killers. Sidney, b. ii.

A breach first with Spain, and not long after with France itself, notwithstanding to flrat an afflu'd, is lately treated with the one, and actually accomplished with the other; as if indeed (according to that pleasant maxim of state) kingdoms were never married. Wotton.

2. Relation to; connexion with; resemblance to; spokeen of things.
The British tongue, or Welsh, as we now call it, was in use only in this island, having great afflu'd with the old Gallicish. C Camden.

All things that have afflu'd with the heavens, move upon the center of another, which they benefit. Bacon.

The art of painting hath wonderful afflu'd with that of poetry. Dryden.

Man is more distinguished by devotion than by reason, as several brute creatures discover something like reason, though they betray not any thing that bears the least afflu'd to devotion. Addison.

To Affirm, v. n. [affirmare, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently; opposed to the word deny.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salike lies in Germany,
Between the floods of sala and of Elbe. Shakspeare.

To Affirm, v. a. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment; opposed to revert or repeal.
The house of peers hath a power of judicature in some cases, properly to examine and then to affirm; or, if there be cause, to revert the judgments which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon.

In this sense we say, to affirm the truth.

Affirmable, adj. [from affirm.] 1. That which may be affirmed. Those attributes and conceptions that were applicable and affirmable of him when present, are now affirmable and applicable to him though past. Euseb's Origin of Manhood.

AFFIRMANCE n. f. [from affirm.] Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

This statute did but restore an ancient statute, which was itself also made in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFIRMANT n. f. [from affirm.] The person that affirms; a declarer. Diil.

AFFIRMATION n. f. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring: opposed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouching, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, his to be more virtuous, and less attemptable, than any of our ladies. Shakspeare.

2. The position affirmed.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation, wherein his despair is founded; and one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is, to convince him, that Christ's death, if he perform the condition required, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

The learned in the laws of our land observe, that our statutes sometimes are only the affirmation, or ratification, of that which, by common law, was held before. Hesker.

AFFIRMATIVE adj. [from affirm.]

1. That which affirms, opposed to negative; in which we use the affirmative, that is, the affirmative position.

For the affirmative, we are now to answer such proofs of theirs as have been before alleged. Hesker.

Whether there are such beings or not, 'tis sufficient for my purpose, that many have believed the affirmative.

Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

2. That which can or may be affirmed: a sense used chiefly in science.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vanish or cease, there negative ones begin: so in mechanics, where attraction ceases, there a repulsive virtue ought to succeed. Newt. Opt.

3. Applied to persons; he who has the habit of affirming with vehemence; positive; dogmatical.

Be not confident and affirmative in an uncertain matter, but report things modestly and temperately, according to the degree of that persuasion, which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the authority, or the reason, inducing thee. Taylor.

AFFIRMATIVELY adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the positive side; not negatively.

The reason of man hath no such restraint: concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively; not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the last heavens, but also denying there is any vacancy within them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

AFFIRMER n. f. [from affirm.] The person that affirms.

If by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or, at most, our duty toward our neighbour, without including, in the idea of it, the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logic.

TO AFFIX v. a. [affix, affixum, Lat.] To unite to the end, or a posteriori; to subjoin.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another. Locke.

If men constantly affixed applause and disgrace where they ought, this principle would have a very good influence on the publick conduct of men; though on secret villanies it lays no restraint. Rogers's Sermons.

AFFIX n. f. [affixum, Lat.] A term of grammar; something united to the end of a word.

In the Hebrew language, the noun has its affix, to denote the pronouns possessive or relative. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

AFFIXION n. f. [from affix.]

1. The act of affixing.

2. The state of being affixed. Diil.

AFFLATION n. f. [afflu, afflatum, Lat.] The act of breathing upon any thing. Diil.

AFFLATUS n. f. [Lat.] Communication of the power of prophecy. Diil.

TO AFFLICT v. a. [affligere, afflictum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment.

In the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you. Leviticus, xvi. 29.

Give not over thy mind to heaviness, and afflict not thyself in thine own counsel. Ecclesiastes, xxx. 21.

For a father afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child soon taken away, now honoured as a God, which was then a dead man, and delivered to those that were under him, ceremonies and sacrifices. Wisdom.

It teacheth us, how God thought fit to plague and afflict them, if doth not appoint in what form and manner we ought to punish the sin of idolatry in others. Hesker.

2. O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me?

The lights burn blue—Is it not dead midnight?

3. Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakspeare.

Richard III.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye,

And my heart labours with a sudden sigh. Prior.

2. The passive to be afflicted, has often at before the causal noun. The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison.

AFFLICTEDNESS n. f. [from afflicted.] The state of affliction, or of being afflicted; sorrowfulness; grief.

AFFLICTER n. f. [from afflict.] The person that afflicts.

AFFLICTION n. f. [afflictio, Lat.]

1. The cause of pain or sorrow; calamity.

To the flesh, as the Apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous: therefore, nature, which causeth fear, teacheth to pray against all adversity. Hesker.

We'll bring you to Windsor, to one Mr. Brook, that you have cozened of money; I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction. Shakspeare.

2. The state of sorrowfulness; misery: opposed to prosperity.

Besides you know,

Prosperity's the very bond of love,
Whole fresh complexion, and whole heart together Affliction alters. Shakspeare.

Where shall we find the man that bears affliction,
Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato? Addison.

Some virtues are only seen in affliction, and some in prosperity. Addison, Spectator, N. 257.

AFFLICTIVE adj. [from afflict.] That which causes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found matrimony a duty dressed up indeed with all that was terrible and afflictive to human nature, yet not at all the less a duty. South.

Nor find

Where to retire themselves, or where appease

Th' afflictive keen desire of food, expos'd
To winds, and storms, and jaws of savage death. Philips.

Restless Proserpine—

—On the spacious land and liquid main,

Spreads slow disease, and darts afflictive pain. Prior.

AFFLUENCE n. f. [affluens, Fr. affluentia, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; concourse. It is almost always used figuratively.

I shall not relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince being there had been noised. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; stream of wealth; plenty.

Those degrees of fortune, which give fulness and affluence to one station, may be want and penury in another. Kegens.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,

And the gay concourse of a life well spent,

Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace. Pope.

AFFLUENCY n. f. The same with affluence.

AFFLUENT adj. [affluens, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

These parts are no more than foundation-piles of the ensuing body; which are afterwards to be increased and raised to a greater bulk by the affluent blood, that is transmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey.

2. Abundant; exuberant; wealthy.

I see thee, Lord and end of my desire,

Loaded and blest with all the affluent store,

Which human vows at smoking shrines implore. Prior.

AFFLUENTNESS n. f. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Diil.

AFFLUX n. f. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to some place; affluence.

2. That which flows to another place.

The cause hereof cannot be a supply by procreations; ergo, it must be by new afflux to London out of the country. Grant.
The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey.

AFFLUXION n. f. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.

2. That which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation either simple, consisting of an hot and sanguineous affluxion, or else denominable from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO AFFUR v. a. [affuror, affuror, Fr.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the fall affur is grain; the trees affur fruit. This seems to be the primitive signification.

2. To grant, or confer any thing; generally in a good sense, and sometimes in a bad, not properly.

So soon as Maumou there arrived, the door

To him did open, and *affur*ed way. Fairy Queen.

This is the consolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity *affur*eth continual comfort and security; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it *affur*eth despair and remediless calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To be able to sell. It is used always with reference to some certain price; as, I can affur this for less than the other.

They fill their magazines in times of the greatest plenty, that so they may affur cheaper, and increase the public revenue at a small expence of its members. Addison on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, traders can afford more luxury in peace than war.

The same errors run through all families, where there is wealth enough to afford that their sons may be good for nothing. Swift.

7. AFFOREST. v. a. [afforēstare, Lat.] To turn ground into forest.

It appeareth, by Choate de Foresta, that he afforsted many woods and wastes, to the grievance of the subject, which by that law were disafforsted. Dowici.

AFROUSTATION. n. f. [from affrust.]

The charter de Foresta was to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II. who had made new afforstations, and much extended the rigour of the forest laws. Hale.

7. AFFRANCHISE. v. a. [affrancher, Fr.] To make free.

7. AFFRAY. v. a. [affrayer, or effrayer, Fr. which Menage derives from frayer; perhaps it comes from friger.] To fight; to terrify; to strike with fear. This word is not now in use.

The same to wight he never would disclose,
But when as monsters huge he would dismay,
Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,

Or when the flying heavens he would affray. Fairy Queen.

AFFRAY, or AFFRAYMENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

A tumultuous assault of one or more persons upon others; a law term. A battle: in this sense it is written fray.

AFFRICTION. n. f. [affricitio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times observed, in wearing silver-hilted swords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affricition would quickly blacken them; and, congruously hereto, I have found pens blacked almost all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a silver case. Boyle.

7. AFFRIGHT. v. a. [See FRIGHT.]

1. To afflict with fear; to terrify: it generally implies a sudden impression of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whose foud is death. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

God-like his courage seem'd, whom not delight
Could soften, nor the face of death affright. Waller.

He, when his country (threaten'd with alarm)
Requires his courage and his conqu'ring arm.

Shall, more than once, the Punic bands affright. Dryd.

2. It is used in the passive, sometimes with at before the thing feared.

Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you. Drut.

3. Sometimes with the particle with before the thing feared.

With hellish fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then uprose. Fairy Queen.

AFFRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Terror; fear. 'Tis word is chiefly poetical.
As the moon, clouded with cloudy night,

Does shew to him, that walks in fear and affright. F. 2.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house;

Yet still he was at hand, without request,
To serve the sick; to succour the distress'd:

Templing, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempestuous night. Dryden.

4. The cause of fear; a terrible object.

I see the gods
Upbraid our failings, and would humble them,
By sending these affrights, while we are here,

That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. B. Johnson.

The war at hand appears with more affright,
And rises every moment to the fight. Dryden.

AFFRIGHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terror; terrible.

We shall find there is an absence of all that is destructive or affrightful to human nature. Dewey of Piety.

AFFRIGHTMENT. n. f. [from affright.]

1. The impression of fear; terror.

Hearing the was at rest, he attended till the should awake of herself, which he did with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton.

2. The state of fearfulness.

Whether those that, under any anguish of mind, return to affrightments, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

7. AFFRONT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frōnem stare; ad frōnem is contumeliam aliter, to insult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This seems the genuine and original sense of the word, which was formerly in different to good or ill.

We have closely sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia. Shakespeare.

The seditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway; whom when they found both ready and resolute to fight, they desired interparance, and in the mean-time they began to fortify. Hayward.

2. To meet, in an hostile manner, front to front.
His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd,
And with their darknesses durst affront his light. Milt.

3. To offer an open insult; to offend avowedly. With respect to this sense, it is observed by Cervantes, that, if a man strikes another on the back, and then runs away, the person so struck is injured, but not affronted; an affront always implying a justification of the act.

But harm precedes not sin on my foe,
Tempting affront us with his foul esteem
Of our integrity. Milton.

I would learn the cause, why Torrismond,
Within my palace walls, within my hearing,
Almost within my sight, affronts a prince,
Who shortly shall command him. Dryden.

This brings to mind Faustina's fondness for the gladiator, and is interpreted as satire. But how can one imagine, the Fathers would dare to affront the wife of Aurelius. Addison.

AFFRONT. n. f. [from the verb affront.]

1. Insult offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his son. Bacon.

You've done enough; for you design'd my chains:
The grace is vanish'd, but th' affront remains. Dryden.

He that is found reasonable in one thing, is concluded to be so in all; and to think or say otherwise, is thought to unjust affront, and so senseless a censure, that no body ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with so much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or idiots. Addison.

2. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general sense.

On that he they violated
The temple, oft the law with foul affront, Abominations rather. Milton.

3. Open opposition; encounter: a sense not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Far beyond
The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,
Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded
On hostile ground, none daring my affront. Milt.

4. Disgrace; shame. 'Tis sense is rather peculiar to the Scottish dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete, and, by his too great presumption, was defeated; upon the sense of which affront he died with grief. Arbutnot.

AFFRONTER. n. f. [from affront.] The person that affronts.

AFFRONTING. participle adj. [from affront.] That which has the quality of affronting.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean, some are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, because of the secondary idea which custom has affixed to them. Watts.

7. AFFUSE. v. a. [affusare, affusum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I fruitlessly pour'd on them acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile salt or spirit, which would probably have discovered itself, by making an ebullition with the affus'd liquor. Boyle.

AFFUSION. n. f. [affusio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affusion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink. Grew.

7. AFFY. v. a. [affery, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracon.] To betroth in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king. Shakef.

7. AFFY. v. n. To put confidence in; to put trust in.

Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity, Shakef.

That I will here dismiss my loving friends. Shakef.

AFFELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove affeld, and both together heard
What time the grey fly winds her sultry horn,
Bat'ring our flocks with the fresh dews of night. Milton.

Affeld I went, amid the morning dew
To milk my kine, for so stout housewives do. Gay.

AFLA.T. adv. [from a and flat.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree, and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and cast earth upon them; and every twig will take root. Bacon.

AFLA.T. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating; born up in the water: in a figurative sense, within view; in motion.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea as we are now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our venture. Shakespeare.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpose, as a spark of fire, falling upon gun-powder, will infallibly blow it up. South.
There are generally several hundred loads afloat, for they begin to cut above twenty five leagues up the river above Hall; and there are other rivers that flow into the Inn, which bring in their contributions. Addison.

Afloat. adv. [from a and float.]

1. On foot; not on horseback.
He thought it best to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and dispatching his horse in some sort, the next day early, to come afloat thither. Shakespeare.

2. In action; as, a defence is afloat.
I pray thee, when thou seest that ast afloat,
Ev'n by the worst comment of thy soul
Observe mine uncle. Shakespeare.

3. In motion.
Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not—
'Tis said they are afloat. Shakespeare.

Afloat. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.]
1. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as he stood afloat him.
2. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afire you. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Afore. adv.

1. In time foregone or past.
Whoever should make light of any thing afore spoken or written, out of his own house a tree should be taken, and he thereon be hanged. Ejdat.
If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. Shakespeare.

2. First in the way.
Æmilia, run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd;
Will you go on afore? Shakespeare.

3. In front; in the fore-part.
Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible and vast. Spenser.

Aforegoing. participial adj. [from afore and going.] Going before.

Aforehand. adv. [from afore and hand.]
1. By a previous provision.
Many of the particular subjects of discourse are occasional, and such as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account. Gournaut of the Tancrède.

2. Provided; prepared; previously fitted.
For it will be said, that in former times, whereof we have spoken, Spain was not so mighty, as now it is; and England, on the other side, was more aforehand in all matters of power. Bacon's Consideration on War with Spain.

Aforementioned. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are put in a condition to give aid or relief to those aforementioned; being very near reduced themselves to the same miserable condition. Addison.

Aforinam. d. adj. [from afore and nam.] Named before.
Imitate something of circular form, in which, as in all other aforinam proportions, you shall help yourself by the diameter. Peterson on Drawing.

Aforesaid. adj. [from afore and said.] Said before.
It need not go for repetition, if we resume again that which we said in the aforsaid experiment concerning annihilation. Bacon's Natural History.

Afortime. adv. [from afore and time.] In time past.
O thou that art waxen old in wickedness, now thy sins which thou hast committed afortime, are come to light. Satanstoe.

Aforid. participial adj. [from the verb afroy: it should therefore properly be written with f.]
1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.
So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm. Psalmist.

2. It has often the particle of before the object of fear.
There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguish of her spirit, thus she pray'd. Dryden.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will, that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great Sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

Afresh. adv. [from a and fresh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermission.

The Germans now using no such light horsemen, but serving upon great horses, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by these light skirmishes; the Turks, with their light horses, easily shunning their charge, and again, at their pleasure, charging them afresh, when they saw the heavy host almost weary. Kutles's History of the Turks.

When once we have attained these ideas, they may be excited afresh by the use of words. Hutton's Logic.

Afront. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct opposition to the face.

These four came all afrent, and mainly thrust at me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

After. prep. [æfter, Sax.]
1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and stood behind him. It is opposed to before.
What says lord Warwick, shall we after them?
— After them! nay, before them, if we can. Shakespeare.

2. In pursuit of.
After whom is the king of Israel come out? After whom dost thou pursue? After a dead dog, after a flea. 1 Sam.

3. Behind.
Sometimes I placed a third prism after a second, and sometimes also a fourth after a third, by all which the image might be often refracted sideways. Newton.

4. Posterior in time.
Good after ill, and after pain delight;
Alternate, like the scenes of day and night.
We shall examine the ways of conveyance of the sovereignty of Adam to princes that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.
He that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mint-man, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.
There are, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus, in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison.

This allusion is after the oriental manner: thus in the plains, how frequently are persons compared to cedars. Pope.

After. adv.
1. In succeeding time. It is used of time mentioned as succeeding some other. So we cannot say, I shall be happy after, but hereafter; but we say, I was first made miserable by the loss, but was after happier.
Far be it from me, to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon.

The chief were those who, from the pit of hell
Roaming to seek their prey on earth, durst fix
Their seats long after next the seat of God. Milton.

2. Following another.
Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upwards, let him draw thee after. Scott's peace.

After is compounded with many words, but almost always in its genuine and primitive signification; some, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

AFTER ACCEPTATION. [from after and acceptation.] A lenient afterwards, not at first admitted.

'Tis true, some doctors in a scantier space,
I mean, in each apart, contract the place;
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
'Tis he church's after acceptance join. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

AFTERAGES. n. p. [from after and ages.] Successive times; posterity. This word has no singular.

Not the whole land, which the Chiuities should, or might in future time, conquer; seeing, in afterages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh.

Not to philosophers is praise deny'd,
Whole wise instructions afterages guide. Dryden.

What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who bid fair for a jibbet, by endeavouring to bring in a superstition, which their forefathers perished in flames to keep out. Addison's Freeholder.

AFTER ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at last; in fine in conclusion.

They have given no good proof in asserting this extravagant principle; for which, after all, they have no ground or colour, but a passage or two of scripture, miserably perverted, in opposition to many express texts. Atterbury.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to some good old authors, whose works I had leisure to study. Pope on Puffball Poetry.

AFTERBIRTH. n. f. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after the secundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations of that, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after birth left behind, produce such virulent climpers of the blood, as make it call out a tumour. Wifeman's Surgery.

AFTERCLAP. n. f. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events happening after an affair is supposed to be at an end. For

For the next morrow's need they closely went,
For fear of afterdays to prevent. Spenser.
It is commonly taken in an ill sense.
AFTERCOST. n. f. [from after and cost.] The latter charges;
the expense incurred after the original plan is executed.
You must take care to carry off the land-floods and streams, before you attempt draining; lest you aftercost and labour prove unsuccessful. Mortimer.
AFTERCROP. n. f. [from after and crop.] The second crop or harvest of the same year.
Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for cattle. Mortimer.
AFTER-DINNER. n. f. [from after and dinner.] The hour passing just after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amusement.

Thou hast nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an after dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakespeare.
AFTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. f. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavour made after the first effort or endeavour.
There is no reason why the found of a pipe should leave traces in their brains, which, not first, but by their after-endeavours, should produce the like fountains. Locke.
AFTER-ENQUIRY. n. f. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.
You must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or to take upon yourself that, which, I am sure, you do not know, or lump the after-enquiry on your peril; and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think, you'll never return to tell me. Shakespeare.
AFTER-EYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view.
Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after him. Shakespeare.

AFTERGAME. n. f. [from after and game.] The scheme which may be laid, or the expedients which are practised after the original design has miscarried, methods taken after the first turn of affairs.

This earl, like certain vegetables, did bud and open slowly; nature sometimes delighting to play an aftergame, as well as former, which had both their turns and tides in course. Wotton.
The fables of the ax-handle and the wedge, serve to precaution us not to put ourselves needlessly upon an aftergame, but to weigh beforehand what we say and do. L'Estrange.
Our first design, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an aftergame to play. Addison.
AFTERHOURS. n. f. [from after and hours.] The hours that succeed.

So smile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That afterhours with sorrow chide us not.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
AFTER-LIVER. n. f. [from after and live.] He that lives in succeeding times.

By thee my promise sent Unto myself, let after-hours know. Sidney.
AFTERLOVE. n. f. [from after and love.] The second or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous are it be,
To win thy after-love and pardon thee. Shakespeare.
AFTERMATH. n. f. [from after and math, from mau.] The latter math; the second crop of grain sown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

AFTERNOON. n. f. [from after and noon.] The time from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty-wining and distressed widow,
E'en in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye. Shakespeare's Richard III.

However, keep the lively taste you hold
Of God; love him now, but fear him more;
And, in your afternoon, think what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before. Dante.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But when the bus'ness of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they spend the afternoon. Dryden.

AFTERSHAKES. n. f. [from after and pain.] The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the foetus.

AFTERTPART. n. f. [from after and part.] The latter part.
The flexibilities of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe; and, in the afterpart, reason and foresight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his safety and improvement. Locke.
AFTERTPROOF. n. f. [from after and proof.] Evidence posterior to the thing in question.

All know, that he likewise at first was much under the expulsion of his afterproof; such a salar influence there is in the lois aspect. Wotton.

AFTERTASTE. n. f. [from after and taste.] A taste remaining N. Y.

upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

AFTERTHOUGHT. n. f. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be used for secondthought.

Experience, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair;
Suspensions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all the view'd, in tawny dres'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckoo on her fist. Dryden.
AFTERTIMES. n. f. [from after and time.] Succeeding times.
See AFTERAGES.

You promis'd once, a progeny divine
Of Romans, rising from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes should hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryden.

AFTERTOSSING. n. f. [from after and toss.] The motion of the sea after a storm.

Confusions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the afterstings of a sea, when the storm is laid. Addison.

AFTERSWARD. adv. [from after, and sax, Sax.] In succeeding time; sometimes written afterwards, but less properly.

Ules not thought upon before, afterwards spring up, and be reasonable causes of retaining that, which former considerations did formerly procure to be instituted. Hobbes.

An anxious distrust of the divine goodness, makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miserable beforehand, for fear of being so afterward. L'Estrange.

AFTERTWIT. n. f. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients after the occasion of using them is past. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling of what's gone and past; so that after-wit comes too late, when the mischief is done. L'Estrange.
AFTERTWRATH. n. f. [from after and wrath.] Anger when the provocation seems past.

I hear him mock
Th' excuse their after-wrath. Shakespeare.

AGA. n. f. The title of a Turkish military officer.
AGA'IN. adv. [agen, Sax.]

1. A second time; once more; marking the repetition of the same thing.

The poor remnant of human feed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again, slowly, by little and little. Bacon.

Go now, deluded man, and seek again
New toils, new dangers, on the dusty plain. Dryden.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the rest, who possess lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the sake of establishing their superstition. Swift.

2. On the other hand; marking some opposition or contrariety.
His wit increased upon the occasion; and so much the more, if the occasion were sharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the shortness of his foresight, or the strength of his will, certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Those things that we know not what to do withal, if we had them, and those things, again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loss and shame, are the very conditions of this fable. L'Estrange.

3. On another part; marking a transition to some new consideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again, behold the winter's weight
Opprets the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return, noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, his fortune worked upon his nature, and his nature again upon his fortune.

5. Back; in retribution.

When your head did but ache,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows;
'T he best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I did never ask if you again. Shakespeare.

6. In return for any thing; in recompence. Provs. xix. 27.

That he hath given will he pay again. Provs. xix. 27.
7. In order of rank or succession; marking distribution.

Quellion was asked of Demosthenes: What was the chief part of an orator? He answered Action. What next? Action.
What next, again? Action. Bacon.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them: and the cause of that again is either the tough and viscous juice of the plant, or the strength and heat thereof. Bacon.

8. Besides; in any other time or place.

They have the Walloons, who are tall soldiers; yet that is but a spot of ground. But, on the other side, there is not in the world again such a spring and femininity of brave military people, as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice

9. Twice as much; marking the same quantity once repeated.

There are whom heav'n has blest with store of wit,
Yet want as much again to manage it;
For wit and judgment ever are at strife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife. Pope.
I should not be sorry to see a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition; often.
This is not to be obtained by one or two hasty readings;
it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenour of the discourse. Locke.

11. In opposition; by way of resistance.
Who art thou that thou answerest again? Rom. ix. 20.

12. Back; as, returning from some message.
Bring us word again which way we shall go. Deut. i. 22.

- AGA'INST. prep. [Angere, ongers, Sax.]

1. In opposition to any person.

And he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him. Gen. xvi. 12.

2. Contrary; opposite, in general.

That authority of men should prevail with men either a- gainst or above reason, is no part of our belief. Hobbes.

He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair.

Shakespeare.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the co-operation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon.

The preventing goodness of God does even wrest him from himself, and save him, as it were, against his will. South.

The god, unseemly till he slept again,

Refolv'd, at once, to rid himself of pain;

And, tho' against his custom, call'd aloud,

Exciting Morpheus from the sleepy crowd. Dryden.

Men often say a thing is against their conscience, when really it is not. Suiff.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all that can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of;

and that many things may be than are: and if so, after all our arguments against a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be or not. Tillotson.

The church-clergy have written the best collection of tracts against popery, that ever appeared in England. Suiff.

4. With contrary motion or tendency; use of material action.

Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd

Farther than scum, and one infect another

Against the wind a mile. Shakespeare.

The kite being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the fresh air; and many times flieth against the wind, as trouts and salmon swim against the stream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If I sought against my life

Thy country fought of thee, it fought unjustly,

Against the law of nature, law of nations. Milton.

Against the public fancies of the peace,

Against all omens of their ill success;

With faces averse, the rout in arms refozt,

To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden.

6. Opposite to, in place.

Against the Tiber's mouth, but far away. Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another.

And when thou think'st of her eternity,

Think not that death against her nature is;

Think it a birth: and when thou go'st to die,

Sing like a swan, as if thou went'st to bliss. Davies.

8. In provision for; in expectation of.

This mode of speaking probably had its original from the idea of making provision against, or in opposition to a time of misfortune, but by degrees acquired a neutral sense.

Thence the them brought into a stately hall,

Wherein were many tables fair dispord,

And ready dight with drapets festal,

Against the viands should be ministrd. Fairy Queen.

The like charge was given them against the time they should come to settle themselves in the land promised unto their fathers. Hobbes.

Some say, that ever against that season comes,

Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,

The bird of dawning singeth all night long;

And then they say no spirit walks abroad;

The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,

No fairy tales, no witch has power to charm;

So hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Shakespeare.

To that purpose, he made haste to Bristol, that all things might be ready against the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Against the promise's time provides with care,

And hastens in the woof, the robe he was to wear. Dryd.

All which I grant to be reasonably and truly said, and only desire they may be remembered against another day. Stillingsf.

A' GALAXY. n. f. [from σ and $\gamma\alpha\lambda\alpha$, Gr.] Want of milk. Diet.
AGA'PE. adv. [from α and $\gamma\alpha\pi\epsilon$] Staring with eagerness; as, a bird gapes iot meat.

In himself was all his state;
More solemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes, when their rich retinue long
Of horses led, and grooms between'd with gold,

Dazzles the crowd and lets them all agape. Milton.

Dazzle the crowd; and let them all agape. Phryne.

The whole crowd flood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator.

A'GARICK. n. f. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug of use in physic, and the dying trade. It is divided into male and female; the male is used only in dying, the female in medicine; the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excrecences which grow upon trees; both of them in the nature of mushrooms: the one the Romans

call leletus, which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table; the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks, though it be assumed by some, that it groweth also at the roots. Bacon.

AGA'ST. adj. [This word, which is usually, by later authors, written agash, is, not improbably, the true word derived from agaze, which has been written agash, from a mistaken etymology. See AGHAST.] Struck with terror; amazed; frighted to astonishment.

I thus roving on

In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands,

With shudd'ring horror pale, and eyes agast,

View'd first their lamentable lot, and found

No rest. Milton.

A'GATE. n. f. [agate, Fr. achate, Lat.] A precious stone of the lowest class, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In shape no bigger than an agate stone,

On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakespeare.

Agates are only varieties of the flint kind; they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lined, or spotted with different colours, chiefly dusky, black, brown, red, and sometimes blue.

Woodward.

A'GATY. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty hint was above two inches in diameter; the whole covered with a friable cretaceous crust. Woodward.

To AGAZE. v. a. [from α and $\gamma\alpha\pi\epsilon$, to set agazing; as, amaze, amuse, and others.] To strike with amazement; to stupify with sudden terror. The verb is now out of use.

So as they travell'd, so they can elpy

An armed knight toward them gallop fast,

That seem'd from some feared foe to fly,

Or other grisly thing that him agast. Fairy Queen.

AGA'ZED. participle adj. [from agaze; which see.] Struck with amazement; terrified to stupidity.

Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;

Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:

The French exclaim'd; "The devil was in arms!"

All the whole army fold agazed on him. Shakespeare.

AGE. n. f. [age, Fr. anciently age, or ages; it is deduced by Menage, by etymology, of ævi; by Junius, from as, which, in the Teutonic dialects, signified long duration.]

1. Any period of time attributed to something as the whole, or part, of its duration: in this sense, we say, the age of man, the several ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One man in his time plays many parts, Shakespeare.

His life being seven ages.

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years; so the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years.

Genesis, xlvii. 28.

2. A succession or generation of men.

Hence, lastly, springs cares of posterity,

For things their kind would everlast make.

Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,

The fruit whereof another age shall taste. Davies.

Next, to the Son,

Desin'd Restorer of mankind, by whom

New heav'n, and earth, shall to the ages rise,

Or down from heav'n descend. Milton.

No declining age

E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Reformers.

3. The time in which any particular man, or race of men, lived, or shall live; as, the age of heroes.

4. The space of a hundred years; a secular period; a century.

5. The latter part of life; old age; oldness.

You see how full of change his age is: the observation we have made of it hath not been little; he always loved our sister most, and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off. Shakespeare.

Boys must not have th' ambitious care of men,

Nor men the weak anxieties of age. Reformers.

And on this forehead, where your virtue has laid,

The loves delighted, and the graces play'd;

Infusing age will trace his cruel way,

And leave sad marks of his destructive sway. Prior.

6. Maturity; ripeness; full strength of life.

A solemn admission of profligates, all that either, being of age, desire that admission for themselves, or that, in infancy, are by others presented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our fires, not with their own content,

Had, ere we came to age, our portion spent. Dryden.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of discretion; and twenty-one years is the full age: In a woman, at seven years of age, the lord her father may distrain his tenants for aid to marry her; at the age of nine years, she is dowable; at twelve years, she is able finally to ratify and confirm her former consent given to matrimony; at fourteen, she is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and shall be out of ward at the death of her ancestor; at sixteen, she shall be out of ward, though, at the death of her ancestor, she was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, she is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a strippling is enabled to choose his own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man may consent to marriage. Cruell.

AG'ID. adj. [from age.] It makes two syllables in poetry.

1. Old; stricken in years; applied generally to animate beings. If the comparison do stand between man and man, which shall bearken unto other, fish the aged, for the most part, are best experienced, least subject to rash and unadvised passions. Hooker.

Novely is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. Shakep. for Measure for Measure.

Kindness itself too weak a charm will prove, To raise the feeble fibres of aged love. Prior.

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This use is rare, and commonly with some tendency to the protopopæia. The people did not more worship the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves; and the same Quintillianian fear of the aged oaks. Stillingfleet.

AGEDLY. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged person. Acad. adv. [ages, Sax. Again; in return. See AGAIN.]

This word is only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the sake of rhyme.

Thus Venus: Thus her son reply'd again. Dryden.

AGENCY. n. f. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting; the state of being in action; action.

A few advances there are in the following papers, tending to alert the superintendence and agency of providence in the natural world. Woodward.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; business performed by an agent.

Some of the purchasers themselves may be content to live cheap in a worse country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agency. Swift.

AGENT. adj. [agents, Lat. That which acts; opposed to patient, or that which is acted upon.]

This faculty is often truly ascribed unto the force of imagination upon the body agent; and then, by a secondary means, it may upon a diverse body; as, for example, if a man carry a ring, or some part of a beast, believing strongly that it will help him to obtain his love, it may make him more industrious, and again more confident and persisting than otherwise he would be. Bacon's Natural History.

AGENT. n. f.

1. An actor; he that acts; he that professes the faculty of action. Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded as impertinent unto the thing, but as needless in regard of the agent, which feels already what to resolve upon. Hooker.

To whom nor agent, from the instrument, Nor pow'r of working, from the work is known. Davies.
Here's made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, tho' he forelaw the will.
Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place. Dryden.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, consequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

2. A substitute; a deputy; a factor; a person employed to transact the business of another.

All hearts in love, use your own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself,
And truth no agent. Shakep. years.
They had not the wit to fend to them, in any orderly fashion,
Agents or chosen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife,
Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.

3. That which has the power of operating, or producing effects upon another thing.

They produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

AGGERATION. n. f. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The state of growing or uniting to another body.

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a transmutation of nutriment; now where this conversion or aggeration is made, there is also required, in the aliment, a similarity of matter. Breuer's Vulgar Errors.

AGGERATE. v. a. [from ager, Lat.] To heap up. Diff.

AGGLOMERATE. v. a. [from agglomerare, Lat.]

1. To gather up in a ball, as thread.

2. To gather together.

AGGLOMERATE. v. z.

Besides, the hard agglomerating faults,

The spoil of ages, would impervious choke

Their secret channels. Thomson's Autumn.

AGGLUTINANTS. n. f. [from agglutinate.] Those medicines or applications which have the power of uniting parts together.

AGGLUTINATE. v. n. [from ad and glutis, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, so as not to fall asunder. It is a word almost appropriated to medicine.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimensions, which is performed by the daily ingestion of food that is digested into blood; which being diffused through the body, is agglutinated to those parts that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation parts of the womb. Harvey.

AGGLUTINATION. n. f. [from agglutinate.] Union; cohesion; the act of agglutinating; the state of being agglutinated.

The occasion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound. Wicman.

AGGLUTINATIVE. ad. [from agglutinate.] That which has the power of procuring agglutination.

Rowl up the member with the agglutinative rowler. Wijm.

AGGRANDIZE. v. a. [aggrandiser, Fr.] To make great; to enlarge; to exalt; to improve in power, honour, or rank. It is applied to persons generally, sometimes to things.

If the king should use it no better than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen, it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Aspliff's Parergon.

These furnish us with glorious springs and mediums, to raise and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our souls, to awaken the better passions, and to elevate them even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purposes. Watts.

AGGRANDIZEMENT. n. f. [aggrandisement, Fr.] The state of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

AGGRANDIZER. n. f. [from aggrandize.] The person that aggrandizes or makes great another.

AGGRATE. v. a. [aggrate, Ital.] To please; to treat with civilities: a word not now in use.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,

And in the midst thereof, upon the floor,

Counted of many a jolly paramour;

The which them did in modest wife amate,

And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

AGGGRAVATE. v. a. [aggrate, Lat.]

1. To make heavy; used only in a metaphorical sense; as, to aggravate an accusation, or a punishment.

A grove hard by, sprung up with this their change,

His will who reigns above! to aggravate

Their penance, laden with fruit, like that

Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve

Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,

And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryden.

2. To make any thing worse, by the addition of some particular circumstance, not essential.

This offence, in itself so heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or discontent, but an aspiring mind to the papacy. Bacon.

AGGRAVATION. n. f. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.

2. The extrinsecal circumstances or accidents, which increase the guilt of a crime, or the misery of a calamity.

If it be weigh'd

By itself, with aggravations not furcharg'd,

Or else with just allowance counterpois'd,

I may, if possible, thy pardon find

The calter towards me, or thy hatred left. Milton.

He, to the sins which he commits, hath the aggravation superadded of committing them against knowledge, against conscience, against fight of the contrary law. Hammond.

AGGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one mass, body, or system.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonessential systems of the whole. Key.

AGGREGATE. n. f. [from the verb.] The complex or collective result of the conjunction or accretion of many particulars.

The reason of the far greatest part of mankind, is but an aggregate of mistaken phantasms, and, in things not sensible, a constant delusion. Gleenville.

A great number of such living and thinking particles could not possibly, by their mutual contact, and pressing, and striking, compose one greater individual animal, with one mind and understanding, and a vital consension of the whole body; any more than a swarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and constituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentl.
TO AGGREGATE. v. a. [aggrege, Lat.] To collect together; to heap many particulars into one mass.

The aggregated foil
 Death, with his mace pettuck, cold, and dry,
 As with a trident, fink. Milton.

AGGREGATION. n. f. [from aggregare.]
 1. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water resident in the abyss is, in all parts of it, stored with a considerable quantity of heat, and more especially in those where these extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen. W. Edwards's Nat. History.

2. The whole composed by the coagulation of many particulars, an aggregate.

3. Collection, or state of being collected.
 Their individual imperfections being great, they are more-over enlarged by their aggregation; and being erroneous in their single numbers, once huddled together, they will be erroneous itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO AGGRESS. v. n. [aggrederi, aggressum, Lat.] To commit the first act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The rage dispers'd, the glorious pair advance
 With mingl'd anger, and collected might,
 To turn the war, and tell aggressing France,
 How Britain's sons, and Britain's friends can fight. Prior.
AGGRESSION. n. f. [aggressio, Lat.] The first act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by some act of injury.

There is no retelling of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be also, on the other hand, a conspiracy of common enmity and aggression. L'Estr.

AGGRESSOR. n. f. [from aggressi.] The person that first commences hostility; the assaulter or invader, opposed to the defendant.

Fly in nature's face?
 But how, if nature fly in my face first?
 Then nature's the aggressor: Let her look to't. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

It is a very unlucky circumstance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of such authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the first aggressors. Pope and Swift's Preface to Miscellanies.

AGGRIEVANCE. n. f. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardship inflicted; wrong endured.

TO AGGRIEVE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.]
 1. To give sorrow; to cause grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that his grievance was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
 I saw, alas! the gaping earth devour
 The spring, the place, and all clean out of sight:
 Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour. Spenser.

2. To impose some hardships upon; to harass; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical sense; and whenever it is used now, it bears some allusion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbishop of York, much aggrieved with some practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. C Camden.

The landed man finds himself aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the strengthening of his fortune; whilst the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. L Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
 Cloe complains, and wond'rously aggriev'd. Granville.

TO AGGROUPE. v. a. [aggregare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggregated (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleasant to the sight; as also those things which appear to be performed with ease. Dryden.

AGHAST. adj. [either the participle of agere, (see AGAZE.) and then to be written agazed, or agast, or from a and ghost, a ghost, which the present orthography favours; perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horror, as at the sight of a spectre; stupified with terror. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

Who fighting force, as if her heart in twaine
 Had riven been, and all her heart-things brast,
 With dreary drooping eye look'd up like one aghast. Spens.

The aged earth aghast.
 With terror of that blast,
 Shall from the surface to the centre shake. Milton.

Aghast he wak'd, and, starting from his bed,
 Cold sweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erspread. Dryden.

I laugh to think how your unshaken Cato
 Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction Pours in upon him thus from every side. Addison.

AGILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being speedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horse the head,
 And bending forward struck his agile heels
 Against the panting sides of his poor jade;
 Up to the rowel-bead. Shakespeare.

The immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the mind or soul. Hall.

To guide its actions with informing care,
 In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
 Render it agile, witty, valiant, sage,
 As fits the various course of human age. Prior.

AGILENESS. n. f. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleness; readiness for motion; quickness; activity; agility.

AGILITY. n. f. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleness; readiness to move; quickness; activity.

A limb over-strained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGILLOCHUM. n. f. Aloes-wood.
 A tree in the East-Indies, brought to us in small bits, of a very fragrant scent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a strengthener of the nerves in general. The best is of a blackish purple colour, and so light as to swim upon water. Quincy.

AGIO. n. f. [an Italian word, signifying ease or convenience.] A mercantile term, used chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money. Campden.

TO AGIST. v. a. [from agere, Fr. a bed or resting-place, or from agere, i. e. habere.]
 To take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forests, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agisters, in English gust or gust-takers. Their function is termed agistment; as, agistment upon the sea banks. This word agist is also used, for the taking in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Bisnet.

AGISTMENT. n. f. [See AGIST.]
 It is taken by the canon lawyers in another sense than is mentioned under agist. They seem to intend by it, a modus or composition, or mean rate, at which some right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from adjuvamentum, or adjuvmentum.

AGISTOR. n. f. [from agist.] An officer of the king's forest. See AGIST.

AGITABLE. n. f. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that which may be disputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

TO AGITATE. v. a. [agite, Lat.]
 1. To put in motion; to shake; to move nimbly; as, the surface of the waters is agitated by the wind; the vessel was broken by agitating the liquor.

2. To be the cause of motion; to aduate; to move.
 Where dwells this for'reign arbitrary soul,
 Which does the human animal controul,
 Informs each part, and agitates the whole? Blackmore.

3. To affect with perturbation; as, the mind of man is agitated by various passions.

4. To stir; to bandy from one to another; to discuss; to controvert; as, to agitate a question.

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal dispute. Bayle.

AGITATION. n. f. [from agitate, agitatio, Lat.]
 1. The act of moving, or shaking any thing.
 Putrefaction affects rest; for the subtle motion which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

2. The state of being moved or agitated; as, the waters, after a storm, are some time in a violent agitation.

3. Discussion; controversial examination.
 A kind of a school question is started in this fable, upon reason and instinct: and whether this deliberative proceeding of the crow, was not rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Estrange's Fable.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; disturbance of the thoughts.
 A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching. In this stun of agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakespeare.

His mother could no longer bear the agitations of so many passions as thronged upon her. Talbot.

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the state of being consulted upon.
 The project now in agitation for repealing of the test act, and yet leaving the name of an establishment to the present national church, is inconsistent. Noel.

AGITATOR. n. f. [from agitate.] He that agitates any thing; he who manages affairs, in which active seems to be used the agitators of the army.

AGLET. n. f. [A word which some derive from αγλή, splendour, but which is apparently to be deduced from αγλεττή, Fr. a tag to a point, and that from aigu, sharp.]

1. A tag of a point curved into some representation of an animal, generally of a man.

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain worth 200 l. and his gown adorned with aglets, esteemed worth 25 l. Hayward.

Why, give him gold enough, and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby, or an old trot, and ne'er a tooth in her head.

Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew.

2. The pendants at the ends of the chiefs of flowers, as in tulips.

AGINAL. adj. [from agmen, Lat.] Belonging to a troop. DiD.

AGNAIL. n. f. [from agne, grieved, and nagle, a nail.] A diseased nail; a whitlow; an inflammation round the nail.

AGNATION. n. f. [from agnatus, Lat.] Descent from the same father, in a direct male line, distinct from cognation, or consanguinity, which includes descendants from females.

AGNITION. n. f. [from agnitus, Lat.] Acknowledgment.

AGNITION. v. a. [from agnosco, Lat.] To acknowledge; to own; to avow. This word is now obsolete.

I do agnize

A natural and prompt alacrity

I find in hardiness; and do undertake

This present war against the Ottomites.

Shakspeare.

AGNOMINATION. n. f. [agnominatio, Lat.] Allusion of one word to another, by resemblance found.

The British continueth yet in Wales, and some villages of Cornwall, intermingled with provincial Latin, being very figurative, copious, and pleasantly running upon agnominations, although harsh in aspirations.

Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the tree commonly called the Chayle Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preserving chastity.

Of laurel some, of woodbine many more,

And wreaths of agnus castus others bore.

Dryden.

AGE. adv. [agan, Sax. past or gone; whence writers formerly used, and in some provinces the people still use, agone for age.] Pail; as, I age ago; that is long time has past since. Reckoning time towards the present, we use ago; as, it is a year ago it happened; reckoning from the present, we use ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always observed.

Be of good comfort; for the great supply,

That was expected by the Dauphin here,

Are wreck'd of three nights ago on Godwin's sands.

Sh. K. John.

This both by others and myself I know,

For I have serv'd their sovereign long ago;

Or have been caught within the winding train.

Dryden.

I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of some former time ago.

Addison Freeholder.

AGG. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology; the French have the term à gage, in low language; as, is vivant à gage, they live to their wish: from this phrase our word may be, perhaps, derived.]

1. In a state of desire; in a state of imagination; heated with the desire of some enjoyment; longing.

As for the sense and reason of it, that has little or nothing to do here; only let it found full and round, and chime together to the humour, which is at present agg. (just as a big, long, rattling name is said to command even adoration from a Spaniard) and, no doubt, with this powerful, senseless engine, the rattle-dancer, shall be able to carry all before him.

South's Sermons.

2. It is used with the verbs to be, or to set; as, he is agg, or you may set him agg.

The gawdy gossip, when she's set agg,

In jewels drest, and at each ear a bob,

Goes bounding out, and, in her trim of pride,

Thinks all the fays or does, is justifi'd.

Dryden.

This maggot has no sooner set him agg, but he gets him a ship, freight her, builds castles in the air, and conceits both the sides in his coffers.

L'Estrange.

3. It has the particles on, or for, before the object of desire.

On which the fairs are all agg,

And all for this a bear and dog.

Hudibras.

They generally struggle into these parts about this time of the year; and set the heads of our fervent maids to agg for husbands, that we do not expect to have any business done as it should be, whilst they are in the country. Addison, Spectator.

AGG. adv. [agan, Sax.] Aggo; past. See AGO.

He is such a princely one,

As you speak him long aggo? Ben Jonson's Fairy Prince.

AGONISM. n. f. [agonismus, Gr.] Contention for a prize. DiD.

AGONIZO. participial adj. [from agon and going.] In action.

Their first movement, and impelled motions, demanded the impulse of an almighty hand to set them first agonizing.

AGONIST. n. f. [agonistes, Gr.] A contender for prizes. DiD.

AGONISTES. n. f. [agonistes, Gr.] A prize-fighter; one that contends at any public solemnity for a prize. Milton has so filled his tragedy, because Sampson was called out to divert the Philistines with feats of strength.

AGONISTICAL. adj. [from agonistes.] Relating to prize-fighting.

DiD.

AGONIZO. v. n. [from agonize, low Latin, agonizo, Gr. agonize, Fr.] To feel agonies; to be in excessive pain.

N. V.

Dost thou behold my poor distracted heart,

Thus rent with agonizing love and rage,

And ask me what it means? Art thou not false? Rew.

Or touch, if, tremblingly alive all o'er,

To smart and agonize at every pore? Pope's Essay on Man.

AGONOTHE'TICK. adj. [agon and the'tikon, Gr.] Proposing public contentions for prizes; giving prizes; prebiding at public games.

DiD.

AGONY. n. f. [agonia, Gr. agon, low Lat. agonia, Fr.]

1. The pangs of death; properly the last contest between life and death.

Never was there more pity in saving any than in ending me, because therein my agon shall end.

Sidney.

Thou who for me did feel such pain,

Whose precious blood the cross did stain,

Let not those agonies be vain.

Rymer.

2. Any violent or excessive pain of body or mind.

Between them both, they have me come to dy,

Through wounds and strokes, and stubborn handling,

That death were better than such agony,

As grief and fury unto me did bring.

Fairy Queen.

Thou I have mis'd, and thought it long, depriv'd

Thy presence, agony of love! till now

Not felt, nor shall be twice.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. It is particularly used in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propose our desires, which cannot take such effect as we specify, shall, notwithstanding, otherwise procure us his heavenly grace, even as this very prayer of Christ obtained angels to be sent him as comforters in his agony.

Hosier.

AGG. adv. [a and agg.] In earnest; not fictitiously.

At that time I made her weep agg,

For I did play a lamentable part.

Shakspeare.

AGGUTY. n. f. An animal of the Antilles of the bigness of a rabbit, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair.

He has but two teeth in each jaw, holds his meat in his fore-paws like a squirrel, and has a very remarkable cry. When he is angry, his hair stands on end, and he strikes the earth with his hind feet, and, when chafed, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by smoke.

Troas.

TO AGRA'CE. v. a. [from a and g acc.] To grant favours; to confer benefits upon; a word not now in use.

She granted, and that knight to much agreed,

That the him taught celestial discipline.

Fairy Queen.

AGRA'MMATIST. n. f. [ag, priv. and gramma, Gr.] An illiterate man.

DiD.

AGRA'RIAN. adj. [agrarius, Lat.] Relating to fields or grounds; a word seldom used but in the Roman history, where there is mention of the agrarian law.

TO AGRE'ASE. v. a. [from a and grease.] To daub; to grease; to pollute with filth.

The waves thereof do flow and sluggish were,

Engroff'd with mud, which did them foul agreas.

Fairy Q.

TO AGREE. v. n. [agere, Fr, from gre, liking or good-will;

gre and gratu, Lat.]

1. To be in concord; to live without contention; not to differ.

The more you agree together, the less hurt can your enemies do you.

Pope's View of Epic Poetry.

2. To grant; to yield to; to admit; with the particles to or upon.

And persuaded them to agree to all reasonable conditions.

2 Maccabees, xi. 14.

We do not prove the origin of the earth from a chaos; seeing that is agreed on by all that give it any origin.

Burnet's Theol.

3. To settle terms by stipulation; to accord.

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.

Matth. v. 25.

4. To settle a price between buyer and seller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

Matth. xx. 13.

5. To be of the same mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing else.

Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius, and the world agrees to confess it.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

6. To settle some point among many.

Strifes and troubles would be endless, except they gave their common consent all to be ordered by some whom they should agree upon.

Hosier.

If judicious men, skilled in chymical affairs, shall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being stunted by dark or empty words, it is hoped, they will be reduced either to write nothing, or books that may teach us something.

Björk.

7. To be consistent; not to contradict.

I for many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.

Matth. xiv. 56.

They that stood by said again to Peter, surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean; and thy speech agreed thereto.

Matth. xiv. 70.

Which

Which testimony I the less scruple to allege, because it agrees very well with what has been affirmed to me by a physician at Moscow.

Bogle's History of Colours.

8. To suit with; to be accommodated to.
Thou feedest thine own people with angels food, and didst send them from heaven bread agreeing to every taste. Wisd.

His principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order, which God hath settled in the world; and, therefore, must needs clash with common sense and experience.

Locke.

9. To cause no disturbance in the body.

I have often thought, that our preferring asses milk in such small quantities, is injudicious; for, undoubtedly, with such as it agrees with, it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities.

Arbutnot.

To AGREE. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He saw from far, or seem'd for to see,
Some troubles upore, or contentious fray,
Whereto he drew in haste it to agree. Fairy Queen.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whose destructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Recommen.

AGREEABLE adj. [agreeable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to; consistent with. It has the particle to, or with.
What you do, is not at all agreeable either with to good a Christian, or to reasonable and to great a person. Temple.

That which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Estrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it likewise the interest both of private persons and of public societies. Tillotson.

Agreeable heretics, perhaps it might not be amiss, to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story. Locke on Education.

2. Pleasing; that is suitable to the inclination, faculties, or temper. It is used in this sense both of persons and things.

And while the face of outward things we find Pleasing and fair, agreeable and sweet,
These things transport. Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the discourses which have passed between us, and call to mind a thousand agreeable remarks, which he has made on their occasions. Addison, Spectator.

3. It has also the particle in.

The delight which men have in popularity, fame, submission, and subjection of other mens minds, seemeth to be a thing, in itself, without contemplation of consequence, agreeable and grateful to the nature of man. Bacon.

AGREEABLENESS. n. f. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistency with; suitableness to; with the particle to.
Pleasant tastes depend not on the things themselves, but their agreeableness to this or that particular palate, wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleasing. It is used in an inferior sense, to mark the production of satisfaction, calm and lasting, but be low rapture or admiration.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

It is very much an image of that author's writing, who has an agreeableness that charms us, without correctness, like a mistress, whose faults we see, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Resemblance; likeness; sometimes with the particle between.

This relation is likewise seen in the agreeableness between man and the other parts of the universe; and that in sundry respects. Grew's Cynologia Sacra.

AGREEABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistently with; in a manner suitable to.

They may look into the affairs of Judea and Jerusalem, agreeably to that which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Eyd. xviii. 12.

2. Pleasingly.

I did never imagine, that so many excellent rules could be produced so advantageously and agreeably. Swift.

AGREED. participle adj. [from agree.] Settled by consent.

When they had got known and agreed names, to signify those internal operations of their own minds, they were sufficiently furnished to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

AGREEMENT. n. f. [from agree.] Consistence; suitableness.

AGREEMENT. n. f. [agreement, Fr. in law Latin agrementum, which Coke would willingly derive from agregatio mentium]

1. Concord.
What agreement is there between the hyena and the dog? and what peace between the rich and the poor? Ecclesi. xiii. 18.

2. Relevance of one thing to another.
Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact; bargain; conclusion of controversy; stipulation.
And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. Isaiah, xxviii. 18.

Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern. 2 Kings, xiii. 31.

Frog had given his word, that he would meet the above-mentioned company at the Salutation, to talk of this agreement. Arbutnot.

AGREESTICKS, or AGRESTICAL. adj. [from agrestis, Lat.]

Having relation to the country; rude; rustic. Diet.

AGRICULTION. n. f. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Diet.

AGRICULTURE. n. f. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground; tillage; husbandry.

He strictly adviseth not to begin to sow before the setting of the flairs; which notwithstanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be observed in England. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

That there was tillage bestowed upon the ground, Moles does indeed intimate in general; as also, what sort of tillage that was, is not expressed: I hope to thee, that their agriculture was nothing near so laborious and troublesome, nor did it take up so much time as ours does. Wisdome's Nat. History.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more secure, method of life, by agriculture and husbandry. Pope's Od. lib. 3, Scat.

AGRIMONY. n. f. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are rough, hairy, punctated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five segments; the flowers have five or six leaves, and are formed into a long spike, which expand in form of a rose; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock; in each of which are contained two kernels.

The species are; 1. The common or medicinal agrimony. 2. The sweet smelling agrimony. 3. Lesser agrimony, with a white flower.

The first is common in the hedges, in many parts, and is the sort commonly used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil or situation; and is increased by parting the roots in autumn, or by sowing the seeds soon after they are ripe. Mill.

AGROUNDS. adv. [from agrum and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground from passing farther.

With our great ships we durst not approach the coast, we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Essay.

Say what you seek, and whether were you bound?

Were you, by stress of weather, call aground? Dryden.

2. It is likewise figuratively used, for being hindered in the progress of affairs; as, the negotiators were aground at that objection.

AGUE. n. f. [ague, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits succeeded by hot. The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague, and the hot the fever.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn. Here let them lie, Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakespeare.

Though
He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age,
Yet neither tempest nor corrects the other;
As if there were an ague in his nature,
That still inclines to one extreme. Denham's Scylla.

AGUE. adv. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; shivering; chill; cold; a word in little use.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,
With slight and agued fear! mind and charge home. Shakespeare.

AGUE FIT. n. f. [from ague and fit.] The paroxysm of the ague.

This ague fit of fear is overblown;
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakespeare.

AGUE PROOF. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof against agues; able to resist the causes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men of their words; they told me I was a city thing; 'tis a lie; I am not ague proof. Shakespeare.

AGUE-TREE. n. f. [from ague and tree.] A name sometimes given to Elisha. Diet.

To AGUISE. v. a. [from aguis. See GUISE.] To dress; to adorn; to deck; a word now not in use.

At other whiles the would devise,
As her fantastick wit did most delight;
Sometimes her head the fondly would aguise
With gaudy garlands, or with flowers dight
About her neck, or rings of ruffles plight. Fairy Queen.

AGUISH. adj. [from ague.] Having the qualities of an ague.
So calm, and so serene, but now,
What means this change on Myra's brow?
Her aguish love now glows and burns;
Then chills and shakes, and the cold fit returns. Graville.

AGUISHNESS. n. f. [from aguish.] The quality of resembling an ague.

AN. interjection.

1. A word noting sometimes dislike and censure.

AN! sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters, they have forsaken the Lord.

J Isaiah, l. 4.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not say in their hearts, AN! so we would have it: let them not say, we have swallowed him up. Psalm xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and most frequently, compulsion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;

But, AN! the mighty bliss is fugitive;

Discour'd sickness, anxious labour come,

And age and death's inexorable doom.

Dryden.

AN! me! the blooming pride of May,

And that of beauty, are but one:

At morn both flourish bright and gay,

Both fade at evening, pale, and gone.

Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expresses vehement desire.

In conjuncts, as in greatness, they excel;

AN! that we loved ourselves but half so well.

Dryden.

AN! AN! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said, AN! our eye hath seen thee.

Psalm xxxv. 21.

AN! AN! interjection. [from a and head.]

1. Further onward than another: a term term.

And now the mighty Centaur terms to lead,

And now the speedy dolphin gets ahead.

Dryden.

2. Headlong; precipitant: used of men.

It is highly the fault of parents, guardians, tutors and governors, that so many men miscarry. They suffer them at first to run abroad, and, when perverse inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them.

L'Estrange.

AN! AN! interjection. Aloft; on high.

But have I fall'n or no? —

— From the dread fummist of this chalybourn!

Look up awhile, the firrill-gorg'd lark lo far

Cannot be seen or heard.

Shakespeare.

AN! AN! interjection. The name of a plant.

It hath funnel-shaped flowers of one leaf, divided into several parts at the top; the pointal, which rises from the cups, is fired, like a nail, to the inner part of the flower, and becomes a pear-shaped fleshy fruit, inclosing a three-cornered nut.

There are two species of this plant abounding on the continent of South America: the first grows to the height of our common cherry-tree; its leaves are three or four inches long, and almost two inches broad; the wood of it thinks most abominably, and the kernel of the nut is a most deadly poison; to expel which, the Indians know no antidote, nor will they use the wood for fuel.

The second sort, with an oleander leaf, and a yellow flower, does not grow higher than ten or twelve feet; its fruit is of a beautiful red colour when ripe, and equally poisonous with the former. Both plants abound in every part with a milky juice.

Miller.

AN! AN! interjection. [from ad, Fr. from adjuvare, Lat.] To help; to support; to succour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid,
(So love the dread of danger doth despise)
And of him catching hold, him strongly laid

Fairy Queen.

Neither shall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ships.

1 Maccabees, viii. 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that found as well as false persuades.

Reyksson.

AN! AN! interjection. [from To aid.]

1. Help; support.

The memory of useful things may receive considerable aid, if they are thrown into verse. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial stores in peace possess;

Unshaken all your filial claim confess;

Your private right should impious power invade,

The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. The person that gives help or support; a helper.

Thou hast said, it is not good that man should be alone; let us make unto him an aid, like unto himself.

Tobit, viii. 6.

3. [In law.] A subsidy. Ad is also particularly used in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an interest in the cause in question; and is likewise both to give strength to the party that prays in aid of him, and also to avoid a prejudice accruing toward his own right, except it be prevented, as, when a tenant for term of life, courtesy, &c. being impleaded touching his estate, he may pray in aid of him in the reversion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own.

Crawell.

AD! AN! interjection. [from aid.] Help; support: a word little used.

Oh have I seen a timely parted ghost,

Of airy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,

Being all devoted to the labring heart,

Gray.

Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy.

Sib. Hen. VI.

AD! AN! interjection. [from aid, Fr.] Helping; helpful.

All you unpublished virtues of the earth,

Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate

In the good man's distress.

Shakespeare.

AD! AN! interjection. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along as he went, were purified the adherents and aiders of the late rebels.

Bacon's Henry VIII.

AD! AN! interjection. [from aid and less, an inseparable particle.] Helpless; unsupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd

The mortal gate of the city, which he painted

With shunlike destiny: aidless came off,

And with a sudden re-enforcement, struck

Corioli, like a planet.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Had met

Already, ere my best speed could prevent,

The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey.

Mit. Comedy.

AD! AN! interjection. [from aid, Fr.] A point with tags; points of gold at the end of finges.

Which all above besprinkled was throughout

With golden aidants that glitter'd bright,

I like twinkling stars, and all the skirt about

Was hemm'd with golden fringes.

Fairy Queen.

AD! AN! interjection. [from aid, Sax.] To be troublesome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, what ails thee, Hagar? fear not: for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is.

Gen. xxi. 17.

2. It is used, in a sense less determinate, for to affect in any manner; as, something ails me that I cannot fit still; what ails the man that he hasen without roof a?

Love smil'd, and thus said, 'Want join'd to desire is unhappy;

but if he sought do desire, what can Heraclesus ail?' Sidney.

What ails me, that I cannot lose thy thought!

Command the empress hither to be brought;

I, in her death, shall find diversion find,

And rid my thoughts at once of woman-kind.

Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never used but with some indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails something; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never say, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or use definite terms with this verb.

AIL! AN! interjection. [from the verb.] A disafe.

Or heal, O Natives, thy offensive ail.

Pope.

AIL! AN! interjection. [from ail.] Pain; disafe.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,

Not decent for a husband's eye or ear.

Graveville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailment, and repine that they mutually hinder our being together.

Swift.

AIL! AN! interjection. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

AD! AN! interjection. [It is derived by Skinner from afine, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to strike with a missile weapon; to direct towards; with the particle at.

Am! thou at princes, all amaz'd they said,
The list of games?

Pope's Odyssey.

2. To point the view, or direct the steps towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain; with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliss; to here the end

To which all men do aim, rich to be made,

Such grace now to be happy is before thee laid.

Fairy Q.

Another kind there is, which although we desire for itself, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheless they are not the last mark whereat we aim, but have their further end whereto they are referred.

Hasker.

Sworn with applause, and aiming still at more,
He now provokes the sea gods from the shore.

Dryden.

Religion tends to the ease and pleasure, the peace and tranquillity of our minds, which all the wisdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmost felicity of this life.

Tillotson.

3. To direct the missile weapon; more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its dismissal from the hand.

And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,

Who shakes his empty reins, and aims his airy spear.

Dryd.

4. To guess.

AIM! AN! interjection. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a missile weapon.

Akianus, young and eager of his game,

Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim;

But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,

Which pierc'd his bowels through his parting sides.

Dryden, Æn.

2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.

That

- That arrows fled not forward toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Shakespeare.
3. In a figurative sense, a purpose; a scheme; an intention; a design.
He trusted to have equal'd the most High,
If he oppos'd: and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne, and monarchy of God,
Rain'd impious war. Milton's Paradise Lost.
But fee, how oft ambitious aims are crost,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost. Pope.
4. The object of a design; the thing after which any one endeavours.
The safest way is to suppose, that the epistle has but one aim, till, by a frequent perusal of it, you are forced to see there are distinct independent parts. Locke.
5. Conjecture; guess.
It is impossible, by aim, to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that there was ever any of the particulars thereof. Spenser on Ireland.
There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings, lie intresur'd. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
- AIR. n. f. [air, i. r. air, Lat.]
1. The element encompassing the terraqueous globe.
If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I may say, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually; or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that invisible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompasses the globe of earth and water. Watts's Logic.
2. The state of the air; or the air considered with regard to health.
There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs. Bacon.
3. Air in motion; a small gentle wind.
Fresh gales, and gentle airs,
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub Disporting! Milton's Paradise Lost.
But safe repose, without an air of breath,
Dwells here, and a dumb quiet next to death. Dryden.
Let vernal airs through trembling officers play,
And Albion's cliffs resound the rural lay. Pope.
4. Blast.
All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness. Shakespeare.
5. Any thing light or uncertain; that is as light as air.
O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready, with ev'ry nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakespeare.
6. The open weather; air unconfined.
The garden was inclos'd within the square,
Where young Enlilia took the morning air. Dryden.
7. Vent; utterance; emission into the air.
I would have ask'd you, if I durst for shame,
If still you lov'd? you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a sex?
For then we might have lov'd without a crime. Dryden.
8. Publication; exposure to the publick view and knowledge.
I am sorry to find it has taken air, that I have some hand in these papers. Pope's Letters.
9. Intelligence; information.
It grew also from the airs, which the princes and states abroad received from their ambassadors and agents here; which were attending the court in great number. Bacon.
10. Poetry; a foug.
And the repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet, had the pow'r
To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare. Parad. Regain.
11. Musick, whether light or serious.
This musick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion,
With its sweet air. Shakespeare.
Call in some musick; I have heard, soft airs
Can charm our senses, and expel our cares. Denb. Sophy.
The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are impotent. Gloverville.
Since we have such a treasury of words, so proper for the airs of musick, I wonder that persons should give so little attention. Addison, Spectator.
Born on the swelling notes, our souls aspire,
While solemn airs improve the sacred fire,
And angels lean from heav'n to hear!
—When the soul is sunk with cares,
Exalts her in enl'ving airs. Pope.

12. The mien, or manner, of the person.
Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradise Lost.
For the air of youth
Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood shall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and drait,
'To weigh thy spirits down; and last consume
The balm of life. Milton's Paradise Lost.
But, having the life before us, besides the experience of all they knew, it is no wonder to hit some airs and features, which they have misst. Dryden.
There is something wonderfully divine in the airs of this picture. Addison.
Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.
13. An affected or laboured manner or gesture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.
Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryden.
There are of these sort of beauties, which last but for a moment; as, the different airs of an assembly, upon the sight of an unexpected and uncommon object, some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thousand other such like things. Dryden.
Their whole lives were employed in intrigues of state,
And they naturally give themselves airs of kings and princes, of which the ministers of other nations are only the representatives. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
To curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs. Pope.
He assumes and affects an entire set of very different airs;
he conceives himself a being of a superior nature. Swift.
14. Appearance.
As it was communicated with the air of a secret, it soon found its way into the world. Pope.
15. [In Frenchman'ship.] Airs denote the artificial or practised motions of a managed horse. Chambers.
- TO AIR. v. a. [from the noun air.]
1. To expose to the air.
Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture, or the chamber and bed-straw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.
We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice, when both the judges that sat upon the jail, and numbers of those that attended the business, or were present, sickened upon it, and died. Therefore it were good wisdom, that in such cases, the jail were aired, before they were brought forth.
Bacon's Natural History.
As the ants were airing their provisions one winter, up comes a hungry grasshopper to them, and begs a charity. L'Estrange.
Or wicker-baskets weave, or air the corn,
Or grinded grain, betwixt two marbles turn. Dryd. Virgil.
2. To take the air, or enjoy the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.
Nay, stay a little——
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Shakespeare.
I ascended the highest hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Addison.
3. To open to the air; as, clothes.
The others make it a matter of small commendation in itself, if they, who wear it, do nothing else but air the robes, which their place requireth. Hesker.
4. To air liquors; to warm them by the fire; a term used in conversation.
5. To make nests. In this sense, it is derived from arry, a nest.
It is now out of use.
You may add their busy, dangerous, discourteous, yea, and sometimes despicable stealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who, if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be store sufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good housewives chickens in a country. Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.
- AIRBLADDER. n. f. [from air and bladder.]
1. Any cuticle or vesicle filled with air.
The pulmonary artery and vein pass along the surfaces of these airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbutnot on Aliment.
2. The bladder in fishes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and rise or fall.
Though the air bladder in fishes seems necessary for swimming, yet some are so formed as to swim without it. Cudworth.
- AIRBUILT. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any solid foundation.
Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The airbuilt castle, and the golden dream, The

The maid's romantick with, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal flame. Pepe's Dumadi, b. iii.
AIR-DAWN. adj. [from air and dawn.] Drawn or painted in air.

This is the very painting of your fear,
This is the drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. Shaksf. Macbeth.

AIRER. n. f. [from air.] He that expels to the air.

AIRHOLE. n. f. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

AIRINESS. n. f. [from air.] A hole to admit the air.

1. Openness; exposure to the air.

2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make claffick learning speak their language; if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and air of representation in their tongue, which will never agree with the sedate-ness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Fetes.

AIRING. n. f. [from air.] A short journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet serves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the summer season. Add on it.

AIRLESS. adj. [from a and less.] Without communication with the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor air's dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksf. J. Cæsar.

AIRING. n. f. [from air, for air.] A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, slight airings, will be won

Web-dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore. B. John Catil.

AIRY. adj. n. f. [from air and pure.]

A machine by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that on which the water pump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guericke, conful of Magdebourg, who exhibited his first publick experiments before the emperor and the states of Germany, in 1704. But his machine laboured under several defects, in the force necessary to work it, which was very great, and the progress very slow; besides, it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. However, Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr.
Hooke, removed several of these inconveniences; though, still, the working of this pump was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exclusion, after a vacuum was nearly obtained. This labour has been since removed by Mr.
Hawtree, who, by adding a second barrel and piston, to rise as the other fell, and fall as it rose, made the pressure of the atmosphere on the descending one, of as much service as it was of service in the ascending one. Vreem made a further improvement in Hawtree's air-pump, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

For the air that, in exhausted receivers of air-pumps, is exhaled from minerals, and beasts, and fruits, and liquors, is as true and genuine as to elasticity and density, or rarefaction, as that we breathe in; and yet this factitious air is so far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even sooner than the very absence of all air, or a vacuum itself.

AIRMATT. n. f. [from air and mat.] A passage for the air into mines and subterraneous places.

By the sinking of an air shaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the steam both of the miners breath and the damp, which would otherwise stagnate there. Key.

AIRY. adj. [from air, æreus, Lat.]

1. Composed of air.

The first is the transmissio or emission, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections; and this, of all the rest, the most corporal. Bacon.

2. Belonging to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fishes that have wings, that are no strangers to the airy region.

1. High in air.

While rivers here forsake the fields below,
And, winding at their height, through airy channels flow.

Light as air; thin; unsubstantial; without solidity.

Thou'ld ambition of airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. Shaksf. Lear.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train;

And, with her grizzly lead, his lovely queen remain. Dryden.

5. Without reality; without any steady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Not think with wind
Of airy threats to awe whom yet with deeds
Thou canst not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Nor (to avoid such meanness) flying high,
With empty sound, and airy notions, fly. Reformers.

I have found a complaint concerning the scarcity of money, which occasioned many airy propositions for the remedy of it.

Temple's Miscellany.

6. Fluttering; loose; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

But the epic poem is too stately to receive those little ornaments. The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of emeralds is reserved for queens and goddesses. Dryden's Amadis, Dedication.

By this name of ladies, he means all young persons, slender, finely shaped, airy, and delicate; such as are nymphs and nuns. Dryden's D. of Seg.

7. Gay; brightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; spirited;
light of heart.

He that is merry and airy at shore, when he sees a sad and a loud tempest on the sea, or dances bravely when God is under from heaven, regards not when God speaks to all the world.

Top's Rule of Living, l. 15.

AIRLE. n. f. [Thus the word is written by Addis, but perhaps improperly; since it seems deducible only from either air, a wing; or aller, a path; and is therefore to be written airle.]
The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means so magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge net, with a double airle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addis.

AIR, or EIGHT. n. f. [supposed, by Stevens, to be corrupted from iliet.] A small island in a river.

AIRULE. n. f. [air, rule, Fr.] An additional pipe to waterworks. Ditt.

TO AKE, v. n. [from αἶμα, Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ake.] See ACHE.

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal pains; distinguished from injury, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts; but this is no accurate account.

To feel, and be deny'd, such common grace,
My wound ake at you! Shakspeare's Timon.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a fensé

Of pain. Shakspeare's Othello.

Were the pleasure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that sick stomach and aking head, which, in some men, are sure to follow, I think, no body would ever let wine touch his lips. Lucke.

His limbs must ake, with daily toil oppress,
Ere long-with'd night brings necessary rest. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart; as, the heart ake; to imply grief or fear. Shakspeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails;
And each, by turns, his airing heart assails. Addis, Oe. M.

My soul ake

To know when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

AIRN. adj. [from a and lin.]

1. Related to; allied to by blood; used of persons.
I do not say thee, dear Pamela; only I could wish, that, being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off airn in fortune.

Sidney, b. ii.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the same properties; used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing airn to the silly envy of the ass. L'Estrange, Fob.

Some limbs again in bulk or stature
Unlike, and not airn by nature.

In concert act, like modern friends,
Because one serves the other's ends. Prior.

He separates it from questions which it may have been complicated, and distinguishes it from questions which may be airn to it. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

AL, ATTEL, ADLE, do all seem to be corruptions of the Saxon Ægel, noble, famous; as also, Aling and Ading, are corruptions of Ægelung, nobility, splendid, famous. Glossary Camden.

Al, Adl, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Alde, ancient; and so, oftentimes, the initial al, being melted by the Normans, from the Saxon albo. Idem, ibid.

ALABASTER. n. f. [alabastron.]

A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kind; some is white, which is most common; some of the colour of horn, and transparent; some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it to make boxes for perfumes. Suavi.

Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shaksf. Othello.

ALABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

I cannot forbear reckoning of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Livia's peristyle. It is of the colour of fire, and may be seen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall; so that the light passing through it, makes it look to those in the church, like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addis on Italy.

ALACK. interj. [This word seems only the corruption of alai.]
Alas; an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would and we would not.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

At thunder now no more I start,
Than at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALACADAY, interj. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting sorrow and melancholy.
ALACROUSLY, adv. [from alarcius, supposed to be formed from alarci; but of alarcius I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriously expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country. Government of the Tongue, § 4.
ALACRITY, n. f. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulness, expressed by some outward token; sprightliness; gaiety; liveliness; cheerful willingness.

Wherefore, in the end, these orders were, on all sides, affixed unto with no less alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to be when they take conditions, such as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow straits of advantage. Hooker's Preface.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Sh. Rich. III.
But glad, that now his feet should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 1011.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner underfoot the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praise them all, the fates flood by. Dryd. Ann. Hist.
ALAMPRE, n. f. The lowest note but one in Guido Areteine's scale of music.

ALAMODE, adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the fashion: a low word. It is used likewise by shopkeepers for a kind of thin fickle manufacture.

ALAND, adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his cousin, were cast aland, far off from the place whither their desires would have guided them. Sidney, b. ii.

Three more, fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Dath'd on the shallows of the moving fand,
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland. Dryd. Virg. Æn.
ALARUM, n. f. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are summoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you shall blow, but you shall not found an alarm. Numbers, x. 7.
Behold, God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets, to cry alarms against you. 2 Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With flutill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden's Cæsar.
Taught by this stroke, renounce the wars a arm,
And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope's Iliad.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or disturbance.
Is it then true, as distant rumours run,
That crowds of rivals, for thy mothers charms,
Thy palace fill with insults and alarms. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

To ALARUM, v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms; to disturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The waip the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addison.
2. To surprise with the apprehension of any danger.
When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms. Tickell's Add.
3. To disturb in general.

His son, Cupavo, brust'd the briny flood;
Upon his stern a brawny Centaur stood,
Who heav'd a rock, and threat'ning still to throw,
With lifted hands alarm'd the seas below. Dryd. Æneid.

ALARM-BELL, n. f. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarm-bell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And from the streets, found drums and ataballes.

Dryden's Conquest of Granada.
ALARMING, particip. adv. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; surprising; as, an alarming message, an alarming pain.

ALARMPOST, n. f. [from alarm and post.] The post or place appointed to each body of men, to appear at, when an alarm shall happen.

ALARUM, n. f. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm. See ALARUM.]

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments,
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
Hence too, that the might better hear,
She sets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but the alarms which they beat. Prior.
To ALARUM, v. a. [corrupted from to alarm. See ALARM.]

Withered murder
[Alarm'd by his fainted the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch] thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

ALA's, interj. [heia, Fr. clasi, Dutch.]
1. A word expressing lamentation, when we use it of ourselves.
But yet, alas! O but yet alas! our haps be but hard haps. Sidney, b. i.

Alas! how little from the grave we claim?
Thou but prefer'st a form, and I a name. Pope's Epist.

2. A word of pity, when used of other persons.
Alas! poor Protheus, thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.

Shakespeare's The Gentlemen of Verona.
3. A word of sorrow and concern, when used of things.

Thou hast faith the Lord God, smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel. Ezekiel, vi. 11.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cause!
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 461.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field;
Piteous indeed must be, when I, a spirit,
Can have to feel a sense of human woes. Dryd. K. Arthur.

ALAS THE DAY, interj. Ah, unhappy day!
Alas the day! I never gave him cause. Shakespeare's Othello.

Alas a day! you have ruined my poor mistress; you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her, if she make it up with her husband? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

ALAS THE WHILE, interj. Ah, unhappy time!
All as the sheep, such was the shepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, (alas the while!)
May seem he loved, or else some care he took. Spenser's Faerie Queene.

ALATÉ, adv. [from a and late.] Late; no long time ago.

ALB, n. f. [album, Lat.] A surplice; a white linen vestment worn by priests.

ALBET, adv. [a coalition of the words all be it so. Stinner.]
Although; notwithstanding; though it should be.

This very thing is cause sufficient, why duties belonging to each kind of virtue, albeit the law of reason teach them, should, notwithstanding, be prescribed even by human law. Hobbes.

Of one, whole eyes,
Albeit unused to the nicling mood,
Drop tears, as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare's Othello.

He, who has a probable belief, that he shall meet with thieves in such a road, thinks himself to have reason enough to decline it, albeit he is sure to sustain some loss, though yet considerable, inconvenience by his so doing. South's Sermons.

ALBUGINEOUS, adj. [albugo, Lat. the white of an egg.]
Eggs, I observe, will freeze in the albugineous part thereof.

Brown's Viceroy Errata, b. ii.
I opened by incision, giving vent first to an albugineous, then to white concolled matter: upon which the tumour sunk.

Wifeman's Surgery.
ALBUGO, n. f. [Lat.] A disease in the eye, by which the cornea contracts a whiteness. The same with leucina.

ALBURN COLOUR, n. f. See ALBURN.

ALCAHEST, n. f. An Arabick word, to express an universal dissolvent, which was pretended to by Paracelsus and Helmont.

ALCAID, n. f. [from al, Arab. and caid, the head.]
t. In Barbary, the governor of a castle.

Th' alcid
Shuns me, and, with a grim civility,
Bows, and declines my walks. Dryden's Den Sobieski.

2. In Spain, the judge of a city, first instituted by the Saracens.

ALCANNA, n. f. An Egyptian plant used in dying; the leaves making a yellow, infused in water, and a red in acid liquors.

The root of alkanum, though green, will give a red stain.

ALCHYMICAL, adv. [from al chymy.] Relating to alchymy; produced by alchymy.

The rose noble, then current for six fillings and eight pence, the alchymists do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Candee's Remains.

ALCHYMICALLY, adv. [from alchymical.] In the manner of an alchymist; by means of alchymy.

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically. Candee.

ALCHYMIST, n. f. [from alchymy.] One who pursues, or professes the science of alchymy.

To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemy,
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glistening gold. Shakspeare.
Every alchemy knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change; and that after it has been divided by corrosive liquors, into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear in its own form. Cress.

ALCHIMY. n. f. [of al, Arab. and χημα.] The most sublime and occult part of chymistry, which pro-prietes, for its object, the transmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changed the meaning of words, as alchemy doth, or would do, the substance of metals, maketh of any thing what it listeth, and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing. Hooker.

O he sits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchemy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness. Shakspeare.

Princes do but play us; compared to this,
All honours mimic, all wealth alchemy. Deane.
A kind of mixed metal used for spoons, and kitchen utensils.
The golden colour may be some mixture of ornaments, such as they use to brass in the yellow alchemy. Bacon.

White alchemy is made of pan-bals one pound, and arsenicum three ounces; or alchemy is made of copper and auripigmentum. Euseb's Physical Remains.

They bid cry,
With trumpets regal found, the great revolt:
Tow'rd the four winds, four speedy cherubim
Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy,
By herall's voice explain'd. Milton.

ALCOHOL. n. f. An Arabic term used by chymists for a high refined dephlegmated spirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder. Quincy.

If the same salt shall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymists speak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted spaces will be extremely lessened. Boyle.

Sol volatile oleum will coagulate the serum on account of the alcohol, or rectified spirit which it contains. Arbut.
ALCOHOLIZATION. n. f. [from alcoholize.] The act of al-coholizing or rectifying spirits; or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

ALCOHOLIZATION. v. a. [from alcohol.]
1. To make an alcohol; that is, to rectify spirits till they are wholly dephlegmated.

2. To comminute powder till it is wholly without roughness.
ALCORAN. n. f. [al and koran, Arab.] The book of the Maho-medan precepts, and credenda.

If this would satisfy the confidence, we might not only take the present covenant, but subscribe to the council of Trent;
yes, and to the Turkish alcoran; and swear to maintain and obedient either of them. Savanderus against the Jesuits.

ALCOLE. n. f. [alcole, Span.]

A rectify, or part of a chamber, separated by an estrade, or partition of a column, and other correspondent ornaments; in which is placed a bed of state, and sometimes seats to entertain company. Trevius.

The weary'd champion lulls in soft alcoles,
The noblest boast of thy romantic groves,
Oft, if the muse preface, shall he be seen
By Rosamonda fleeing o'er the green,
In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty shades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades. Tickell.
Deep in a rich alcole the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonnade. Pope.

ALDER. n. f. [alder, Lat.] A tree having leaves resembling those of the hazel; the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is spermoid, and of a conical figure.

The species are: 1. The common or round-leaved alder.
2. The long-leaved alder. 3. The feathery alder.
These trees delight in a very moist soil, where few others will thrive, and are a great improvement to such lands. They may be also planted on the sides of brooks, and cut for poles every third or fourth year. The wood is used by turners, and will endure long under ground, or in water. These trees are propagated either by planting layers, or treecuttings, about three feet in length, in February or March. Willar.

Without the grove, a various silver scene
Appear'd around, and groves of living green;
Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cyresses form'd a fragrant shade. Pope.
ALDERLEY-VEGET. adj. superl. [from alder, alder, old, elder, and vege, dear, beloved.] Most beloved; which was held the longest possession of the heart.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams,
In courtly company, or at my beads,
With you, mine alderley sovereign;

Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms.

Shakspeare.

ALDERMAN. n. f. [from alder, old, and man.]

1. The same as senator, Censor. A governor or magistrate, originally, as the name imports, chosen on account of the experience which his age had given him.

Tell him, my self, the mayor, and aldermen,
Are come to have some conference with his grace. Shakspeare.

Though my own aldermen confer'd my bays,
To me committing their eternal praise;
Their full-fed heroes, their pacifick may'rs,
Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars. Pope.

2. In the following passage it is, I think, improperly used.
But if the trumpet's clangour you abhor,

And dare not be an alderman of war,
Take to a shop, behind a counter lie. Dryden.

ALDERMANLY. adv. [from alderman.] Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

These, and many more, suffered death, in envy to their virtues and superiour genius, which emboldened them, in exigencies (wanting an aldermanly discretion) to attempt fierce outset of the common forms. Swift's Asseculatus.

ALDERN. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.
The alder boats first plow'd the ocean;

The sailors' number'd them, and nam'd each star. Mary's Virg.

ALE. n. f. [of ale, Sax.]

1. A liquor made by infusing malt. [See MALT.] in hot water, and then fermenting the liquor.

I'll scratch thy heads; you must be seeing chilrentings.
Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

The fertility of the soil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors. Arbutnot.

2. A merry meeting used in country places.
And all the neighbourhood, from old records
Of antick proverbs drawn from Whifton lords,
And their authorities at wakes and ale,
With country precedents, and old wives tales,
We bring you now. Ben. Jonson.

ALEBERRY. n. f. [from ale and berry.] A beverage made by boiling ale with spice and sugar, and fops of bread: a word only used in conversation.

ALE BREWER. n. f. [from ale and brewer.] One that professes to brew ale.

The summer-made malt brews ill, and is disliked by most of our ale-brewers. Arbutnot's History.

ALECONNER. n. f. [from ale and con.] An officer in the city of London, whose business is to inspect the measures of publick houses. Four of them are chosen or rechosen annually by the common-hall of the city; and whatever might be their life formerly, their places are now regarded only as sine-cures for decayed citizens.

ALECOOT. n. f. [perhaps from ale, and coot, Lat.] The name of an herb. Ditt.

ELECTRYOMANCY, or ALECTROMANCY. n. f. [electryomancy and man.] Divination by a cock. Ditt.

ALEGAH. n. f. [from ale and egger, four.] Sour ale; a kind of acid made by ale, as vinegar by wine, which has lost its spirit.

ALEGER. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; sprightly: a word not now used.

Certainly, this berry-coffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all conduce the spirits, and make them strong and aleger. Bacon.

ALEHOOF. n. f. [from ale and hoof, head.] Groundivy, so called by our Saxon ancestors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. See GROUNDIVY.

Ale, or groundivy, is, in my opinion, of the most excellent and most general use and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

ALEHOUSE. n. f. [from ale and house.] A house where ale is publickly sold; a rippling-house. It is distinguished from a tavern, where they sell wine.

Thou most beautiful inn,
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an ale house guest? Shakspeare.
One would think it should be no easy matter to bring any man of sense in love with an alehouse; indeed of so much sense, as seeing and smelling amounts to; there being such frequent encounters of both, as would quickly fend him packing, did not the love of good fellowship reconcile to these nances. South.

I see shall each alehouse, thee each gibbous mourn,
And answer ginsphos frower sighs return. Pope.

ALEHOUSE KEEPER. n. f. [from alehouse and keeper.] He that keeps ale publickly to sell.

You resemble perfectly the two alehouse keepers in Holland, who were at the same time burgomasters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Belingsbroke to Swift.

ALEKNIGHT. n. f. [from ale and knights.] A pot companion;
a tippler: a word now out of use.

The old aleknights of England were well depainted out of him, in the ale-house colours of that time, in this manner. C Camden.

ALEMBICK.

AL-EMICK, n. f. A vessel used in distilling, consisting of a vessel placed over a fire in which is contained the substance to be distilled, and a concave closely fitted on, into which the fumes arise by the heat; this cover has a beak or spout, into which the vapours rise, and by which they pass into a serpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condensed, and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be ratched into invisible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only scattered into minute parts; which meeting together in the alembic, or in the receiver, do presently return into such water as they constituted before. Boyle.

AL-SOUTH, adv. [from a for at, and south.] At full length; along; stretched along the ground.

ALERT, adj. [Alert, Fr. perhaps from alaci, but probably from alaci, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military sense, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.

2. In the common sense, brisk; pert; petulant; smart; implying some degree of confidence and contempt.

I saw an alert young fellow, that coked his hat upon a friend of his, and accosted him after the following manner: Well, Jack, the old pig is dead at last. Swift's Spect.

ALERTNESS, n. f. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; sprightliness; pertness.

That alertness and unconcern for matters of common life, which a campaign or two would infallibly have given him.

ALIST-STER, n. f. [from ale and stere.] An officer appointed in every court, and sworn to look to the sifize and the goodness of bread and ale, or beer, within the precincts of that lordship. Cutler.

ALIVAT, n. f. [from ale and vaz.] The tub in which the ale is fermented.

ALWASHED, adj. [from ale and wash.] Steeped or soaked in ale.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among flaming battles and alewash wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakespeare.

ALWIFE, n. f. [from ale and wife.] A woman that keeps an alehouse.

Perhaps he will swagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an alwife, or take the goods by force, and throw them the bad halfeence. Swift's Drapier's Letter.

ALEXANDERS, n. f. [See Sevring, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flowers are produced in umbels, consisting of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; these rest upon the empanment, which afterward becomes an almost globular fruit, composed of two pretty thick seeds, sometimes shaded like a crescent, gibbous, and streaked on one side, and plain on the other.

The species are: 1. Common Alexanders. 2. Foreign Alexanders, with a round leaf, &c.

The root of these herbs, which is that ordered by the college for medicinal use, grows wild in divers parts of England, and may be propagated by sowing their seeds upon an open spot of ground in August. Alar.

ALEXANDER'S FOOT, n. f. The name of an herb.

ALEXANDRIE, n. f. A kind of verb borrowed from the French, first used in a poem called Alexandrie. They consist, among the French, of twelve and thirteen syllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers should, for the most part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majesty of thought requires it, they may be stretched to the English heroic of five feet, and to the French Alexandrie of six. Dryden.

Then, at the last, and only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needless Alexand line ends the long.

That, like a wounded snake, drag it flow length along.

Psalm's Essay on Criticism.

ALEXIPHARMICK, adj. [from alex and pharmakon.] That which drives away poison; antidotal; that which opposes infection.

That some antidotal quality it may have, we have no reason to deny; for since else a hoofs and horns are magnified for epilepsies, since not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Bacon's Vigor Lrezar.

ALEXITERIAL, or ALEXITERICK, adj. [from alex and ter.] That which drives away poison; that which dissolves in fevers.

ALGATES, adv. [from all and gate, Saxon.] Gate is the same as vaz; and still used for near in the Scottish dialect. On any terms; every way; now obsolete.

Nor had the brasser ever risen mere,
But that Rinaldo's horse e'en then down fell,
And with the fall his leg oppress'd to force.

That, for a space, there must he algates dwell. Fairfax.

ALGIBRA, n. f. [An Arabic word of uncertain etymology; derived, by some, from alger the philosopher; by some, from algi, parsimony; by others, from algi, a house-fitter; by algi, from algi, the restitution of thin broken.]

This is a peculiar kind of arithmetick, which takes the quantity sought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted, and by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by consequence, till the quantity at first only supposed to be known, or at least some power thereof, is found to be equal to some quantity or quantities which are known, and consequently itself is known. The origin of this art is very obscure. It was in use, however, among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world; and they are supposed to have borrowed it from the Persians, and the Persians from the Indians. The first Greek author of algebra was Diophantus, who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books. In 1444, Lucas Paccioli, or Lucas de Burgos, a cordelier, printed a treatise of algebra, in Italian, at Venice. He says, that algebra came originally from the Arabs, and never mentions Diophantus; which makes it probable, that that author was not yet known in Europe; whose method was very different from that of the Arabs, observed by Paccioli and his first European followers. His algebra goes no farther than simple and quadratick equations; and only some of the others advanced to the solution of cubic equations. After several improvements by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Descartes, Sir Isaac Newton brought this art to the height at which it still continues. Treatise of Chambers.

It would surely require no very profound skill in algebra, to reduce the difference of nine-pence in thirty shillings. Swift.

ALGIERA'ICK, adj. [from algebra.]

ALGEBRA'ICAL, adj. [from algebra.]

1. Relating to algebra; as, an algebraical treatise.

2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation.

ALGEBRA'IST, n. f. [from algebra.] A person that understands or practices the science of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraist or uncipherer can use more subtle suppositions, to find the demonstration or cipher, than every unconcerned person doth to find the murderers. Grant's Bill of Mortality.

Confining themselves to describe almost nothing else but the synthetick and analytic methods of geometricals and algebraists, they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logic.

ALGID, adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. Di.

ALGIDITY, n. f. [from algid.] Chineseness; cold. Di.

ALGIDNESS, n. f. [from algid.] Chineseness; cold. Di.

ALGIFIC, adj. [from algis, Lat.] That which produces cold. Di.

ALGOR, n. f. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chinefs.

ALGORITHM, n. f. [Arabic words, which are used to imply]

ALGORITHM, n. f. the six operations of arithmetick, or the science of numbers. Di.

ALGO'SE, adj. [from algis, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Di.

ALLIS, adv. A Latin word, signifying otherwise; often used in the trials of criminals, whose danger has obliged them to change their names; as, Simphon alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwise; namely, otherwise Baker.

ALIMB, adj. [alimilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nourishing; that which may be nourished. Di.

ALIEN, adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the same family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown Dryden.

Of alien trees, and apples not her own.

But who can tell, what pangs, what sharp remorse,

Torment the Boian prince? from native soil

I said by fate, turn from the tender embrace

Of weeping comfort, and deprive the sight

Of his young guidis progeny, he seeks

Inglorious shelter in an alien land. Philipp.

2. Littrated from; not allied to; adverse to; with the particle frem, and sometimes is, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the disciples of the fire, by a similitude not alien from their profession. Boyle.

The sentiment that arises, is a conviction of the deplorable state of nature, to which fin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien frem God and goodness, and a prey to the great deceitful. Rogers's Sermon.

They encouraged persons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to strengthen their faction. Swift's Alcibiades.

ALIEN, n. f. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a denizen; a man of another country or family; not allied; a stranger.

In whomsoever these things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only she holds for alien and strangers, in whom these things are not found. Hunter.

If it be proved against an alien,

He seeks the life of any citizen,

The party, gainst the which he doth contrive,

Shall live on half his goods. Shakespeare, Alcibiades of Venice.

The mere Irish were not accounted aliens, but enemies, and otherwise out of the protection of the law; so, as it was no capital offence to kill them. Lawson on Ireland.

Thy place in come I thou hast rudely lost,

Which by thy younger brother is supply'd,

And art almost an alien to the hearts

Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shakespeare.

Thou

Their famous lawyer condemned the persons, who sat idle in divisions dangerous to the government, as alieni, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addison.

2. In law. An alien is one born in a strange country, and never enfranchised. A man born out of the land, so it be within the limits beyond the seas, or of English parents out of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not alieni, but denizens. Covent.

TO ALIEN. v. a. [alienus, Fr. alieni, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another. If the son alien those lands, and then repurchase them again in fee, now the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale.

2. To estrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averse to; with from. The king was wonderfully disgusted, when he found, that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

ALIAS. adv. [from To Alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred. Land is alienable, and treasure is transitory, and both must, at one time or other, pass from him, either by his own voluntary act, or by the violence and injustice of others, or at least by fate. Dennis.

TO ALIENATE. v. a. [alienare, Fr. alien, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another. The countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no christians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections; with the particle from, where the first possessor is mentioned. The manner of mens writing must not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuades them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes survey'd the dark idolatries Of aliened Judah. Milton.

Any thing that is apt to disturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, such as cross and distasteful humours, is, either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tilleyson.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honest Castilian, whom he was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Addison.

ALIMENATE. adv. [alimatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; stranger to; with the particle from.

They are most damnable wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge, by all desperate methods; wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, conscience, or honour. Swift.

ALIMINATION. n. f. [alimatus, Lat.]

1. The act of transferring property. The beginning of this ordinance was for the maintenance of their lands in their posterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto strangers. Spenser.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, towards the close of her reign, to give a check to that sacrilege. Her successor passed a law, which prevented absolutely all future alienation of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property, have created new and great dependencies. Swift.

2. The state of being alienated; as, the estate was wasted during its alienation.

3. Change of affection. It is left but in dark memory, what the case of this person was, and what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

Applied to the mind, it means disorder of the faculties. Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulse, though not against, yet without their will; as in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter absence of wit and judgement. Hooker.

ALIFEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. D.

ALIFEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dist.

ALIGER. v. a. [from ala, and lig, to lie down.] To lay; to ally; to throw down; to subdue: an old word even in the time of Spenser, now wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why fitten we fo, As wren overwent with woe: Upon so fair a morrow, The joyous time now nightfall, That shall allyge this bitter blatt, And slake the winter sorrow. Spenser.

TO ALICENT. v. n. [alibetan, Sax af-licetan, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and stop. The word implies the idea of alighting; as of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horse or carriage, and generally of resting or stopping. There ancient night arriving, did alight From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen.

2. To come down, and stop. The word implies the idea of alighting; as of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horse or carriage, and generally of resting or stopping. There ancient night arriving, did alight From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen.

There famous lawyer condemned the persons, who sat idle in divisions dangerous to the government, as alieni, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addison.

2. In law. An alien is one born in a strange country, and never enfranchised. A man born out of the land, so it be within the limits beyond the seas, or of English parents out of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not alieni, but denizens. Covent.

TO ALIEN. v. a. [alienus, Fr. alieni, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another. If the son alien those lands, and then repurchase them again in fee, now the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale.

2. To estrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averse to; with from. The king was wonderfully disgusted, when he found, that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

ALIAS. adv. [from To Alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred. Land is alienable, and treasure is transitory, and both must, at one time or other, pass from him, either by his own voluntary act, or by the violence and injustice of others, or at least by fate. Dennis.

TO ALIENATE. v. a. [alienare, Fr. alien, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another. The countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no christians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections; with the particle from, where the first possessor is mentioned. The manner of mens writing must not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuades them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes survey'd the dark idolatries Of aliened Judah. Milton.

There is alighted at your gate A young Venetian. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Slackness breeds worms; but the sure traveller, Though he alights sometimes, still goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot he walks till night; When with his horse he never will alight. Denham.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore, His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore; The first that fail'd in air, 'tis sung by Fame, To the Cumean coast at length he came, And here alighting built this costly frame. Dryden.

When he was admonish'd by his subject to descend, he came down gently and circling in the air, and fingering to the ground. Like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her song till she alights; still preparing for a higher flight at her next tully. Dryden.

When finish'd was the fight, The victors from their lullies fled alight; Like them dismounted all the fiery train. Dryd. Fables.

Should a spirit of superiour rank, a stranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Addison.

2. It is used also of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon. But forms of stones from the proud temple's height, Pour down, and on our batter'd heels alight. Dryden.

ALIKE. adv. [from a and like.] With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner; in the same form. The darkness hideth not from thee; but v's night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. Psalms.

With thee conversing, I forget all time; All seasons, and their changes, all please alike. Milton.

Riches cannot relieve me from the grave. Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryd. Juv.

Let us unite at least in an equal zeal for those capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place, But differing far in figure and in face. Pope.

ALIMENT. n. f. [alimentum, Lat.] Nourishment; that which nourishes; nutriment; food. New parts are added to our substance; and as we die, we are born daily; nor can we give an account, how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is distributed. Glaucowill.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and solids of our bodies, are called aliments. But, to take it in the largest sense, by aliment, I understand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink, and seasoning, as salt, spice, vinegar, &c. A-busnot.

ALIMENTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That which has the quality of aliment; that which nourishes; that which feeds. The sun, that light imparts to all, receives From all his aliment recompense, In humid exhalations. Milton.

Except they be water'd from higher regions, these weeds must lose their alimental sap, and wither themselves. Brown.

Th' industrious, when the sun in Leo rides, And darts his fullbreit beams, portending drought, Forget not, at the foot of every plant, To sink a circling trench, and daily pour A just supply of alimental streams, Exhausted sap recruiting. Philips.

ALIMENTARINESS. n. f. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nourishment. Dist.

ALIMENTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That which belongs or relates to aliment. The solution of the aliment by mastication is necessary; without it, the aliment could not be disposed for the changes, which it receives as it passeth through the alimentary duct. A-busnot on Aliments.

2. That which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nourishing. I do not think that water supplies animals, or even plants, with nourishment, but serves for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and distribute them to the several parts of the body. Roy.

Of alimentary roots, some are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turneps and carrots. These have a fattening quality, which they manifest in feeding of cattle. A-busnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTATION. n. f. [from aliment.] The power of affording aliment; the quality of nourishing. Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no a imentionation. Bacon.

ALIMINOUS. adj. [from aliment.] That which nourishes; a word very little in use. The plethora renders us lean, by suppressing our spirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digesting the alimentous humours into the flesh. Harsy.

ALIMONY. n. f. [alimen'ia, Lat.]

Alimony signifies that legal proportion of the husband's estate, which, by the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, is allowed to the the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him, provided it be not caused by her elopement or adultery.

Asylle's Paragon.

Before they settled hands and hearts,

Till almsy or death them parts.

Hudibras.

AL'LIQUANT. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice 3 being 9, four times 3 making 12.

AL'LIQUOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, such as will exactly measure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

A'LISS. adj. [from ale] Refembling ale; having qualities of ale. They let it stand five days before they put it into the cask, stirring it and beating down the yeast into it; this gives it the sweet aliss taste.

Mortimer's Lijbanar.

A'LITURE. n. f. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Did.

AL'IVE. adj. [from a and vive].

1. In the state of life; not dead.

Not well alive, nor wholly dead they were,

But some faint signs of feeble life appear.

Dryden.

Not youthful kings in battle seized to live,

Not scornful virgins who their charms survive.

Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and learned men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of such as inclined toward them, kept alive.

Hosier.

3. Cheerful; sprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not to much alive the whole day, if she slept more than six hours.

Clarissa.

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde; as, the best man alive; that is, the best, with an emphasis.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise by-live,

And unto battle do yourselves addice;

For yonder comes the prowell knight alive,

Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobility.

Fairy Queen.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the delusion of monarchy with any pleasure.

Clarinda.

John was quick and understood his business very well; but no man alive was more careless in looking into his accounts.

Arbutnot.

A'LIKANEH. n. f. A word used first by Paracelsus, and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent, or lixivium, which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKAL'ESCENT. adj. [from altali] That which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkalescent or anti-acid.

Arbutnot.

ALKALI. n. f. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali; by us glasswort.] This herb they burnt to ashes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt; this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive, producing putrefaction in animal substances, to which it is applied. Arbutnot.

Any substance, which, when mingled with acid, produces effervescence and fermentation. See ALKALIZATE.

A'ALKALINE. adj. [from alkali] That which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery lixivium will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from this alkaline state, which is confirmed by experience; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO ALKA'LIZATE. v. a. [from altali] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKALIZATE. adj. [from altali] That which has the qualities of alkali; that which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that, which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizing salts.

Boyle.

The colour of violets seems to be of that order, because their syrup, by acid liquors, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizing, turns green.

Newton.

ALKALIZATION. n. f. [from altali] The act of alkalizing, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

ALKANIT. n. f. [Arabis, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This plant is a species of bugloss, with a red root, brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil, and must be sown in March.

Milton.

ALKEKE'NGI. n. f. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-berry; of considerable use as an astringent, dissolvent, and diuretic. The plant bears a near resemblance to Solanum, or Nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of vesicarium. Chambers.

ALKE'RMES. n. f. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a celebrated remedy, of the form and consistence of a confection; whereof the hermes berries are the basis. The other ingredients are pippin cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrace, musk, cinnamon, aloes-wood, pearls, and ical gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio alhermes is chiefly made at Montpellier, which supplies most part of Europe therewith. The grain, which gives it the denomination, is no where found so plentiful as there. Chambers.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come.

Spenser.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight

Within Corioli gates.

Shakespeare.

And swore so loud,

That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book.

Shakespeare.

They could call a comet a fixed star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa.

Cambden.

For a large confidence is all one,

And signifies the same with none.

Hudibras.

Bala, from a silver box distilled around,

Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground.

I do not remember he any where mentions expressly the title of the last-born, but all along keeps himself under the shelter of the indefinite term, heir.

Lake.

Justice, indeed, may be furnished out of this element, as far as her sword goes; and courage may be all over a continued blaze, if the artist pleases.

Addison.

If e'er the miser dust his farthings spare,

He thinly spreads them through the public square,

Where, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie,

And from each other catch the doleful cry.

Gay.

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other consideration.

I am of the temper of most kings, who love to be in debt, are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward.

Dryden.

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall wed,

That lord, whose hand must take my plighted, shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

Sure I shall never marry, like my sister,

To love my father all.

Shakespeare.

4. Although. This sense is truly Teutonic, but now obsolete.

Do you not think the accomplishment of it

Sufficient work for one man's simple head,

All were as the rest but simply wnt.

Spenser.

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis; nearly the same with juyl.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring,

All as his fraying flock he fed;

And, when his honour hath thee read,

Crave pardon for thy hardy head.

Spenser.

ALL. adj. [ALL, Adal, calle, all, Sax. oll, Welsh al, Dutch alle, Germ. alles, Gr.]

1. The whole number; every one.

Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all, a' honourable men.

Shakespeare.

To graze the herb all leaving,

Devour'd each other.

Milton.

The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward.

Tillotson.

2. The whole quantity; every part.

Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work.

Deut.

Political power, I take to be a right of making laws with penalties, and of employing the force of the community in the execution of such laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this only for the public good.

Lake.

3. The whole duration of time.

On whose pastures cheerful spring,

All the year doth sit and sing;

And, rejoicing, smiles to see,

Their green backs wear his livery.

Craford.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice.

Shakespeare.

ALL. n. f.

1. The whole; opposed to part, or nothing.

And will the yet abate her eyes on me;

On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?

On me that halt, and am misshapen thus?

Shakespeare.

Nought's had, all's spent,

Where our desire is got without content.

Shakespeare.

The youth shall study, and no more engage

Their flaring wishes for uncertain age;

No more with fruitless care, and chaced strife,

Chace fleeting pleasure through the maze of life;

Finding the wretched all they here can have,

But present food, and but a future grave.

Prior.

Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fall of success.

Addison.

2. Every thing.

I hen shall we be news-cramm'd—All the better; we shall be the more remarkable.

Stukey, etc.

Up

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow—Well, let's one for that. Shakeſp.
All the ſitter, Lenuſus: our coming
Is not for ſatisfaction; we have busineſs. Ben Jonſon.

That is, every thing is the better, the ſame, the fitter.
See, ere and pow'r, thy giving, I ſume;
And glad he ſhall reign, when in the end
Thou ſhalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me all whom thou lov'ſt. Milton.
They all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and lett it ſo little foothold, that the firſt blaſt of wind laid it flat upon the ground, neſt, eagles, and all. L'Eſtrange.

They that do not keep up this indifference for all but truth, put coloured ſpectacles before their eyes, and look thro' ſilly glaſſes. Etc.

A torch, ſuſt and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Ally n.

All is much uſed in compoſition; but, in moſt inſtances, it is merely arbitrary; as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and claiſſical; as, Almighty.

When it is conjoined with a participle, it ſeems to be a noun; as, all-surrounding; in other caſes, an adverb; as, all- comprehended, or completely accompliſhed.

Of theſe compounds, a ſmall part of thoſe which may be found is infected.

ALL-BEARING, adj. [from all and bear.] That which bears every thing; omniparous.

Thus, while he ſpoke, the ſovereign plant he drew,
Where on th' all-bearing earth unmaik'd it grew. Pope.

ALL-CHEERING, adj. [from all and cheer.] That which gives gayety and cheertulneſs to all

Soon as the all-cheering fun
Should, in the fartheſt eail, begin to draw
The ſhady curtains from Aurora's bed. Shakeſp.

ALL-COMMANDING, adj. [from all and command.] Having the ſovereignty over all.

He now ſets before them the high and ſhining idol of glory,
the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh.

ALL-EMBRACING, adj. [from all and embrace.] That which embraces all men, or every thing.

Wray in embracing ſhades, Ulyſſes lies,
He woe forgot! but Pallas now addreſs,
To break the bands of all-embracing reſt. Pope.

ALL-CONQUERING, adj. [from all and conquer.] That which ſubdues every thing.

Scorn'd of Satan ſprung, all-conquering death I
What think'ſt thou of our empire now? Milton.

ALL-CONSUMING, adj. [from all and consume.] That which conſumes every thing.

By ageuſt broke—but all-conſuming care
Derog's perhaps the ſtrength, that time would ſpare. Pope.

ALL-DIVORING, adj. [from all and divorce.] That which eats up every thing.

Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Deſtitute war, and all-divorcing age. Pope.

ALL-FURS, n. f. [from all and fur.] A low game at cards, played by two; ſo named from the four particulars by which it is reckoned, and which, joined in the hand of either of the players, make up all of four.

ALL-HEALTH, n. f. [from all and health, for health.] All health.
This is therefore not a compound, though, perhaps uſually reckoned among them.

All-hail, ye heils, where conſtant peace attends!
All-hail, ye ſacred, ſolitary groves!
All-hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whole converſation pleases and improves. Watts.

ALL-HALLOWN, n. f. [from all and hallow, to make holy.] The time about All-Sunday.

Facewell, thou after ſpring! farewell,
All-hail an ſummer. Shakeſpeare.

ALL-HALLOWE-TIDE, n. f. [See ALL-HALLOWN.] The term not All Saints, or the firſt of November.

Croſs the bow about All-hallowe-tide, in the bare place, and let it in the ground, and it will grow to be a fair tree in one year. Bacon.

ALL-HEAL, n. f. [Panax, Lat.] A ſpecies of irivert.

ALL-JUDGING, adj. [from all and judge.] That which has the ſovereign right of judgment.

I look with horror back,
That I deſert my wretched life, and curſe
My paſt polluted life. All-judging heav'n,
Who knows my crimes, has ſeen my terror for them. Roderick's June Shore.

ALL-KNOWING, adj. [from all and know.] Omniscient; all-wise.
Should we repute at a little miſplaced charity, we, who could no way ſervice the effect: when an all-knowing, all-wise Being ſhows to down every day his benefits on the unthankful and unſenſible? Atterbury.

ALL-MAKING, adj. [from all and make.] That created all;
our Fick. [See ALL-MAKING.]

ALL-POWERFUL, adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty; omnipotent; poſſeſſed of infinite power.

O all-powerful Being, the leaſt motion of whoſe will can create or deſtroy a world; pity us, the mournful friends of thy diſtreſſed ſervant. Swift.

ALL-SAINTS DAY, n. f. The day on which there is a general celebration of the ſaints. The firſt of November.

ALL-SEER, n. f. [from all and ſee.] He that ſees or beholds every thing; he whoſe view comprehends all things.

That high All-ſeer, which I daſh'd with Haſt turn'd my ſign'd prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earneſt, what I beg'd in jeſt. Shakeſp.

ALL-SEEING, adj. [from all and ſee.] That beholds every thing.

The ſame Firſt Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long thoſe penſible forms ſhall laſt;
Nor can they laſt beyond the time aſſign'd
By that all-ſeeing and all-making mind. Dryden.

ALL SOULS DAY, n. f. The day on which ſupplications are made for all ſouls by the church of Rome; the ſecond of November.

This is all ſouls day, fellows, is it not?—
It is, my lord.

Why then, all ſouls day is my body's doomsday. Shakeſp.

ALL-SUFFICIENT, adj. [from all and ſufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.

The teſtimonies of God are all-ſufficient unto the end for which they were given.

He can more than employ all our powers in their utmoſt elevation; for he is every way perfect and all-ſufficient. Norris.

ALL-WISE, adj. [from all and wise.] Poſſeſſed of infinite wiſdom.

There is an infinite, eternal, all-wise Mind governing the affairs of the world. South.

Supreme, all-wise, eternal, potentate!
Sole author, ſole diſpoſer of our fate! Prior.

ALLAN-OPIS, or ALLANTOIDE'S, n. f. [from allan, a gut, and oides, ſhape.] The urinary tunick placed between the ammon and chorion, which, by the navel and urachus, or paſſage by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb, receives the urine from the bladder. Quincy.

To ALLAY, v. a. [from allay, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage; it is therefore derived by ſome from à la fin, according to use; the quantity of metals being mixed according to law; by others, from allier, to unite, perhaps from a seuer, to put together.]

1. To mix one metal with another, to make it ſitter for coinage. In this ſenſe, moſt authors preſerve the original French orthography, and write allay. See ALLOY.

2. To join any thing to another, ſo as to abate its predominant qualities

Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poiſon. Shakeſpeare.

No friendly offices ſhall alter or allay that rancour, that ſits in ſome helliſh breaths, which, upon all occasions, will torn out at its foul mouth in ſlander and invective. South.

3. To quiet; to pacify; to reſpect. The word, in this ſenſe, I think not to be derived from the French allay, but to be the English word lay, with a b before it, according to the old form.

If, by your art you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shakeſpeare.

ALLAY, n. f. [allay, Fr.]

1. The metal of a baſer kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear leſs. Gold is alloyed with ſilver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; ſilver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Croſel.

2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the ſame manner as the admixture of baſer metals allay the qualities of the firſt metals.

Dark colours eaſily ſuffer a ſenſible allay, by little ſcattering light. New's's Opticks.

3. Allay being taken from baſer metals, commonly implies ſomething worſe than that with which it is mixed.

The joy has no allay of jealousy, hope and fear. Ryſam.

ALLAYING, n. f. [from allay.] The perion or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony;
and, upon that account, Aſciven countermands letting blood in choleric bodies; becauſe he elicits the blood a frangum bilis, or a bundle of gall, abounding its acrimony and herceuties.

Ha very on Conſumptions.

ALLAYMENT, n. f. [from allay.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.

If I could temperize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment would I give my grief. Shakeſpeare.

ALLIGATION, n. f. [from allig.]

1. Affirmation; declaration.

2. I lie thng affirmed or affirmed.

Haſt he not twit our ſovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly coupt?

As if he had fuborned none to swear
False allegations, to overthrow his state. Shakespeare.

3. An excuse; a plea.

I omitted no means in my power, to be informed of my errors; and I expect not to be excused in any negligence on account of youth, want of leisure, or any other idle allegations. Pope.

To ALLE'GE. v. a. [allege, Lat.]

1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.

2. To plead as an excuse, or produce as an argument.

Surely the present form of church-government is such, as no law of God, or reason of man, hath hitherto been alleged, of force sufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmost of their power, withstand the alteration thereof. Hobbes.

If we forsake the ways of grace or goodness, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of instruction; we cannot say we have not learned them, or we could not. Spratt.

He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information. Locke.

ALLEG'ABLE. adj. [from allege.] That which may be alleged. Upon this interpretation all may be solved, that is allegable against it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALLEGEMENT. n. f. [from allege.] The same with allegation. D.

ALLEG'ER. n. f. [from allege.] He that alleges. Which narrative, if we may believe it as confidently as the famous allegor of it, Pamphilus, appears to do, would seem to argue, that there is, sometimes, no other principle requisite, than what may result from the lucky mixture of the parts of several bodies. Bayle.

ALLEG'ANCE. n. f. [allegance, Fr.] The duty of subjects to the government.

I did pluck allegiance from mens hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king. Shakespeare.

We charge you on allegiance to ourselves,
To hold your slaughter'd hands, and keep the peace. Shakespeare.

The house of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the several counties of England, professing all allegiance to them, govern absolutely; the lords concurring, or rather submitting to whatever is proposed. Carleton.

ALL'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word not now used.

For your great crimes

Heap'd upon me, poor undervicer, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My pray'r's to heav'n for you. Shakespeare.

ALLEGOR'ICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I discern not. Milton.

ALLEGOR'ICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; mythical.

When our Saviour said, in an allegorical and mystical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; the hearers understood him literally and grossly. Bentley.

The epithet of Apollo for shooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in respect of the darts and bow, the emblems of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the sun. Pope.

ALLEGOR'ICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the messenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peucham.

The place is to be understood allegorically; and what is thus spoken by a Phœnix with wisdom, is, by the Poet, applied to the goddess of it. Pope.

ALLEGORICALNESS. n. f. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Dict.

To ALLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a sense not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his supposition of the tree itself to be true. Raleigh.

As some would allegorize these signs, which we noted before, so others would confine them to the destruction of Jerusalem. Burnet's Theory of the Earths.

An alchymist shall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by sal, sulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the scripture itself, and the sacred mysteries thereof, into the philosopher's stone. Locke.

ALLEGORY. n. f. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative discourse, in which something other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither must we draw out our allegory too long, lest either we make ourselves obscure, or fall into affectation, which is childish. Ben Jonson.

This word nympha meant nothing else but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moisture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peucham.

ALLEGRO. n. f. A word, denoting one of the six distinctions of time. It expresses a sprightly motion, the quickest of all, except Presto. It originally means gay, as in Milton.

ALLELU'YAH. n. f. [This word is falsely written for Hallelujah, הללו יה and יהללו. A word of spiritual exultation, used in hymns; it signifies, Praise God.]

He will fit his tongue to those pious divine strains, which may be a proper preludium to those allelujahs he hopes eternally to sing. Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMANDE. n. f. [Ital.] A grave kind of mulick. Did.

To ALLE'VIATE. v. a. [allevio, Lat.]

1. To make light; to ease; to soften.

Molt of the distempers are the effects of abused plenty and luxury, and must not be charged upon our Maker; who, notwithstanding, hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate those evils which we bring upon ourselves. Brady.

2. To extenuate, or soften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuse.

ALLEVIA'TION. n. f. [from alleviate.]

1. The act of making light; of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendship. Swiss.

2. That by which any pain is eased, or fault extenuated.

This loss of one fifth of their debts and income will fit heavy on them who shall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

ALL'LEY. n. f. [allie, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far. Fairy Queen.
It is common from experience, that where alleys are close gravelled, the earth putteth forth the first year knografts, and after spiregrafts. Bacon.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown. Milton.
Come, my fair love, our morning's task we lose;
Some labour ev'n the easiest life would choose:
Ours is not great: the dangling bows to crop,
Whole too luxuriant growth our alley stop. Dryden.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made,
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade. Pope.

2. A passage in towns narrower than a street.

A back friend, a shoulder clapper, one that commands
The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors.

ALLI'ANCE. n. f. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The state of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this sense, our histories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.

2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen shall th' alliance join Betwixt the Trojan and th' Aonian line. Dryden.

3. Relation by any form of kindred.

For my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And, for alliance's fake, declare the cause
My father lost his head. Shakespeare.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Doriot, your fon, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions. Shakespeare.

Adrastus soon, with Gods averfe, shall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence trief shall rise, and mortal war succeed. Pope.

5. The persons allied to each other.

I would not boast the greatness of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato.

ALLI'CIENCY. n. f. [allies, Lat. to entice or draw] The power of attracting any thing; magnetism; attraction.

The feigned central allies is but a word, and the manner of it still occult. Glauville.

To ALLIGATE. v. a. [allig, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGA'TION. n. f. [from alligate.]

1. The act of tying together; the state of being so tied.

2. The arithmetical rule that teaches to adjust the price of compounds, formed of several ingredients of different value.

ALLIGATOR. n. f. The crocodile. 'His name is chiefly used for the crocodile of America, between which, and that of Africa, naturalists have laid down this difference, that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill flap'd fishes. Shakespeare.

Alot in rows large poppy-heads were strung,
And here a scaly alligator hung. Garrick.

ALLIGATURE. n. f. [from alligate.] The link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLI'SION.

ASSAULTION. n. f. [allatus, allisus, Lat.] The act of striking one thing against another.

There have not been any islands of note, or considerable extent, torn and cut off from the continent by earthquakes, or severed from it by the boisterous assault of the sea. W. Edward.

ALLOCATION. n. f. [allocutis, Lat.]

1. The act of putting one thing to another.

2. The admission of an article in reckoning, and addition of it to the account.

3. An allowance made upon an account; a term used in the exchequer. Chamber.

ALLOCATION. n. f. [allocutio, Lat.] The act of speaking to another.

ALLODIAL. adj. [from allodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of superiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLODIUM. n. f. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but most probably of German origin.] A possession held in absolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is opposed to fee, or feudum, which intimates some kind of dependence. There are no allodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king.

ALLOUGE. n. f. [allouge, Fr.] A pass or thrust with a rapier, so called from the lengthening of the space taken up by the fencer. See ALLOU. v. n. [This word is generally spoke habes, and is used to doze, when they are incited to the chase or battle; it is commonly imagined to come from the French allou; perhaps from all la, look all, showing the object.] To set out; to incite a doze, by crying al ze.

*Alles thy furious maitiff; bid him vex
The nervous herd, and print upon their ears
A sad memorial of their past offence.* Philips.

ALLOUVE. n. f. [allouquum, Lat.] The act of speaking to another; converse; conversation. Dict.

ALLOT. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To distribute by lot.

2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee s r provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom. Shaksfp. King Lear.

I shall deserve my fate, if I refuse
That happy hour, which heav'n allots to peace. Dryd.

3. To distribute; to parcel out; to give each his share.
Since fame was the only end of all their new enterprizes and shakes, a man cannot be too scrupulous in alloting them their due portion of it. Taylor.

ALLOTMENT. n. f. [from allot.] That which is allotted to any one; the part; the share; the portion granted.

There can be no thought of security or quiet in this world, but in a reintegration to the allotments of God and nature. L'Estr.
Though it is our duty to submit with patience to more scanty allotments, yet thus much we may reasonably and lawfully ask of God. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLOTTERY. n. f. [from allot.] That which is granted to any particular person in a distribution. See ALLOTMENT.

Allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament.

Shakspeare's As You Like it.

ALLOTW. v. a. [alluere, Fr. from alluare.]

1. To admit; as, to allotw a position; not to contradict; not to oppose.

The principles, which all mankind allotw for true, are innate; those, that men of right reason admit, are the principles allotted by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of music all our hearts allotw;
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. P. pr.

As to what is alleged, that some of the presbyterians declared openly against the king's murder, I allotw it to be true. Swift.

2. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allotw too much sincerity to the professions of most men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts.

I will help you to enough of them, and shall be ready to allotw the pope as little power here as you please. Swift.

3. To grant licence to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the beldam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madnefs allotw itself to any thing. Shaksfp. King Lear.

But as we were allotted of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.

They referred all laws, that were to be passed in Ireland, to be considered, corrected, and allotted first by the state of England. Daniel on Ireland.

4. To give a sanction to; to authorize.

There is no flander in an allotted fool. Shaksfp.

5. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful thou! if no tears allotw
To him that gave us peace and empire too. W. Alter.

6. To appoint for; to set out to a certain use; as, he allotted his son the third part of his income.

Nº VI.

7. To make abatement, or provision; or to satiate any thing, with some concessions or cautions, regarding something else.

If we consider the different occasions of ancient and modern medals, we shall find they both agree in recording the great actions and successes in war; allowing still for the different ways of making it, and the circumstances that attended it. Addison.

ALLOWABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is observable in many pieces of Raphael, where Magdalen is represented, before our Saviour; washing his feet, on her knees; which was not consistent with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. That which is permitted or licensed; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this sort, the very light of nature alone may discover that which is so far forth in the sight of God allowable. Hester.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence.

Reputation becomes a signal and a very peculiar blessing to magistrates; and their pursuit of it is not only allowable, but laudable. Attorney's Sermons.

ALLOWABLENESS. n. f. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable; lawfulness; exemption from prohibition.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness, in matters of recreation; which is indeed impugned by fame, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

ALLOWANCE. n. f. [from allow.]

1. Admission without contradiction.

Without the notion and allowance of spirits, our philosophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; licence; authority.

That which wisdom did first begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that succeed, although it plead for itself nothing. Hester.

You sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassa's, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the Rate's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara. Shaksfp.

3. Permission; freedom from restraint.

They should therefore be accustomed betimes to confalt and make use of their reason, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A settled rate; or appointment for any use.

The vicual in plantations ought to be expended almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate for every day all his life. Kings.

5. Abatement from the strict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in that which they call heroic verse, is of the Pindarick nature, as well in the thought as the expression; and as such, requires the same grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowance for an innocent passion. Swift's

6. Etablilhed character; reputation.

His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance;
Therefore my hopes, not furkited to death,
Stand in bold awe. Shaksfp. Othello.

ALLOY. n. f. [See ALLAY.]

1. Base metal mixed in coinage.

I hat precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Fine silver is silver without the mixture of any base metal. Ally is base metal mixed with it. Locke.

For let another piece be coined of the same weight, wherein half the silver is taken out, and copper, or other ally, put into the place, every one knows it will be worth but half as much; for the value of the ally is so inconsiderable as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree, than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure always, without mixture or ally.

Attorney's Sermons.

ALLUDESCENCY. n. f. [alludefcentia, Lat.] Willingness; content.

To ALLUDE v. n. [alluda, Lat.] To have some reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to insinuate. It is used of persons; as, he alludes in an old story; or of things, as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom do seem plainly to allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use.

Hester.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared.

Then just proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and measure; and this I doubt not was that artificer's structure here alluded to.

ALLUMINATION. n. f. [allumino, Fr. to light.] One who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; because he gives graces, light and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured.

Cruell.

R

To ALLURE. v. a. [al-lure, Fr. luren, Dutch, 'belopen, Sax. To entice to any thing whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement.

Unto laws that men make for the benefit of men, it hath seemed always needful to add rewards, which may more allure unto good, than any hardish deterrence from it, and punishments, which may more deter from evil, than any sweetens thereof.

Hooker.

Above them all

The golden sun, in splendour likest heav'n,

Alone d his eye.

Milton's Parad. Lost.

Each flaring hope, and each alluring joy.

Lyttleton.

ALLURE. n. f. [from the verb al-lure.] Something set up to entice birds, or other things, to it. We now write lure.

The rather to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen.

Hayward.

ALLUREMENT. n. f. [from al-lure.]

That which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleasure.

Against allurement, custom, and a world

Offended; fearless of reproach, and scorn,

Or violence

Milton's Parad. Lost.

—Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell.

Par. Reg.

To find th' allurement is not hard

To minds relaps'd, for warn'd, and well prepar'd;

But o'ndrous difficult, when once betet,

To flouge through the bruits, and break th' involving net.

Dryden.

ALLURER. n. f. [from al-lure.] The person that allures; enticer; envious.

ALLURINGLY. adv. [from al-lure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLURINGNESS. n. f. [from al-luring.] The quality of alluring or enticing; incitation; temptation by proposing pleasure.

ALLUSION. n. f. [al-lusio, Lat.] That which is, often with reference to something supposed to be already known, and therefore not explicated, a hint; an implication. It has the participle in.

Here are manifest al-lusions and footsteps of the dissolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its last ruin.

Burnet's Theory.

This last al-lusion gall'd the Panther more,

Because indeed it rubb'd upon the core.

Dryd.

Expressings now out of use, al-lusions to customs lost to us, and various particularities, must needs continue several passages in the dark.

Licke.

ALLUSIVE. adj. [al-lusivus, Lat.] Hinting at something not fully explicated.

Where the expression in one place is plain, and the sense affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expression, in the other, is figurative or al-lusive, and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reasonable, in this latter place, to restrain the extent of the figure and allusion, to a consistency with the former.

Roseri's Sermoni.

ALLUSIVELY. adv. [from al-lusivus.] In an allusive manner; by implication; by insinuation.

The Jewish nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compass of one generation, were, according to his prediction, destroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by those eagles, (Matt. xxiv. 28) by which, al-lusively, are noted the Roman armies, whose emblem was the eagle.

Hannard.

ALLUSIVENESS. n. f. [from al-lusivus.] The quality of being allusive.

ALLUSION. n. f. [al-lusio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to something else by the motion of the water.

2. The thing carried by water to something else.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increase which arises from al-lusion, which is defined an infensible increment, brought by the water.

ALLUSIVOUS. adj. [from al-lusivus.] That which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon something else.

To ALLY. v. a. [al-lia, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendship, or confederacy.

All these sects are allied to the inhabitants of the North, so as there is no hope that they will ever serve faithfully against them.

Spenser on Ireland.

Wants, frailties, passions, closer ally'd

The common interest, or endow the eye.

P. p.

To the sun ally'd,

From him they draw the animating fire.

Thomson.

2. To make a relation between two things, by similitude, or resemblance, or any other means.

Two lines I cannot excuse: they are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's simile; but they are too like the tenderness of Ovid.

Dryden.

ALLY. n. f. [al-lie, Fr.] One united by some means of connexion; as, marriage; friendship; confederacy.

We could hinder the accession of Holland to France, either as subjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade, or as an inferior and dependent ally under their protection.

Temple.

ALMACANTAR. n. f. [An Arabic word, written variously by various authors; by D'Herbeiot, almacantar; by others, almucantar.] A circle drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally used in the plural, and means a series of parallel circles drawn through the several degrees of the meridian.

ALMACANTAR'S STAFF. n. f. An instrument commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees, used to take observations of the sun, about the time of its rising and setting, in order to find the amplitude, and consequently the variation of the compass.

Claudian.

ALMANACK. n. f. [L. al-mad, by some, from the Arabic, al, and mad, Heb. to count, or compute; but others, from al, Arabic, and man, a month, or manazil, the course of the months, by others, from a Teutonic original, al, and man, the moon, an account of every moon, or month: all of them are probable.]

A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the seasons, with the return of feasts and fairs, is noted for the ensuing year.

It will be said, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well: Spain hath not attained this kingdom.

Eic. or.

His astrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inversion of the common prognosticators.

Geoffrey of the Longue.

Beware the woman too, and flun her light,

Who in these studies does herself delight;

By whom a greasy almanack is born,

With often handling like chaff ambers worn.

Dryd.

I'll have a fasting almanack printed on purple for her use.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ALMANDINE. n. f. [Fr. almandine, Ital.] A ruby coarser and higher than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the garnet.

Diad.

ALMIGHTINESS. n. f. [fr. al-mighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It serveth to the world for a witness of his almightiness, whom we outwardly honour with the title of almighty.

Hooker.

In creating and making existent the world universal, by the absolute act of his own word, his power and almightiness.

St. Peter King's.

In the wilderness, the bitter and the fork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his provisions, and receive his power, and feel the force of his almightiness.

Taylor.

ALMIGHTY. adj. [from al and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abram, and said unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.

Genesis.

He wills you in the name of God almighty,

That you divest yourself, and lay apart

The borrow'd glories, that, by guilt of heav'n,

By law of nature and of nations long

To him and to his heirs.

Shakspeare.

ALMOND. n. f. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandus, a word in low Latin; by others, from Amundus, a German; supposing that almonds came to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond-tree, either sweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one.

Levi.

ALMOND TREE. n. f. [amygdalus, Lat.]

It has leaves and flowers very like those of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compressed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the shell is not so rugged.

The species are, 1. The common large almond. 2. The sweet almond, with tender shells. 3. The bitter almond. 4. The white flowering almond.

The three first sorts are chiefly cultivated in England, for the beauty of their flowers; and the first fort yields large quantities of fruit yearly, little inferior to what we receive from abroad, if not kept too long. They are propagated in July, by inoculating a bud into a plum stock, for wet ground, or an almond or peach stock for dry. The fourth is a greater curiosity; it will not succeed on a plum, but must be budded on a peach or almond.

Millard.

Like to an almond tree, you're mounted high

On top of green Selinus, all alone,

With blossoms brave bedecked daintily,

Whose tender locks do tremble every one,

At every little breath that under heav'n is blown.

Fair 2.

Mark well the flowering almond in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.

ALMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly Almonds of the ears; are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces; each of them has a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus of a mucous and slippery slippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating those parts. When the œsophagus muscles act, it compels the almonds, and they frequently are the occasion of a sore throat. Quincy.

The tonsils, or Almonds of the Ears, are also frequently swelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a species of it. Wife's Surgery.

A'LMOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE, called also the Swamp, is a peculiar kind of furnaces used in refining, to separate metals from cinders and other foreign substances. Cochran's.
A'LMONER, or ALMINER n. f. [almonarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other person, employed in the distribution of charity.

Inquired among the Jacobins for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence as the worthiest man. Dryden's Spanish Frier.

A'LMONY. n. f. [from almoner]. The place where the almoner resides, or where the alms are distributed.

A'LMOST. adv. [from all and most]; that is, most part of all. Sinar. Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole, or to universality.

Who is there almost, whose mind, at some time or other, hope or anger, fear or grief, has not fallen to some clog, that it could not turn itself to any other object. Locke.

There can be no such thing or notion, as an almost infinite; there can be nothing next or second to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight,
And almost faints beneath the glowing weight. Addis. Ovid.
ALMS. n. f. [in Saxon, elmyr, from elemosina, Lat.] What is given gratuitously in relief of the poor. It has no singular.

My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my slurrup, bend like his Tha bath received an alms. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The poor beggar hath a just demand of an alm from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injustice and oppression, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

ALMS-BASKET. n. f. [from alms and basket]. The basket in which provisions are put to be given away.

Which sweepings do as well,
As the best order'd meal;
For who the refuse of these guests will fit,
Needs set them but the alm-basket of wit. Pen Tabor.

We'll stand up for our properties, was the beggar's song that feed upon the alm-basket. L'Estrange's Fables.

ALMSDEED. n. f. [from alms and deed]. An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds which be did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard favour'd Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioner for blood thou'rt put'st back. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

ALMS-GIVER. n. f. [from alms and giver]. He that gives alms; he that supports others by his charity.

He built and endowed many religious foundations, besides his memorable hospital of St. Savoy. And yet was he a great alm-giver in secret, which flattered that his works in public were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own. Bos.

ALMS-HOUSE. n. f. [from alms and house]. A house devoted to the reception and support of the poor; an hospital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of alm-houses for the poor, and the forcing out of the people into their several parishes, are manifest unto men of understanding. Hobbes's Preface.

And to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alm-houses right well supplied. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Many centuries, after the robbing of temples, and other violences of rapine, build an hospital, or some alm-house, out of the ruins of the church, and the spoils of widows and orphans. L'Estrange's Fables.

Behold yon alm-houses, neat, but void of state,
Where age and want fit smiling at the gate. Pope.

ALMS-MAN. n. f. [from alms and man]. A man who lives upon alms; who is supported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

A'LMOD TREE. n. f. A tree mentioned in scripture.

Of its wood were made musical instruments, and it was used also in rails, or in a haircase. The Rabbin generally render it oval, others drop, brasil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is translated serapias reseda, and in the Vulgate, Ligno 7byna. But coral could never answer the purposes of the almodym; the pine-tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir; and the thynum, or citron-tree, much esteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almodym, or aluminum, or, simply, gummum, taking al for a kind of article, may be understood oily and gummy sorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is, perhaps, the same with the thium-wood mentioned by Moses. Ce. met.

And the navy also of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir brought in from Ophir great plenty of almody-trees and precious trees. 1 Kings, x. 11.

A'LNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LNAGR. n. f. [from a'lnage]. A measure by the ell; a worn officer, whose business formerly was to inspect the office of woollen cloth, and to fix the seals upon it appointed for that purpose; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the searcher, measurer, and alner. Dict.

A'LNAGE. n. f. [from a'lnage, or alnager, Fr.] Ell-measure, or rather the measuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. f. [from all and night].

There is a service which they call alnicht, which is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the middle; whereby it cometh to pass, that the wick fetcheth the nourishment farther off.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 372.
ALOE. n. f. [from aloin, as it is supposed]. A term applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood used, in the East, for perfumes, of which the best sort is of higher price than gold, and was the most valuable present given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tamboo, and is the heart, or innermost part of the aloe-tree, the next part of which is called Catene; which is sometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferior value to the Tamboo, is much esteemed: the part next the bark is termed, by the Portuguese, Pai d'agua, or eagle-wood; but some account the eagle wood not the outer part of the Tamboo, but another species. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savory.

2. Aloe is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.

The leaves are thick, succulent, and generally beset with spines on the edges; the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulose, and cut into six segments at the top, like the hyacinth; the fruit is oblong and cylindrical, divided into three cells, containing flat, and, for the most part, semicircular seeds.

The species are 30: 1. The common large American aloe. 2. The narrow-leaved aloe, from Vera Cruz. 3. The American aloe, which produces young plants out of the flower stems, &c.

Many of these plants, in English gardens, are natives of the East and West Indies; but the most curious are brought from the Cape of Good Hope.

The first of these aloes is very hardy, and has endured the air in mild winters, in a very dry soil, and under a south wall; but they may be kept in a common greenhouse, giving them very little moisture in winter. The other sorts are preserved in an airy glass-case, with a stove. The aloes are all increased by offsets.

Most of the African species, after the second, third, or fourth year's growth, produce flowers with us annually; but the American aloe flower but once during the life of the plant, producing the flower-stems from the centre of the plant, of a considerable size, and sometimes fifteen feet in height.

A common error, relating to the first species, is, that it never flowers till it be an hundred years old; but experience has proved, that some have flowered in fifty years. Another error is, that, when the flower opens, it makes a report like a gun.

ALOE. n. f. [from aloin]. A medicinal juice extracted not from the odoriferous, but the common aloe-tree, by cutting the leaves and expressing the juice that drops from them to the fun. It is distinguished in a Socotorine and Cabaline, or horse aloe; the first is so called from Socotra; the second, because, being coarser, it ought to be confined to the use of horses. It is a warm and strong cathartic, and used in most purgative compositions.

ALOE-TICAL. adj. [from aloin]. Consisting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited by aloetical, scammoniac, or acrimonious medicines. Wife's Surgery.

ALOE-TICK. n. f. [from aloin]. Any medicine is so called, which chiefly consists of aloes. Quincy.

ALOFT. adv. [inferior, to lift up, Dan. Left air, Icelandic &c.] To that aloft is, into the air. On high; above; in the air: a word used chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in stories oft,
That love has wings, and soars aloft. Suckling.
Upright he stood, and bore aloft his shield,
Conspicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field. Dryd. Fab.

ALOFT. prep. Above. The great luminary

Aloft the vulgar constellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
Dispenfes light from far. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

A'LOOY. n. f. [aloo &c.] Unreasonableness; absurdity. Dict.
A'LOOY. n. f. [aloo, Dutch] from al and ooy, or ooy, that is, single. 1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none but aloo;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine aloo. Dryden, Æneid ii.
God, by whose aloo power and conversation, we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; solitary.
Eagles we see fly aloo, and they are but sheep which always herd together. Sidney, b. i.

Alive, for other creature in this place
Living, or lifeless, to be found was none. Paradise Lost.
I never durst in darkness be alone. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

ALONE, adv.

1. This word is seldom used but with the verb let, if even then it be an adverb, and implies sometimes an ironical prohibition, to help a man who is able to manage the affair himself.

Let us alone to guard Corioli,

If they set down before's; 'fore they remove,

Bring up your army. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Let y u alone, cunning artifice;

See how his gorget peers above his gown,

To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonson's Catil.

2. To let alone; to forbear; to leave unfinished.
His client stole it, but he had better have let it alone; for he lost his cause by the jest. Addison, Spectator.

ALONG, adv. [au long, Fr.]

1. At length.

Some rowl a mighty flogging; some laid along,

And bound with burning wire, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden, Æneid vi.

2. Through any space measured lengthwise.
A firebrand carried along, leaves a train of light behind it. Bacon's Natural History, N° 271.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly land,

Or the black water of Pomptina flands. Dryden, Æneid vii.

3. Throughout; in the whole; with all prefixed.
They were all along a cross, untoward sort of people. S.uth.
Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillemont.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; joined with.
I your commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Hence then! and evil go with thee along,

Thy offspring, to the piece of evil, Hell;

Thou and thy wicked crew! Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

Religious zeal is subject to an excess, and to a defect, when it is mingled with it, which it should not have; or when it wants something that ought to go along with it. Epist.

5. Sometimes with is understood.
Command thy slaves: my free-born soul disdains
A tyrant's curb; and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along; and no dispute shall rise
(Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize. Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from along, French.

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,

Thou master of the poet and the song. Pope.

- ALONGST, adv. [a corruption, as it seems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep strict watch and ward in all their ports thereabout alongst the coast. Kinsley's History of the Turks.

- ALOFF, adv. [ail off, that is, quite off.] At a distance; with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance, such as is within view or observation.

Then bad the knight this lady yede alof,

And to an hill herself withdrew aside,

From whence the might behold the battle's proof,

And else be safe from danger far desir'd. Fairy Queen, b. i.

As next in worth,

Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand,

While the promiscuous croud stood yet alof. Paradise Lost.

The noise approaches, though our palace stood aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood. Dryden.

2. Applied to persons, it often intimates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,

And make the cowards stand alof at bay. Shak. Henry VI.

Going northwards, aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last when they were out of reach, they turned and crost the ocean to Spain. Eaton.

The king would not, by any means, enter the city, until he had aloof seen the cross set upon the greater tower of Granada, wherby it became Christian ground. Bacon's Henry VII.

Two pots flood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay.

The water carried them away; the earthen vessel kept aloof from 't'other. L'Estrange's Fables.

The strong may fight aloof; Aeneas try'd

His force too near, and by presuming dy'd. Dryd. Fables.

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man holds the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be founded;

But with a crafty madness keeps aloof,

When we would bring him on to some confession

Of his true state. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. It is used metaphorically of persons that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary the queen join; for, if she stand aloof, there will be still suspensions: it being a received opinion in the world, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

5. It is applied to things not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love,

When it is mingled with regards that stand aloof from th' enite. Shakespeare's King Lear.

ALOU, adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly; with a strong voice;

with a great noise.

Strangled he lies! yet seems to cry aloud,

To warn the mighty, and instruct the proud;

That of the great, neglecting to be just,

Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of dust. Waller.

Then heav'n's high monarch thus red thrice aloud,

And thrice he shook aloft a golden cloud. Dryden, Æneid vii.

ALOW, adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now also, and now aloft they fly,

As born through air, and seem to touch the sky. Dryden.

ALPHA, n. f. The first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first.

I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, faith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Rev. lat. ev.

ALPHABET, n. f. [from αλφ, alpha, and β, beta, the two first letters of the Greeks.] The order of the letters, or elements of speech.

Thou shalt not fight,

Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,

But I of these will rest an alphabet,

And by still practice learn to know thy meaning. Shakespeare's Tim. Andronicus.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth, and the great variety of syllables composed of letters, and formed with almost equal velocity, and the endless number of words capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more syllables, or of one. Boissier.

Taught by their nurses, little children get

This saying, sooner than their alphabet. Dryd. Jun. T.

ALPHABETIC, v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABETICAL, adj. [from alphabet, noun.] In the series of letters.

I have now by me, digested in an alphabetical order, all the counties, corporations, and boroughs in Great Britain, with their respective tempers. Swift.

ALPHABETICALLY, adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner; according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts to contrive a grammar, more than

I can now compile in short hints; and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the deaf person is to learn. Herder's Elements of Speech.

ALREADY, adv. [from all and ready.] At this present time, or at some time past; opposed to futurity; as, W'at he came from?

He is come already. Will it be done? It is done already.

Touching our uniformity, that which hath been already answered, may serve for answer to that exception. Locke.

You want'd me still of loving too?

Can I love him, already loving you? Dryd. Indian Emp.

See, the guards, from yon far eastern hill

Already move, no longer stay aloof;

High in the air, they wave the flaming sword,

Your signal to depart. Dryden's State of Innocence.

I confine myself to methods for the advancement of piety, which are in the power of a prince limited like ours, by a strict execution of the laws already in force. Swift.

Methinks, already, your tears you say,

Already see you a degraded soul,

And all your honour in a whisper lost! Pope.

ALSO, adv. [also, Dutch.] Also; likewise; a word now out of use.

The golden sun his glittering head can show,

And sad remembrance now the prince assumes

With fresh desire his voyage to pursue;

As Una earn'd her travel to renew. Fairy Queen, b. i.

ALSO, adv. [from all and so.] In the same manner; likewise.

In these two, no doubt, are contained the causes of the great deluge, as, according to Moses, so also according to necessity;

for our world affords no other treasures of water. Burnet's Theat.

2. Also is sometimes nearly the same with and, but only conjunct the member, of the sentence.

Gud do so to me, and more also. 1 Samuel, xiv. 44.

ALTAR, n. f. [altare, Lat.] It is observed by Janus, that the word altar is received, with Christianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is used by one of the fathers, as appropriated to the Christian worship, in opposition to the ara

of gentilsim.]

1. The place where offerings to heaven are laid.

The gods of the nuptial bed,

Tir'd with her vain devotions for the dead,

Resolv'd the tainted hand should be repell'd,

Which incense offer'd, and her altar held. Dryd. Tab.

2. The table in Christian churches where the communion is administered.

Her grace rose, and, with modest paces,
Came to the altar, where the kneel'd, and, faintlike,
Cath her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.

Shakspeare.

ALTARAGE, n. f. [altarium, Lat.] An emolument arising to the priest from oblations, through the means of the altar.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTAR-CLOTH, n. f. [from altar and cloth.] The cloth thrown over the altar in churches.

I should set down the wealth, books, hangings, and altar-dish, which our kings gave this abbey.

Peachment.

TO ALTER v. a. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat.]

1. To change; to make otherwife than it is. To alter, seems more properly to imply a change made only in some part of a thing; as, to alter a writing, may be, to blot or interpolate it; to change it, may be, to substitute another in its place.

Do you note

How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?

How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,

And of an earthy cold?

Shakspeare.

Act appropriated to the worship of God by his own appointment, must continue fix'd, till himself hath otherwise declared: for who dares alter what God hath appointed?

Stillin'fleet.

2. To take off from a perfection or set.

For the way of writing plays in verse, I find it troublesome and slow; but I am no way alter'd from my opinion of it, at least with any reasons which have oppos'd it.

Dryden.

TO ALTER v. n. To become otherwise than it was; as, the weather alters from bright to cloudy.

ALTERABLE, adj. [from alter; alterable, Fr.] That which may be altered or changed by something else; distinct from changeable, or that which changes, or may change itself.

That alterable respects are realities in nature, will never be admitted by a considerate discernor.

Glennville.

Our condition is this world in mutable and uncertain, a ternity by a thousand accidents, which we can neither foresee nor prevent.

Ryert.

I wish they had been more clear in their directions to him upon that mighty point, Whether the settlement of the succession in the House of Hanover be alterable or no?

Swift.

ALTERABLENESS, n. f. [from alterable.] The quality of being alterable, or admitting change from external causes.

ALTERABLE, adj. [from alterable.] In such a manner as may be altered.

ALTERANT, adj. [alterant, Fr.] That which has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, evermore a perception precedeth operation; for else all bodies would be alike one to another.

Bacon.

ALTERATION, n. f. [from alter; alteration, Fr.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from worse to better, hath in its inconveniences and those weighty.

Hesler.

2. The change made.

Why may we not presume, that God doth even call for such change or alteration, as the very condition of things themselves doth make necessary.

Hesler.

So he, with difficulty and labour hard,

Slav'd on:

But he once past, soon after, when man fell,

Strange alterations! Sin, and death, amain

Following his track (such was the will of heav'n!)

Put'd after him a broad and beaten way.

Milton.

No other alteration will fastify; nor this neither, very long, without an utter abolition of all order.

South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the senate the sons of those who had been slaves; by which, and succeeding alterations, that council degenerated into a most corrupt body.

Swift.

ALTERATIVE, adj. [from alter.]

Medicines called alterative, are such as have no immediate sensible operation, but gradually gain upon the constitution, by changing the humours from a state of dilemperature to health. They are oppos'd to evacuants.

Quinn.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by such alterative medicines as purify the blood.

Governor of the Tower.

ALTERATION, n. f. [alteration, Fr. from alterer, Lat.] Debate; controversy; wrangle.

By this hot pursuit of lower controversies amongst men professing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themselves, time will cause alteration to grow.

Hesler.

Their whole life was, in a manner, little else than a perpetual wrangling and alteration; and that, many times, rather for victory and ostentation of wit, than a sober and serious search of truth.

Hesler.

ALTERN, adj. [alterner, Lat.] Acting by turns, in succession each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their use

To man; the greater to have rule by day,

The less by night, altern.

Milton.

No VI.

ALTERNACY, n. f. [from alternate.] Action performed by turns.

ALTERNATE, adj. [alternus, Lat.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

Friendship confideth properly in mutual office, and a generous strife in alternate acts of kindness.

South.

Hear how I'mother's various lays surpris'd,

And bid alternate passions fall and rise!

While, at each change, the son of Lybian Jove

Now burns with glory, and then melts with love.

Pope.

ALTERNATE ANGLES. [In geometry.] Are the internal angles made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on the opposite sides of the cutting line; the one below the first parallel, and the other above the second.

ALTERNATE RATIO, or PROPORTION, is where the antecedent of one is to its consequent, as the antecedent of another to its consequent; the very same ratio, in this case, holding alternately in respect of the antecedents to each other, and the consequents to each other.

Chambers.

ALTERNATE, n. f. [from alternate, adj.] That which happens alternately; vicissitude.

And rais'd in pleasure, or repos'd in ease,

Grateful alternates of substantial peace,

On the crown'd gobbet, and the genial bed

Prior.

TO ALTERNATE, v. a. [alternare, Lat.]

1. To perform alternately.

Those who, in their course,

Melodious hymns about the iv'ry throne

Alternate all night long.

Milton.

2. To change one thing for another reciprocally.

The most high God, in all things appertaining unto this life, for sundry wise ends, alternates the disposition of good and evil.

Greus.

ALTERNATELY, adv. [from alternate.] In reciprocal succession, so that each shall be succeeded by that which it succeeds, as, light follows darkness, and darkness follows light.

'Tis the princely Melinda, bath'd in tears,

And toid's alternately with hopes and fears,

Would learn from you the fortunes of her lord.

Unhappy man! whose sorrow thus and rage

To different ills alternately engage.

Prior.

The rays of light are, by some cause or other, alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes.

Newton.

ALTERNATENESS, n. f. [from alternate.] The quality of being alternate, or of happening in reciprocal succession.

Diff.

ALTERNATION, n. f. [from alternate.] The reciprocal succession of things.

The one would be oppress'd with constant heat, the other with insufferable cold; and so the defect of alternation would utterly impugn the generation of all things.

Fulger Errours.

ALTERNATIVE, n. f. [alternativ, Fr.] The choice given of two things; so that if one be rejected, the other must be taken.

A strange alternative—

Must ladies have a doctor, or a dance?

Young.

ALTERNATIVELY, adv. [from alternative.] In alternate manner; by turns; reciprocally.

An appeal alternatively made may be tolerated by the civil law as valid.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTERNATIVENESS, n. f. [from alternative.] The quality or state of being alternative; reciprocation.

Dict.

ALTERNITY, n. f. [from altern.] Reciprocal succession; vicissitude; turn; change of one thing for another; reciprocally.

They imagine, that an animal of the vastest dimensions, and longest duration, should live in a continual motion, without the alternity and vicissitude of rest, whereby all other animals continue.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALTHOUGH, conj. [from alth and though. See THOUGH.] Notwithstanding; however it may be granted; however it may be that.

We all know, that many things are believed, although they are intricate, obscure, and dark; although they exceed the reach and capacity of our wits; yet, although in this world they be no way possible to be understood.

Hesler.

Alas the gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive

The sooner to reject what I intended.

The streets must be laid upon a majority; without which the laws would be of little weight, although they be good additional securities.

Swift.

ALTRGRADE, adj. [from alius and gradus, Lat.] Rising on high.

Dict.

ALTRGRADE, n. f. [altus and loquor, Lat.] High speech; pompous language.

ALTIMETRY, n. f. [altimetria, Lat. from alius and m. [to].] The art of taking or measuring altitudes or heights, whether accessible, or inaccessible, generally performed by a quadrant.

ALTRISANT, adj. [altisimus, Lat.] High; lofty; dignified; pompous.

Dict.

ALTRISANT, adj. [altisimus, Lat.] High; lofty; dignified; pompous.

ALTITUDE, n. f. [altitudo, Lat.]

1. Height of place; space measured upward.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shakespeare.
Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles; others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.
She shines above, we know, but in what place,
How near the throne, and heav'n's imperial face,
By our weak optics is but vainly guess'd;
Distance and altitude conceal the rest. Dryden.

2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon. Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much considerable, whether we consider its ascent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon. Pulgar Errours.

Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he observe them and their influences in their several situations, in their oppositions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depressions? Rymer.

3. Situation with regard to lower things. Those members which are pairs, stand by one another in equal altitude, and answer on each side one to another. Ray.

4. Height of excellence; superiority. Your altitude offends the eyes
Of those who want the power to rise.
The world, a willing flander-by,
Inclines to aid a specious lye. Suiff.

5. Height of degree; highest point. He did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. Shakespeare.
ALTYVOLANT, adj. [altivolans, Lat. from altus and volans.] High flying. Dict.

ALTOGETHER, adv. [from all and together.] 1. Completely; without restriction; without exception. It is in vain to speak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till they be altogether subdued. Spenser.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to suffer for his conscience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as absurd to imagine a man obliged to suffer, as to do impossibilities. South.

I do not altogether disapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Suiff.
2. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoist duke Humphry from his feat. Shakespeare.

ALUDEL, n. f. [from al and lutum; that is, without lute.] Aludels are subliming pots used in chemistry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occasion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be sublimed; and, at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that rise up. Quincy.

ALUM, n. f. [alumen, Lat.] A kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste, leaving in the mouth a sense of sweetness, accompanied with a considerable degree of astringency. The ancient naturalists allow of two sorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the island of Milo, being a kind of whitish stone, very light, friable, and porous, and streaked with filaments resembling fiber. The factitious alum is prepared in different manners, according to the different materials of which it is made. Hence arise red, Roman, and citron alum; also plumose, saccharine, and burnt alum. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the English rasbe-alum is made from a bluish mineral stone, frequent in the hills of Yorkshire and Lancashire. Alum is used in medicine as an absorbent, but being apt to excite vomiting, it is seldom prescribed inwardly. It is used outwardly in astringent lotions, and is an ingredient in several dentifrices and cosmetics. It is a principal ingredient in dying and colouring; neither of which can be well performed without it. It serves to bind the colour upon the stuffs, and has the same uses there, that gum water and glutinous oils have in painting. It also disposes stuffs to take the colour, and adds a degree of briskness and delicacy to it. This effect of alum seems to proceed from its styptic or astringent quality, by which it binds the finer parts of colours together, and prevents their exhaling. Hence also it preserves paper, that has been dipped in its water, from sinking when wrote upon.

Saccharine alum bears a near resemblance to sugar, and is a composition of common alum, with rose-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the consistence of a paste, and thus moulded at pleasure. As it cools, it grows hard as a stone, and is used as a cosmetic.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire, and thus rendered whiter, more light, and more easily pulverized.

Plumose or plum alum is a sort of saline mineral stone, of various colours, most commonly white, bordering on green, resembling Venetian tale, except that, instead of scales, it rises in threads or fibres, resembling those of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Some will have this to be the lapis amianthus of the ancients. Glabbe.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the most part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE, n. f. A stone or calc' used in surgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corrosive.

She gargled with oxyerate, and was in few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum stones. Wise.

ALUMINOUS, adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or consisting of alum.

Not do we reasonably conclude, because, by a cold and aluminous moisture, it is able a while to resist the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it subsisteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mature with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wise.

ALWAYS, adv. [It is sometimes written alway, compounded of all and way; callegreza, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time; opposed to sometimes, or to never.

That, which sometime is expedient, doth not always continue. Hor.

Man never is, but always to be blest. Pope.

2. Constantly; without variation; opposed to sometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him. Dryden.

A. M. Stands for artium magister, or master of arts; the second degree of our universities, which, in some foreign countries, is called doctor of philosophy.

AM. The first person of the verb to be. [See TO BE.]

And God said unto Moses, I am that I am; and he said, thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my soul: I call thee by that name, Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am:

For knowing what I am, I know thou art; Since that must needs exist, which can impart. Prior.

AMABILITY, n. f. [from amabilis, Lat.] Loveliness; the power of pleasing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehensions make that; and so is our felicity. Taylor.

AMIDETTO, n. f. A sort of pear [See PEAR.] so called, says Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

AMIDOT, n. f. A sort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMAIN, adv. [from main, or maign, old Fr. derived from magnum, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is used of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakespeare.

What! when we fled amain, pursued, and struck
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us. Milton.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and sprung amain,
Like lightning sudden, on the warious train,
Heats down the trees before him, shakes the ground;

The forest echoes to the crackling sound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around. Dry.

AMALGAM, n. f. [amalgama, Gr.] A mixture of metallic amalgam; also procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture resulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

AMALGAMATE, v. a. [from amalgama.]

To unite metals with quicksilver, which may be practised upon all metals, except iron and copper. The use of this operation is, to make the metal soft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMATION, n. f. [from amalgama.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the rest are answerable: Take six parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible; stir the well that they may incorporate; then call the mass into cold water, and wash it. Boyle.

AMANDATION, n. f. [from amandare, Lat.] The act of sending on a message, or employment.

AMANDUSIS, n. f. [Lat.] A person who writes what another dictates.

AMARANTH, n. f. [amaranthus, Lat. from a and μαρανν] The name of a plant.

The flowers have no petals; the cup of the flower is dry and moist; the seeds are included in membranaceous vessels, which, when come to maturity, burst open transversely or horizontally, like purslane, each of which contains one or more round seeds.

Among the many species, the most beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous amaranth, with reddish coloured seeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding. All these plants must be sown on a good hot bed in February, or the beginning gining of March. They produce large beautiful flowers, and perfect their seed in September. Millar.

2. In poetry, it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
In paradise, fall by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, flouting the fount of life;
And where the river of bliss, thro' mid of heav'n,
Rowls o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream:
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their refulgent locks, in wreath'd with beams.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranth; consisting of *amaranth*s.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flow'rs,
By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of Alphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs.

Pope.

AMARITUDE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is deepened in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malignant bodies. Harvey.

AMARULENCE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. Diict.

AMASMENT. n. f. [from amas.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now in the subject, is but an amasment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and influence impulses. Gloverille.

AMASS. v. a. [amasso, Fr.]

1. To collect together into one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amass riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice. Atterbury.

When we would think of infinite space, or duration, we, at first step, usually make some very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which possibly we double and multiply several times. All that we thus amass together in our thoughts, is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration. Lact.

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscriminate.

Such as amass all relations, must err in some, and be unbelieved in many. Bruen's Vulgar Errors.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest your improvements only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases.

Patti's Improvement of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a story of him to the world. Pope.

AMASS. v. n. [from a and mase. See MATE.]

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obsolete.

A lovely bery of fair ladies fate,
Counted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them immodest way amass,
And each one fought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

2. To terrify; to strike with horror. In this sense, it is derived from the old French, mater, to crush or subdue.

ANATOCULIST. n. f. [anatorculis, Lat.] A little insignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Diict.

AMATORY. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; causing love.

It is the same thing whether one ravish Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions, not only allure her, but necessitate her to satisfy his lust, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably to follow him spontaneously. Bramhall against Hobbes.

AMAURO'SIS. n. f. [amaurosis.] A dimness of sight, not from any visible defect in the eye, but from some disfigurement of the inner parts, occasioning the representations of things and dust floating before the eyes; which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and concealed by the blood-vessels being too much enlarged; so that, in many of its parts, all sense is lost; and therefore no images can be painted upon them, whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling successively upon them, are obscure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the stagnations in the extremities of those arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

AMAZE. v. a. [from a and mase, perplexity.]

1. To confound with terror.

Yes, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid of thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them, and they shall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezek.

2. To put into confusion with wonder.

Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakespeare.

AMAZE. n. f. [from the verb amaze.] Astonishment; confusion; either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amazement,
And rumours loud. Milton.

Mention the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage thro' the curling sea,
Then calling back his eyes with dice amazement,
Sees, on the Punick shore, the mounting blaze. Dryden.

AMAZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confusively; with amazement; with confusion.

I speak amazingly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my mediæ. Shakespeare.

Why
Stands Macbeth thus amazingly?
Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits. Macbeth.

AMAZEDNESS. n. f. [from amazed.] The state of being amazed; astonishment; wonder; confusion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all amazed out of the chamber. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

AMAZEMENT. n. f. [from amazed.]

1. Such a confused apprehension as does not leave reason its full force; extreme fear; horror.

He answer'd nought at all; but adding new Fear to his first amazement, flaring wide
With stony eyes, and heartless hollow hue,
Astonish'd flood, as one that had spy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother fits;
O step between her and her fighting foul:
Concise in weakest bodies strongest souls. Shakespeare.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impression left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Distracted and surpris'd with deep dismay
At their sad tidings. Milton.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we should read your story;
But living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy still to grapple with at last. Waller.

4. Astonishment; wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which far aims at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Ag.

AMAZING. participle adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; astonishing.

It is indeed an amazing thing to see the present desolation of Italy, when one considers what incredible multitudes of people it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperors. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

AMAZINGLY. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite astonishment; wonderfully.

If we ascribe to the world of spirits, our knowledge of them must be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the least grain of sand but has too many difficulties belonging to it, for the wisest philosopher to answer. Watts.

AMAZON. n. f. [a and ma.] The amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucasus; they are so called from their cutting off their breasts, to use their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword. Shakespeare.

AMBIGES. n. f. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of speech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expression.

They gave those complex ideas names, they they might the more easily record and discourse of things that were daily conversant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things, they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious.

AMBA'SSADOR. n. f. [ambassade, Fr.] Embassy; character or business of an ambassador; a word not now in use.

When you disgraced me in my ambassage,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakespeare.

AMBA'SSADOR. n. f. [ambassador, Fr. embaxador, Span.]

It is written differently, as it is supposed to come from the French or Spanish languages; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not easy to settle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew אמבש to tell, and אמבש a messenger; others from ambas, which, in the old Gaulish, signified a servant; whence ambasia, in low Latin, is found to signify service, and ambasciator, a servant; others deduce it from ambas, in old Teutonic, Teutonick, signifying a government, and Junius mentions a possibility of its descent from ambascior, and others from am for ad, and bas, low, as supposing the act of sending an ambassador, to be in some sort an act of subjection. All these derivations lead to write ambasciador, not ambassadour.] A person sent in a public manner from one sovereign power to another, and supposed to represent the power from which he is sent. The person of an ambassador is inviolable.

Ambasciador is, in popular language, the general name of a messenger from a sovereign power, and sometimes, ludicrously, from common persons. In the juridical and formal language, it signifies particularly a minister of the highest rank residing in another country, and is distinguished from an envoy, who is of less dignity.

Give first admittance to th' ambasciadours. Shakspeare.

Kais'd by these hopes, I sent no news before,

Nor ask'd you leave, nor did your faith implore;

But come, without a pledge, my own ambasciador. Dryden.

Oh have their black ambasciadours appear'd

Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama. Addison.

AMBASSADOR. n. f. [ambasciador, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambassador.

2. In ludicrous language, a woman sent on a message.

Well, my ambasciador—

Come you to appease war, and loud defiance?

Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rosv.

A'MBASSAGE. n. f. [from ambasciador.] An embassy; the business of an ambassador.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory answers; so as the formal part of their ambassage might well warrant their further stay. Bacon.

A'MBER. n. f. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers summed ambar—um.]

A yellow transparent substance of a gummy or bituminous consistence, but refinous taste, and a smell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltic sea, along the coasts of Prussia. Some naturalists refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and some even to the animal kingdom. Pliny describes it as a refinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and discharged thence into the sea; where, undergoing some alteration, it is thrown, in this form, upon the shores of Prussia, which lie very low. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of succinum, from succus, juice. This opinion of the ancient naturalist is confirmed by the observation of many of the moderns, particularly Father Camelli. Philof. Tranf. act.

Nº 290. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beast; others, the fume of the lake

Cephissus, near the Atlantic; others, a congelation formed in the Baltic, and in some fountains, where it is found swimming like pitch. Others suppose it a bitumen trickling into the sea from subterraneous sources; but this opinion is also discarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a considerable distance from the sea, as that gathered on the coast. Boerhaave rank it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatic plants, elaborated by heat into a crystalline form. Amber al-lumes all figures in the ground; that of a pear, an almond, a pear, and among others, there have been found letters very well formed, and even Hebrew and Arabic characters. Within some pieces of amber have been found leaves, and insects included, which seems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid state, or, that having been exposed to the sun, it was softened, and rendered susceptible of the leaves and insects. Am- ter, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiously in the dark. Some distinguish amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are supposed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. The white is most valued for medicinal uses, and the yellow for being wrought into beads and toys, because of its transparency. Trév. Clench.

Liquid amber, is a kind of native balm or resin, like turpentine; clear, reddish, or yellowish; of a pleasant smell, almost like ambergris. It flows from an incision made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives ajofol; but it hardens, as it grows older, into a solid form, and is brought to us in barrels. It is reputed an excellent balsam. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glass, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacock.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,

To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;

But poplar wreaths around his temples spread,

And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addison.

The spoils of elephants the rooks inclay,

And fluted amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER. adj. Consisting of amber.

With tears, and fans, and double charge of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMBER DRINK. n. f. Drink of the colour of amber, or resembling amber in colour and transparency. Bacon.

All your clear amber drink is flat.

A'MBERGRIS. n. f. [from ambar and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almost like wax, commonly of a greyish or ash colour, used both as a perfume and a cordial. It is found on the sea coasts of several warm countries, and on the western coasts of Ireland. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the sun, and washed off the shore by the waves, is swallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fish, because sometimes found in the intestines of such animals. But we have no instance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it should rather be found where these animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which distills from trees, and drops into the sea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it springs out of the sea, as naphtha does out of some fountains.

Others suppose it a sea malthousm, torn up from the bottom by the violence of tempests. Others assert it to be a vegetable production, issuing out of the root of a tree, whose roots always shoot toward the sea, and discharge themselves into it.

Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the sea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their nests; several persons having seen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honeycomb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Some affirm it to be a true animal concrete, formed into balls in the body of the male spermacti whale, and lodged in a large oval bag over the testicles. But, besides that it is not one spermacti whale in a hundred, that is found to have ambergris, Neumann, chemist to the king of Prussia, absolutely denies it to be an animal substance, as not yielding in the analysis, any one animal principle.

It may indeed be found in whales, but it must have been swallowed by them. He concludes it to be a bitumen issuing out of the earth into the sea; at first of a viscid consistence, but hardening, by its mixture with some liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know

That happy island, where huge lemons grow,

Where shining pearl, coral, and many a pound,

On the rich shore, of ambergris is found. Waller.

AMBER SEED, or musk seed, resembles millet, is of a bitterish taste, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. The Egyptians use it internally as a cordial. It gives a grateful scent to the breath after eating. Chambers.

AMBER TREE. n. f. [frutex Africanus ambram spirans.] A shrub whose beauty is in its small evergreen leaves, which grow as close as heath, and, being bruised between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Müller.

AMBIDEXTER. n. f. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the use of both his hands.

Rhodiginus, undertaking to give a reason of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Bruun's Vul. Err.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either side, in party disputes.

This sense is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTERITY. n. f. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to use both hands.

2. Double dealing.

AMBIDEXTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Double dealing; practising on both sides.

Esop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all falsk, shuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Estrange.

2. Having, with equal facility, the use of either hand.

Others, not considering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally submit unto the efficacy of the liver. Vulgar Err.

AMBIDEXTROUSNESS. n. f. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Did.

A'MBIENT. adj. [ambient, Lat.] Surrounding; encompassing; involving.

This which yields or fills

All space, the ambient air wide-interfused. Milton.

The thickness of a plate requisite to produce any colour, depends only on the density of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,

And damasking the ground with flow'rs,

With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Penton to L. Gower.

Illustrious virtues, who by turns have rose,

With happy laws her empire to sustain,

And with full pow'r assert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley.

A'MBIGU. n. f. [French.] An entertainment, consisting not of regular courts, but of a medley of dishes set out together.

When first I'd in your time, and servants few,

You'd richly then compose an ambigu;

Where first and second course, and your desert,

All in our single table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGUITY. n. f. [from ambiguus.] Doubtfulness of meaning; uncertainty of signification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themselves, not marking what both agree to the word of God in itself, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker.

We can clear these ambiguities,

And know their springs, their head, their true descent.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The words are of single signification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I shall not trouble you, by straining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or distinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain signification.

But what's having two meanings, what but dark,

Ambiguus, and with doubtful sense deluding. Par. Reg.

Some expressions in the covenant were ambiguus, and were left so; because the persons who framed them, were not all of one mind. Clarke.

2. Applied to persons using doubtful expressions. It is applied to expressions, or those that use them, not to a dubious, or suspended state of mind.

Th' ambiguus god, who rul'd her lab'ring breast,

In these mysterious words his mind express;

Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest.

Silence at length the gay Ambrosius broke,

Constrain'd a smile, and thus ambiguus spoke. Pope's Ode.

AMBIGUOUSLY. adv. [ambiguus, Lat.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBIGUOUSNESS. n. f. [ambiguus, Lat.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of signification.

AMBIGUOUSLY. n. f. [from ambis, Lat. and logos, Lat.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful signification. Dict.

AMBIGUOUSLY. adj. [from ambis and loquor, Lat.] Using ambiguous and doubtful expressions. Dict.

AMBIGUOUSLY. n. f. [ambiguus, Lat.] The use of doubtful and indeterminate expressions; discourse of doubtful meaning. D.

AMBIGUOUS. n. f. [ambiguus, Lat.] The compass or circuit of any thing; the line that encompasses any thing.

The talk of a wild bur winds about almost into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little written. In measuring by the ambis, it is longer or round about a foot and two inches; its basis an inch over. Greav's Measure.

AMBITION. n. f. [ambitus, Lat.] The desire of something higher than is possessed at present.

1. The desire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having such a mind as Antiphras, that so great goodness could not have bound gratefulness? and so high a advancement not have satisfied his ambition? Sid.

2. The desire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and so would rest;

The sense would not be only, but be well;

But wit's ambition lengthen to the bell,

For it desires in endless bliss to dwell. Davies.

Urgeth them, while their souls

Are capable of this ambition;

Left zeal, now melted by the windy breath

Of false petitions, play and remorse,

God and conceal again to what it was. Shakespeare.

3. It is used with before as a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambitions to recommend myself to your Lordship's patronage. Addison.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affection of gaiety.

Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBITIOUS. adj. [ambitiosus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; desirous of advancement; eager of honours; aspiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition.

The neigh'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,

Content in crowds, ambitious of thy bed;

The world is at thy choice; except but one,

Except but him thou canst not choose alone. Dryd. Fab.

You have been pleased not to suffer an old man to go discontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been so long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, descended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, seeing a vessel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of out-doing Alexander. Abraham on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aspiring.

Th' ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,

To be cask'd with the threatening clouds. Shakespeare.

AMBITIOUSLY. adv. [ambitiosus, Lat.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerness of advancement or preference.

With such glad hearts did our despairing men

Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;

And each ambitiously would claim the ken,

That with swift eyes did distant safety meet. Dryd.

Herc Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,

Ambitiously design'd his sh—'s throne. Dryd.

AMBITIOUSNESS. n. f. [ambitiosus, Lat.] The quality of being ambitious.

Nº. VI.

AMBITUDE. n. f. [ambitus, Lat.] Compass; circuit; circumference.

TO AMBLE. v. n. [ambulo, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. [See AMBLE.]

It is good, on some occasions, to enjoy as much of the present, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourselves of the virtuoso's fiddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.

2. To move easily, without hard shocks, or shaking.

Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, because he feels no pain; knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury: 'Tis time ambles withal. Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. In a ludicrous sense, to move with feigning, and by dissimulation; as, a horse that ambles, uses a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, w'insinpering flie, Shall make him amble on a gossip's intelligence.

And take the distaff with a hand as patient, As ere did Hercules. Rever's Jane Shore.

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely flamm'd, and want love's majesty, To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakespeare.

AMBLE. n. f. [from to amble.] A pace or movement in which the horse removes both his legs on one side; as, on the far side, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the same side at one time, whilst the legs on the near side stand still; and when the far legs are upon the ground, the near side removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far side stand still: An amble is the first pace of young colts, but when they have strength to trot they quit it. There is no amble in the manege; riding-masters allow only of a walk, trot, and gallop. A horse may be put from a trot to a gallop without stopping; but cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a stop, which interrupts the justness of the manege. Farrier's D.D.

AMBLER. n. f. [from to amble.] A horse that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

AMBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBAOSIA. n. f. [ambrosia.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleasing to the smell or taste, is called ambrosia.

2. The name of a plant.

It has male stamens flowers produced on separate parts of the same plant from the fruit, having no visible petals; the fruit which succeeds the female flowers, is shaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong seed in each.

The species are, 1. The marine or sea ambrosia. 2. Taller unfavourable sea ambrosia. 3. The tallest Canada ambrosia, with rough plane tree leaves. The first sort should be sown early in the spring, under a warm wall. The second and third are common American weeds, which should be sown upon a gentle bed in the spring. None of them have much beauty to recommend them. Milner.

AMBROSIAL. adj. [from ambrosia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambrosia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance fill'd

All heaven, and in the blissed spirits elc

Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.

The gifts of Heaven my following long pursues,

Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews. Dryden.

To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies,

Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies. Pope.

AMBRV. n. f. [a word corrupted from alms.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are distributed.

2. The place where plate and utensils for housekeeping are kept; also a cupboard for keeping cold victuals; a word still used in the northern countries, and in Scotland.

AMBRACE. n. f. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; so called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambrace for my life. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by considering his own influence of casting ambrace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Supposing the posture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves, supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Bramb. against Hobbes.

AMBULATION. n. f. [ambulationis, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and invisible motion of the muscles in fraction, proceed more offensive lassitudes, than from ambulation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

AMBULATORY. adj. [ambula, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are such as require some basis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: such were those strange invention, commonly attributed to Dædalus, or self-moving statues, which, unless violently detained, would of themselves run away. Wilkins's Mathematick Magick.

T 2. That

2. That which happens during a passage or walk.
He was sent to conduct hither the prince's Henrietta Maria, of whom his majesty had an ambulatory view in his travels.

Wotton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exercise of its jurisdiction.
A'MBURY. n. f. A bloody wart on any part of a horse's body.
AMBUSCA'DE. n. f. [ambuscade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private station in which men lie to surprise others; ambush.

Then waving high her torch, the signal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuscade. Dryden.
When I behold a fashionable table set out, I fancy that gout, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable dilemperers, lie in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison.

- AMBUSCA'DO. n. f. [ambuscada, Span.] A private post, in order to surprise an enemy.

Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscades, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.
A'MBUSH. n. f. [ambush, Fr. from avis a wood; whence em-buscher, to hide in woods, ambushes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick forests.]

1. The post where soldiers or assassins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxallans yield,
Bold in close ambush, bafe in open field.

Dryden's Indian Emperor.

2. The act of surprising another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a secret post.

Nor shall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
Or ambush from the deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. The state of being posted privately, in order to surprise; the state of lying in wait.

The residue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambush, whence issued more. Then the earl gathered his small company about him, and maintained the fight. But the enemy, whether perceiving some succours advancing, or whether intending to draw the English further into their ambush, turned away at an easy pace. Hayward.

4. Perhaps the persons placed in private stations.
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,

Once did I lay an ambush for your life. Shakspeare's Richard II.
A'MBUSH'D. adj. [from ambush]. Placed in ambush; lying in wait.

Thick as the shades, there issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
We to Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
AMBUSHMENT. n. f. [from ambush; which see.] Ambush;
surprise: a word now not used.

Like as a wily fox, that having spied
Where on a sunny bank the lambs do play,
Full closely creeping by the hinder side,
Lies in ambushment of his hoped prey. Spenser's Pastorals.

- AMBU'ST, adj. [ambustus, Lat.] Burnt; scalded. Dict.
AMBU'SION. n. f. [ambustio, Lat.] A burn; a scald.

- AMEL. n. f. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call emailled.

The materials of glass melted with calcined tin, compose an undephonous body. This white amel is the basis of all those fine co. cretes that goldsmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Bayle on Culw.

- AMEN. adv. [A word of which the original has given rise to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabic; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, signifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word seems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, signifies firmness, certainty, fidelity.] A term used in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean so be it, at the end of a creed, so be it.

One cried, God bless us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,

Lifting their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting and to everlasting. Amen and amen. Psa xli. 11.
AME'NABLE. adj. [amenable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, signifies, to oblige one to appear to answer a charge exhibited against him.] Responsible; subject in as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, because the inferior sort were loose and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the best and eldest persons of every peep, should bring in all the idle persons of their surname, to be justified by the law.

Sir John Davies on Ice and.

- AMENANCE. n. f. [It seems to come from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien; a word disused.

For he is fit to use in all affairs.
Whether for arms and warfare amenance,
Or else for wife and civil governance. Spenser's Hab. Tale.

Well kensd him to far space,

Th' enchanters by his arms an amenance,
When under him he saw his Libyan queen to prance.

Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. vi.

- To AME'ND. v. a. [amender, Fr. amenda, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to something better.

2. To reform the life, or leave wickedness. In these two cases we usually write mend. See MEND.

Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 5.

3. To retrace passages in writers which the copiers are supposed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve supposes, or not denies, that the thing is well already, but to amend implies something wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

AME'NDE. n. f. [French.] This word in French, signifies a fine, by which recompense is supposed to be made for the fault committed. We use in a cognate signification, the word amends.

- AMENDMENT. n. f. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was presented on the stage, some things in it have passed your approbation and amendment. Dryden's Aureng. Pref.
Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature observes the same tenour, because her works are so perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be re-hended. Roy on the Creative.

There are many natural defects in the understanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the testimony which Moses and the prophets have given, concerning the mi-series that follow sinners after death, were not likely to be persuaded by other means, although God from the dead should have raised them up preachers. Heber.

Behold I famine and plague, tribulation and anguish, are sent as scourges for amendment. Ekdal.

Though a serious purpose of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no sure judgment whether this purpose be serious, or these acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Cat. ch. 10.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honours players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shakspeare's Tam. Shrew.

AMENDMENT. [emendatio, Lat.] It signifies, in law, the correction of an error committed in a process, and espied before or after judgment; and sometimes alter the party's seeking advantage by the error. Baunt.

- AME'NDER. n. f. [from amend] The person that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. f. [amende, Fr. from which it seems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompense; compensation; atonement.

If I have too austere punished you,
Your compensation makes amends. Shakspeare's Temp. 1.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to those that had suffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Sir Walter Raleigh's Efforts.

Where I a pris'n'r chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,

Unw' welcome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heaven fresh blowing pure and sweet,

With day-spring born; here leave me to repose.

Milton's Samp. in Agonist.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I make the world some part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroic poem. Dryden's Aureng. Pref.

If our souls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compensation for the frailties of life, and sufferings of this state. Tillotson.

It is a strong argument for retribution hereafter, that vir-tuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wise and good in all his works; unless we may suppose that such a promiscuous distribution, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spenser's Tale.

- AME'NTY. n. f. [amintu, Fr. amintu, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness of situation.

If the situation of Babylon was such at first, as it was in the days of Herodotus, it was rather a seat of amintu and pleasure, than conducting unto this intention. Brown's Fugate.

To AMERCE. v. a. [amercer, Fr. amercer, Lat.] To punish with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to induce.

for a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers.

But I'll amercy you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.

Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

All the huitors were considerably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for their mischiefs. Hale.

Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They shall amerc him in an hundred shuckels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel. Levit.

Sometimes it is used, in imitation of the Greek construction, with the particle of.

Millions of spirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal splendours flung.

For his revolt. Milton.

AMERCEUR, n. f. [from amercer.] He that sets a fine upon any misdemeanour; or he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary punishment or forfeiture.

AMERCEMENT, s. n. f. [from amercer.] The pecuniary punishment or fine. AMERCIAMENT, s. m. of an offender, who stands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that shall be imposed upon them, shall come unto themselves. Spenjer.

AMES, ac. n. f. [a corruption of the word ambis ac, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early softened by omitting the i.] Two axes on two dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,

And dextrously to throw the lucky dice:

To flun ames ac, that sweep my flakes away;

And watch the box, for fear they should convey

False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

AMEIS, n. f. [corrupted from amice.] A priest's vestment. Ditt.

AMETHOLOGICAL, adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

AMETHYST, n. f. amethyst, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenness; so called, either because it is not quite of the colour of wine, or because it was imagined to prevent inclination.

A precious stone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyst is the hardest, scarcest, and most valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though some are purple, and others white like the diamond. The german is of a violet colour, and the Spanish are of three sorts; the best are the blackest or deepest violet; others are almost quite white, and some few tinged with yellow. They are found in a hill named St. Segimon, in Catalonia, by following the vein of reddish or black earth, or a vein in a rock of coloured, and are all hexagonal, and pointed like crystal. Sometimes a great number is found sticking together, like the Britol diamonds; but the best are found loose in the chinks of the rock. Beautiful ones are also found in the Pyreneans, and in the mountains of Auvergne. The amethyst is not extremely hard, but easy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers.

I observed some stones that nearly approached the garnet complexion; and several very nearly resembling the amethyst.

Woodward on Fossils.

AMETHYST, [in heraldry] signifies the same colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's.

AMETHYSTINE, adj. [from amethyst.] Resembling an amethyst in colour.

AMIALE, adj. [from amiable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleasing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable also. Hester.

She told her, while she kept it,

'T would make her amiable, fubdue my father

Intirely to her love; but if the lost it,

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye

Should hold her loathed. Shakspere.

2. Pretending love; shewing love.

Spend all, only give me so much time in exchange, as to lay amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing. Shakspere.

AMIALENESS, n. f. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; loveliness; power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addison.

AMIALELY, adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in such a manner as to excite love.

AMICABLE, adj. [from amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly used of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be to be used in this passage.

O grace serene! oh virtue heavenly fair,

Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!

Fir'd with blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!

And faith, our early immortality!

Enter each mild, each amicable guest;

Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope.

AMICABLENESS, n. f. [from amicabilis.] The quality of being amicable; friendliness; goodwill.

AMICABLY, adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They see

Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh,

Two lovely youths, that amicably walk

O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd

Anna's late conquests. Philippi.

I found my subjects amicably join,

To lessen their defects, by citing mine. Prior.

In Holland itself, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to destroy the republic. Swift.

AMICE, n. f. [from amicus, Lat. amici, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis quibus et presbyteris communibus sunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manucupula, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum stringitur, & pectus tegitur, cystitae interioris hominis designat; tegit enim cor, ne vultus caput, & ingui autem hominis, ne inde ad linguam transcat manducium. Bruno.] 'T he first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus paid'st the night for soul, till morning fair

Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey. Milton.

On some a priest, fuccid in amice white,

Attends. Pope.

AMID, s. n. f. [from a and mid, or midst.]

AMIDST, s. n. f. [from a and mid, or midst.]

1. In the middle; equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit

Of each tree in the garden we may eat;

But of the fruit of this fair tree, amidst

The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves, chained to his pedestal, are very noble figures. Addison.

2. Mingled with; surrounded by; in the ambit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,

And, but bewick'd, who to his flock would mean? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,

Hurl'd to and fro, with jacculation dire. Milton.

What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,

The boar amidst my crystal flames I bring;

And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryden.

Amata's breast the fury thus invades,

And fires with rage amid the sylvan shades. Dryden.

3. Amongst; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor found

Amid their radiant orbs be found?

In reason's ear they all rejoice,

And utter forth a glorious voice,

For ever fing'ing, as they shine,

"The hand that made us in divine." Addison.

AMIS, s. n. f. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and mis, the English particle, which thence any thing, like the Greek mis, to be wrong; as, to miscount, to count erroneously; to misdo, to commit a crime: omis therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that which thou hast sworn to do amis,

Is yet amis when it is truly done. Shakspere.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amis, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hosier.

O ye powers that search

The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,

If I have done amis, impute it not. Addison.

3. In an ill sense.

She sigh'd withal, they contriv'd all amis,

And thought the with'd to kill who long'd to kiss. Fairfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amis to be followed by them, whose case is the like. Hosier.

Methinks, though a man had all science, and all principles, yet it might not be amis to have none conscience. Villegon.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amis, 'tis true;

Yet I am somewhat better born than you. Dryden.

I built a wall, and when the masons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by, while my servants threw down what was amis. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amis against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghill; because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort. Daniel, iii. 29.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was somewhat amis yesterday, but am well to day.

8. Amis is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; because it always follows the substantive to which which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amis is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantivæ.

To my sick soul, as fin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amis. Hamlet.

AMISSIO. n. f. [amisio, Lat.] Loss.
To AMIS v. a. [amisio, Lat.] To lose: a word little in use.
Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquirith no new form, but rather a confidence or determination of its diffusivity, and amissit not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

AMITY. n. f. [amitis, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations, opposed to war, or among the people, opposed to discord, or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Is. ker.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Davies in Ir'e acid.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the affiance of your lord. Shakspeare.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this race, this service dedicate
To my deplord allies; let there be
'Tis wit us and them no league nor amity. Danham.

AMMONIAC. n. f. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of fern growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agafitis. Pliny call the tree moispon, which, he says, grows near the temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white with in, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlic. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. It enters several medicinal compositions, as an attenuant and detergent; and, outwardly applied, it is resolute and suppurative. Savary Treasur.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large inns or caravaneras, where the croud of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge; who, in those parts, travelling upon camels, and those creatures when in Cyrene, a province of Egypt, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or, say some, in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyreniac. Since the cessation of these pilgrimages, no more of this salt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing; but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of a salt, nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Atina. The characters of the ancient sal ammoniac are, that it cools water, turns aqua fortis into aqua regia, and consequently dissolves gold.

The modern sal ammoniac is entirely factitious, and made in Egypt; where several long-necked glass bottles, being filled with foot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouth luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, contrived for the purpose, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and forms a pale at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating; which, being condensed, stick to the top of the bottle, and are, upon breaking it, taken out in those large cakes, which they send to England. Only foot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest and best.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine; with which some mix that quantity of foot, and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. There are various preparations of this salt used in pharmacy; as, sublimata of sal ammoniac, and flowers of sal ammoniac, used as sudorifics, diuretics, and good aperients; volatile sal ammoniac, used against malignant fevers, as a sudorific, and in pocket bottles; spirit of sal ammoniac, of various kinds. Cramer's.

AMMONIACAL adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniacal salt.

Human blood calcin'd, yields no fixed salt; nor is it a sal ammoniac; for that remains immutable after repeated distillations; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniac; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Arctabrat.

AMMUTION. n. f. [supposed to come from amissio, which, in the barbarous ages, seems to have signified supply of provision; but it, surely may be more reasonably derived from munis, fornication; choyet a munition, things for the fortresses.] Military stores.

They must make themselves defensible against strangers; and must have the assistance of some able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel flaid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon.

All the rich mines of learning ranfack are,
To furnish ammunition for this war. Danham.

But now his stores of ammunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard:

Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And solitary guns are scarcely heard. Dryden.

AMMUTION BREAD. n. f. Bread for the supply of the armies or garrisons.

AMNESTY. n. f. [amnestia, Gr.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes against the government, to a certain time, are obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may safely commit upon the last of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the first of July: by which the greatest criminals may escape, provided they continue long enough in power, to antiquate their crimes, and, by sliding them a while, deceive the legislature into an amnesty. Swift.

AMNICOLIST. n. f. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. D.

AMNIGENOUS. n. f. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Di.

AMNION. n. f. [Lat. perhaps from Amn.]

The innermost membrane with which the fetus in the womb is most immediately covered, and with which the rest of the secundines, the chorion, and alantox, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It also contains a nutritious humour, separated by glands for that purpose, with which the fetus is preserved. It is outwardly clothed with the urinary membrane, and the chorion, which sometimes stick so close to one another, that they can scarce be separated. It has also its vessels from the fœtus as from the chorion. Quang.

AMMUM. n. f. [Lat.] A sort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioscorides differ about the ancient ammum; but the generality of them suppose it to be a fruit different from ours. Scaliger is confident, that the ammum was no fruit; but the wood, which bore some resemblance to a bunch of grapes, and was used in enlivening of bodies; whence the name ammum was given to bodies enlivened with it. The modern ammum appears to be the fig, or fig, of the ancients, or basilard, fig, parley. It resembles the muscat grape, grows in clusters, and is about the thickness of a pea, round, membranous, and divided into three cells, that contain several brown angular grains, of a very strong aromatick taste and smell. This fruit is brought from the East Indies, and makes part of the composition of treacle. It is of a hot spicy taste and smell. There is likewise another plant seed, named ammum; but neither are in much repute in physick. Trevan's Character.

AMUS. n. f. [amus, Saxon.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other persons or things; on every side.

Amus'd Strawberries grow here and there some borage-seed; and you shall find the strawberries under those leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by his winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his presence had thank'd his amus.

The thickest trees, both man and wife. Milton.

2. Conjoined with others, so as to make part of the number.

I have them, as you see, observed the failings of many great wits amus'd the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, amus'd the old Roman fables, several of Venus in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Adams.

AMORIST. n. f. [from amare.] An innamorato, a gallant; a man professing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though casualties should spare them, age brings in a necessity of decay; leaving doubts upon red and white, perplexed by uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and her beauty, both which are necessary to the amus's joys and quiet. Bos.

AMOROSO. n. f. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Di.

AMOROUS. adj. [from amor, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakspeare's, &c.

Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero; and he's withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakspeare's Trochilus about Nektar.

Ayes, as soon as they have brought forth their young, keep ers fastened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty: so amorous is nature of what ever the produces.

Dryden's Description.

2. Naturally inclined to love; disposed to fondness; fond.

The am'rous master own'd his potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembl'd as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his first surprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the passion grew. Prior.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.

I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass,
I, that am rudely stamp'd,
And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love, and amorous delight. Paradise Lost.

In the amorous net
First caught they lik'd; and each his liking chose.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

O! how I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantane's shade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain;
Invade the mules, and improve my vein! Waller.

AMOROUSLY, adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt swim in that live-bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will am'rously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Dennis.

AMOROUSNESS, n. f. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondness; lovingness; love.

All Gynecia's actions were interpreted by Bassilius, as proceeding from jealousy of his amorousness. Sidney.

I can readily believe that Lindamor has wit, and amorousness enough, to make him find it more easy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himself against them. Boyle.

AMORT, adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the state of the dead; dejected; deprelled; spiritless.

How fares my Kate? what, sweeting, all amort?

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZATION, n. f. [amortissement, amortissable, Fr.] The AMORTISEMENT; right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to some community, that never is to cease.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial provision for them, after the laws of amortization were devised and put in use by princes.

Haydock's Parergon Juvi. Connici.

TO AMORTIZE, v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild or fraternity, and their successors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manor.

Blount.

This did concern the kingdom to have farms sufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people.

Bacon's Henry VII.

TO AMORTISE, v. a. [amortir, Lat.]

1. To remove from a post or station: a juridical sense.

2. To remove; to move; to alter: a sense now out of use.

Therewith, amort from his sober mood,
And lives like yet, said he, that wrought this act?
And do the heavens afford him vital food? Fairy Queen.

TO AMORTISE, v. n. [amortir, Fr.]

1. To rise in the accumulative quantity; to compose in the whole; with the particle ts. It is used of several sums in quantities added together.

Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amortise ts, or how many oceans of water would be necessary to compose this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. It is used, figuratively, of the consequence rising from any thing taken altogether.

The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amortise but ts, that more might have been done, or sooner.

Bacon.

Judgments that are made on the wrong side of the danger, amount to no more than an affliction of skill, without either credit or effect.

L'Estrange.

AMOUNT, n. f. [from to amount.] The sum total; the result of several sums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life,

Where are you now, and what is your amount?

Vexation, disappointment, and remorse. Thomson.

AMOUR, n. f. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally used of vicious love. The au sounds like no in poor.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never so outrageously, yet the impure flame will either die of itself, or consume the body that harbours it.

South.

The restless youth search'd all the world around;
But how can love in his amours be found?

Adriens' Ovid's Metam.

AMPER, n. f. [ampere, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; a word said, by Skinner, to be much in use in Essex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

N^o VII.

AMPHIBIOUS, adj. [ἄμφω and βίωσις.] That which partakes of two natures, so as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature.

On land a beast, a fish in water. Hudibras.

Those are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of those creatures that live at that ease, and by choice, a good while, or at any time upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water.

Locke.

Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Arbutnot.

AMPHIBIOUSNESS, n. f. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLOGICAL, adj. [from amphiboly.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLOGICALLY, adv. [from amphibologic.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBOLOGY, n. f. [ἀμφιλογία.] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word; as, non regem accideris, tunc non ulla est, amphiboly; captare liberos meaning by liberos, either bastards or jells, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themselves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and such as conclude from mistake of the word, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation and amphiboly.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to use what is most plain and easy; that the mind be not misled by amphiboly, or ill conceived notions, into fallacious deductions.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientia.

AMPHIBOLOUS, adj. [ἀμφω and βλάβαι.] Tossed from one to another; striking each way.

Never was there such an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themselves for the king, and making use of his name in all their remonstrances, to justify their actions.

Hewel.

AMPHIBOLOGY, n. f. [ἀμφω and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

Diels.

AMPHISBÆNA, n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισβæνα.] A serpent supposed to have two heads.

That the amphibæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphibæna dire,

Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and cloops drear,

And displas. Adriens' Paradise Lost.

AMPHISCII, n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισκίαι, of ἀμφω and σκία, a shadow.]

Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs, and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHEATRE, n. f. [of ἀμφιθεάτρειον, of ἀμφω and θεάτρειον.]

A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another; where spectators might behold spectacles, as stage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre, was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd

Rais'd in degrees; to sixty paces rear'd,

That when a man was plac'd in one degree,

Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the insults and mockeries of a crouled amphitheatre, and still keeping his seat; or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul, among the exquisite sulking of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour.

Adriens.

AMULET, adj. [amulet, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n defends

In universal bounty, fludding fears,

And fruits, and flowers, on nature's ample lap. Thomson.

2. Great in bulk.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief? —

She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence,

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down

Her delicate cheeks. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Unlimited; without restriction.

Have what you ask, you presents I receive;

Land where, and when you please, with ample leave. Dryden.

4. Liberal; large; without parsimony.

If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to requite man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth so far the other's value.

Hosier.

5. Large;

5. Large; splendid; without reservation.

To dispose the prince, the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative; that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. f. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you respect, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplis, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall solemnly look upon it, not only to destroy ours, but to establish his own; not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

AMPLIATION. n. f. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe.

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any amplifications or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and full. Hobbes.

To A'MPLIFICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Lit.

AMPLIFICATION. n. f. [amplificationis, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable; but they suit well with the character of Alcinoüs. Pope.

A'MPLIFIER. n. f. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances; it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorilaüs could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifico, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to encrease any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon's Essays.

All conceives that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the found at the coming out. Bacon.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

For as the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in the blind ages, so grew up in them withal a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces as men's opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Kaleigh's preface.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errors of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servants that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies.

Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparalleled, & happily amplified. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

I feel age advancing, and my health is insufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logic.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here where the subject is so fruitful, that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants. Pope's Odyssey.

A'MPLITUDE. n. f. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glauville.

2. Largeness; greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity.

With more than human gifts from heaven adorned,
Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds. Milton.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or estates, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness; abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logic.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line subtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises, and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude, are also called northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

8. Almagistical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun at its rising, and the east or west point of the compass; or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west parts of the compass. Chambers.

A'MPLY. adv. [amplis, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well-being,
So amplis, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amplis enough, to convince them; but they were resolved not to be convinced: and to those, who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments are equal. Artbury.

2. At large; without reserve.

At return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's teed; obscurely then foretold,
Now amplis known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Milton.

3. At large; copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amplis written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others must be cast into shadows; that is, pallid over in silence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To A'MPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers in private frigates from Dunkirk, it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating those fractured members. Wijeman.

AMPUTATION. n. f. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body, with an instrument of steel. The usual method of performing it, in the influence of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a stick, may be straitened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted, to prevent too large an hemorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke or two, to be separated from the bone with the dismembering knife. Then the periosteum being also divided from the bone with the back of the knife, saw the bone asunder, with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the hemorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it; and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, affricaments, plasters, and other necessaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breast, had the freer use of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A'MULET. n. f. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, Lat.] An appended remedy, remedy, or preservative: a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of some particular disease.

That spirits are corporeal, seems at first view a conceit derogative unto himself; yet herein he establisheth the doctrine of illusions, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They do not certainly know the falsity of what they report; and their ignorance must serve you as an amulet against the guilt both of deceit and malice. Goverment of the Tongue.

AMULETUM, n. f. [amuletus, Lat.] The quality of less or more of any thing.

AMUSE, v. a. [amuser, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without distracting it. To divert implies something more lively, and to please, something more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a sense bordering on contempt.

They think they see visions, and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastical ideas of a busy imagination. Dryd. of Ficty.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuse himself with trifles. Wells.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amused his followers with idle promises.

AMUSEMENT, n. f. [amusement, Fr.] That which amuses; entertainment.

Every interest or pleasure of life, even the most trifling amusement, is suffered to postpone the one thing necessary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amusement was to give poison to dogs and cats, and see them expire by slower or quicker tortures. Pope.

I was left to stand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleasant amusement to look on with safety, whilst another was giving them diversion, at the hazard of his liberty. Susst.

AMUSER, n. f. [amuseur, Fr.] He that amuses, as with false promises. The French word is always taken in an ill sense.

AMUSING, adj. [from amuse.] That which has the power of amusing.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amuseur arch before him fly,
Then vanish quite away. Thomson.

AMYGDALAE, adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMYGDALINE, adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; resembling almonds.

AN, adv. [anc, Saxon. en, Dutch, ein, German.] The article indefinite, used before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1. One, but with less emphasis; as, there stands a house. Since he cannot be always employed in study, reading, and conversation, there will be many an hour, besides what his exercises will take up. Locke.

2. As, or some; as, an elephant might swim in this water. He was no way at all uncertain, nor ever in the least at a loss concerning any branch of it. Locke.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it signifies, like a, some particular state; but this is now disused.

It is certain, that odours do, in a small degree, nourish; especially the odour of wine; and we see men an hungry do love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

4. As sometimes, in old authors, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth;
As they will take it so; if not, he's plain. Shakespeare.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.
—He will an if he live to be a man. Shakespeare's M. of Venice.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of an if.

My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars an it were any nightingale. Addison.

AN, adv. [anc, Saxon.] A word used in the prescriptions of physick, importing the like quantity, as, wine and honey, ā or ana $\frac{3}{4}$; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the same weight prudence and innocence take,
As of each does the just mixture make. Gayley.

He'll bring an apothecary, with a chargeable long bill of ana. Dryden.

AN, n. f. Books so called from the last syllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thomiana; they are loose thoughts, or casual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACAMPITIC, adj. [anaxampitica] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacampitic sound, an echo; an anacampitic hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACAMPITICS, n. f. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptrics. It has no singular.

ANACATHARTIC, n. f. [See CATHARTIC.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆOSIS, n. f. [anacephalæosis] Recapitulation; or summary of the principal heads of a discourse. Dodd.

ANACHORETE, n. f. [sometimes viciously written anachite] ANACHORITE, n. f. [anachorite] A monk, who, with the leave of his superior, leaves the convent for a more austere and solitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth sit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Dowse.

ANACHRONISM, n. f. [from ἀνά and χρόνος] An error in computing time, by which events are misplaced with regard to each other. It seems properly to signify an error by which an event is placed too early; but is generally used for any error in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachronism, in making Æneas and Dido contemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almost two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

ANACLASTICS, n. f. [ἀνά and κλάω] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptrics. It has no singular.

ANADIPLOSIS, n. f. [anadiplosis] Redupl. $\kappa\epsilon\tau\iota$; a figure in rhetoric, in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following; as, he retained his virtue amidst all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtue brought upon him.

ANAGOGICAL, adj. [ἀναγωγικός] That which contributes or relates to spiritual elevation, or religious raptures; mysterious; elevated above humanity. Dodd.

ANAGOGICAL, adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Mysterious; elevated; religiously exalted. Dodd.

ANAGOGICALLY, adv. [from anagogical.] Mysteriously; with religious elevation.

ANAGRAM, n. f. [ἀνά and γράμμα] A conceit arising from the letters of a name transposed; as this, of Widdowes, Nanny, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I anagram in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' usual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face.

If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words, what could we say? Dowse.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRAMMATISM, n. f. [from anagram.] The art or practice of making anagrams.

The only quintessence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, which is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter, into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Gaudin.

ANAGRAMMATIST, n. f. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

ANAGRAMMATIZE, v. n. [anagrammatize, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALPTIC, adj. [ἀναλπτικός] Comforting; corroborating; a term of physick.

Analeptics medicines cherish the nerves, and renew the spirits and strength. Quincy.

ANALOGICAL, adj. [from analog.]

1. Used by way of analogy. It seems properly distinguished from analogous, as words from things; analogous signifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of representing relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeness, but by analogical representation.

Stillingfleet's Def. of Dile. on Rom. Idolatry.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to several other objects, not by way of resemblance, but on the account of some evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical.

Watts's Logic.

2. Analogous; having resemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating something analogical to either.

Hales's Origin of Mankind.

ANALOGICALLY, adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the simplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is some one universal principle, running through the whole system of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures.

Chrys.

ANALOGICALNESS, n. f. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitness to be applied for the illustration of some analogy.

ANALOGISM, n. f. [ἀναλογισμός] An argument from the cause to the effect.

TO ANALOGIZE, v. a. [from analog.] To explain by way of analogy; analogy; to form some resemblance between different things; to consider something with regard to its analogy with something else.

We have systems of material bodies, diversly figured and situated, if separately considered; they represent the object of the desire, which is analyzed by attraction or gravitation.

Chyren's Philos. Principles.

ANALOGOUS, adj. [ἀνάλογος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing some resemblance or proportion; having something parallel.

Exercise makes things easy, that would be otherwise very hard; as in labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is something analogous in the exercise of the mind, to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward.

L'Estrange.

Many important consequences may be drawn from the observation of the most common things, and analogous reasonings from the causes of them.

Arbutnot.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the resemblance is noted.

This incorporeal substance may have some sort of existence, analogous to corporeal extension: though we have no adequate conception thereof.

Locke.

ANALOGY, n. f. [ἀναλογία.]

1. Resemblance between things with regard to some circumstances or effects; as, learning is said to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to discover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a precript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the same, yet, for the most part, retaining the same analogy.

Flester.

What I here observe of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy; and due proportion, extend even to those communications of God's will, that are requisite to salvation.

South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is supposed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles is or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is used.

If the body pollick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were necessary in a hot dispenser's stove.

Dryden.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the same with that of the present earth.

Bu-net.

If we make him express the customs of our country, rather than of Rome, it is either when there was some analogy between the customs, or to make him more easy to vulgar understanding.

Dryden's Jewels, Dedicate.

3. By grammarians, it is used to signify the agreement of several words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved, from hate, hated, from grieve, grieved.

ANALYSIS, n. f. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A separation of a compound body into the several parts of which it consists.

There is an account of dew falling, in some places, in the form of butter, or grease, which grows extremely fetid; so that the analysis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the best method of finding such contents of the soil as are within the reach of the sun.

Arbutnot.

2. A consideration of any thing in parts, so as that one particular is first considered, then another.

Analysis consists in making experiments and observations, and in drawing general conclusions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections against the conclusions, but such as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths.

Newton's Opticks.

2. A solution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its first elements; as, of a sentence to the single words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune to single notes; of an argument, to simple propositions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analysis of its true initial causes; till we know the first springs of natural motions, we are still but ignorant.

Glauville.

ANALYTICAL, adj. [from analysis.]

1. That which resolves any thing into first principles; that which separates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be properly maintained against the inaccurateness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on.

Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analysis, or by taking the parts of a compound into distinct and particular consideration.

Declarers hath here infinitely outdone all the philosophers that were before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the universal fabric: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheses.

Glauville.

ANALYTICALLY, adv. [from analytical.] In such a manner as requires compounds into simples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALYTIC, adj. [from analysis.] The manner of resolving compounds into the simple constituent or component parts applied chiefly to logical operations.

He was in logic a great critic,

Profoundly skill'd in analytical.

Hudibras.

Analytic method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a species or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by resolving into its first principles, or parts; its generic nature, and its special properties; and therefore it is called the method of resolution.

Hart's Logic.

TO ANALYZE, v. a. [from analysis.] To resolve a compound into its first principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chymistry enabling us to deposite bodies, and, in some measure, to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to present them us.

Eyre.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its last principles; if it be inquired, why such an action is to be avoided, the immediate answer is, because it is sin.

Norris's Affairs.

When the sentence is distinguished into subject and predicate, proposition, argument, act, object, cause, effect, adjunct, opposite, &c. then it is analyzed logically and metaphysically. This last is what is chiefly meant in the theological schools, when they speak of analyzing a text of scripture.

Watts's Logic.

ANALYZER, n. f. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reasons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and universal analyzer of mixt bodies.

Eyre.

ANAMORPHOSIS, n. f. [ἀναμορφωσις.] Deformation; a perspective projection of any thing, so that to the eye, at one point of view, it shall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confuted to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirror of a certain form.

ANANAS, n. f. The pine apple.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and funnel-shaped; the embryos produced in the tubercles, afterwards become fruit; the seeds in the tubercles are small, and almost kidney-shaped.

The species are, 1. Oval-shaped pine apple, with a whitish flesh. 2. Pyramidal pine apple, with a yellow flesh. 3. Pine apple, with smooth leaves. 4. Fine apple, with shining green leaves, and scarce any spines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine.

The first sort is most common in Europe, but the fruit of the second is larger, better flavoured, and its juice not so astringent. The third sort is the most rare in Europe, but esteemed above all the rest. These plants are propagated by suckers; and from the crowns which grow on the top of the fruit.

Mell.

Witness thou best Ananas, thou the pride

Of vegetable life, beyond what'er

Thom's Summer.

ANANAS, uult. The tame with penguin. See PENGUIN.

ANAPHORA, n. f. [ἀναφορά.] A figure, when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word, or sound; as, — Where is the wife? Where is the sister? Where is the daughter of this world?

ANAPIEROTICK, adj. [ἀναπνέω.] That which fills up any vacuity; used of applications which promote flesh.

ANARCH, n. f. [See ANARCHY.] An author of confusion.

Him thus the anarch old,

With fault'ring speech, and village imposter'd,

Answer'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

ANARCHICAL, adj. [from anarchy.] Confused; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious state of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world presume to determine the nature of subjects belonging to the supreme Spirit.

Chyren's Philosophical Principles.

ANARCHY, n. f. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a state in which every man is unaccountable; a state without magistracy.

Where eldest night

And chaos, ancestors of nature, hold

Internal anarchy, amidst the noise

Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.

Paradise Lost.

Arbitrary power is but the first natural step from anarchy, to the savage life; the adjusting power and freedom being an effect and consequence of maturer thinking.

Swift.

ANASTARCA, n. f. (from ἀνα and τάρξ) A sort of dropy, where the whole substance is stuffed with pituitous humours.

Quincy.

When the lymph stagnates, or is extravasated under the skin, it is called an anastarca.

Arbutnot on Diet.

ANASTARCOUS, adj. [from anastarca.] Relating to an anastarca; partaking of the nature of an anastarca.

A gentleman laboured of an anastarca, with an anastarcous swelling on her belly, thighs, and legs.

Hjssman.

ANASTOMATICK, adj. [from ἀνα and κόμω.] That which has the quality of opening the vessels, or of removing obstructions.

ANASTOMOSIS, n. f. [from ἀνα and κόμω.] The inoculation of vessels, or the opening of one vessel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANATROPE, n. f. [ἀνατροπή], a preposterous placing, from ἀνατρέω.] A figure whereby words which should have been precedent, are postponed.

ANATHEMAT. n. f. [ἀνάθεμα.] A curse pronounced by ecclesiastical authority; excommunication.

Here anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the schismatical; who think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from the body, which they choose not to be of.

The object of the curse, or person cursed. This seems the original meaning, though now little used.

ANATHEMATICAL. adv. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMATICALY. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

ANATHEMATIZE. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized after this manner, and, with detestation, branded and banished out of the church.

ANATHETICUS. adj. [from anathema and ferre, Lat.] Producing phœbe.

If there be anathetici trees, whose corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brewer's Fung. Exercit.

ANATOCISM. n. f. [ανατοκισμός, Lat. anatocismos.] The accumulation of interest upon interest; the addition of the interest due for money lent, to the original sum. A species of usury generally forbidden.

ANATOMICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logic to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of division, it has the use of an anatomical sense, which dissects an animal body, and separates the veins, arteries, nerves, muscles, membranes, &c. and shews us the several parts which go to the composition of a complete animal. Watts.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; considered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary distortion of the muscles, which is the anatomical cause of laughter; but there is another cause of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Annomized; dissected; separated.

The continuation of solidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from, hardness. Locke.

ANATOMICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the sense of an anatomist; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While some affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby an evidence of anger or fury, others have contrived anatomizatio, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANATOMIST. n. f. [ἀνατομίστης.] He that studies the structure of animal bodies, by means of dissection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to discover the various parts.

Acute is adjudged, that if nature had been suffered to run her own course, without this fatal interruption, he might have dissected his age. Hosack.

Hence when anatomists discourse,

How like brutes organs are to ours;

Tree grasp, if higher powers think fit,

A bear might soon be made a wit;

And, that for any thing in nature,

Pigs might speak love odes, dogs bark satire. Prior.

ANATOMIZE. v. a. [ἀνατομίζω.]

1. To dissect an animal; to divide the body into its component or constituent parts.

Our industry must even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hosack.

2. To lay any thing open distinctly, and by minute parts.

I speak but brotherly of him, but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and then must look pale and wonder. Shakespeare.

Then dark distinctions reason's light disguis'd,

And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Denham.

ANATOMY. n. f. [ἀνάτομή.]

1. The art of dissecting the body.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by studying too much such finer nerves and vessels, as will for ever escape our observation. Pope.

2. The doctrine of the structure of the body, learned by dissection.

Let the muscles be well inserted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

3. The art of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

Nº VII.

When a moneyed man hath divided his chests, he seemeth to himself richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts. Bacon.

4. The body stripp'd of its integuments; a skeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,

Then with a passion I would shake the world,

And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,

Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakespeare.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin menage person.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,

A meet anatomy, a mountebank,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,

A needy hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch,

A living dead man. Shakespeare.

A'NATRON. n. f. The scum which swims upon the molten glass in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common salt. It is likewise that salt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY. n. f. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR. n. f. [ancestor, Lat. ancestrus, Fr.] One from whom a person descends, either by the father or the mother. It is distinguished from predecessor; which is not, like ancestor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch succeeds to his ancestors; an elective, to his predecessors.

And the lies buried with her ancestors,

O, in a tomb where never scandal slept,

Save this of hers. Shakespeare.

Cham was the paternal ancestor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whose son was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obscure! why pry'st thou what am I! I know

My father, grandfater, and great grandfater too:

If farther I derive my pedigree,

I can but guess beyond the fourth degree.

The rest of my forgotten ancestors,

Were sons of earth like him, or sons of whores. Dryden's Persius.

A'NCESTREL. adj. [from ancestry.] Claimed from ancestors; relating to ancestors; a term of law.

Limitation in actions ancestral, was anciently so here in England. Hale.

A'NCESTRY. n. f. [from ancestry.]

1. Lineage; a series of ancestors, or progenitors; the persons who compose the lineage.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance

Mine ancestry from famous Coradin,

Who first to raise our house to honour did begin. Spenser.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties transmitted from a wife and virtuous ancestry, public spirit, and a love of one's country, are the support and ornaments of government. Aldrich.

Say from what keeper'd ancestry ye claim,

Recorded eminent in deathless fame? Pope.

2. The honour of descent; birth.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one, more contemptible. Addison.

A'NCHINTARY. n. f. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientury.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance of proof of antiquity.

Wooing, weddings, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the hilt suit is hot and hally, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly modest, as a measure full of state and anchintary; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakespeare's Much about Nothing.

A'NCHOR. n. f. [ἄγκυρα, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, composed of a long shank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is fastened, and at the other, branching out into two arms or flukes, tending upwards, with bars or edges on each side. Its use is to hold the ship, by being fixed to the ground.

He laid, and wept; then spread his sails before

The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman shore:

Their anchors dropt, his crew the vessels moor. Dryden.

2. It is used, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers stability or security.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth not into that within the veil. Hebrews.

3. The forms of speech in which it is most commonly used, are, to cast anchor, to be at ride at anchor.

The Turkish general, deceived of his expectations, and perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at sea, withdrew his fleet, when a flying anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn. Knelson.

Entering with the tide,

He dropp'd his anchors, and his crew be ply'd:

Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,

His vessel moor'd, and made with haulers fast. Dryden.

- Far from your capital my ship resides
At Reithrus, and secure at anchor rides.
To ANCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.]
1. To cast anchor; to lie at anchor.
The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight.
Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not.
Or the strait course to rocky Chios flows,
And anchor under Mimos' flaggy brow.
2. To stop at; to rest on.
My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabed.
My tongue should to my ears not name my boys.
'Till that my nails were anchored in thine eyes.
ANCHOR. n. f. Shakespeare seems to have used this word for anchoret, or an abstergeing recluse person.
To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's clasp in prison be my scope!
ANCHOR-HOLD. n. f. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or fastness of the anchor; and, figuratively, security.
The old English could express most aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any;
as for example: the holy service of God, which the Latins called religion, because it knitted the minds of men together, and most people of Europe have borrowed the same from them, they called most significantly can-festrel, as the one and only assurance and fast anchor-hold of our souls health.
ANCHOR-SMITH. n. f. [from anchor and smith.] The maker or forger of anchors.
Smithing comprehends all trades which use either forge or file, from the anchor-smith to the watchmaker; they all working by the same rules, though not with equal exactness, and all using the same tools, though of several sizes.
Mason's Mechanical Excels.
ANCHORAGE. n. f. [from anchor.]
1. The hold of the anchor.
Let me resolve whether there be indeed such efficacy in nurture and first production; for if that supposal should fail us, all our anchorage were loose, and we should but wander in a wild sea.
2. The set of anchors belonging to a ship.
Lo as the bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage;
Cometh Andronicus.
3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.
ANCHORED. participial adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.
Like a well twisted cable, holding fast
The anchored vessel in the loudest blast.
ANCHORET. n. f. [contracted from anchoret, ἀγκυροπύτης.] ANCHORITE. n. f. A recluse; a hermit; one that retires to the more severe duties of religion.
His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himself.
You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a line spring, or any of the accommodations that best a solitary life.
ANCHOUVE. n. f. [from anchova, Span. or anchise, Ital. of the same signification.] A little fish, much used by way of saucy, or seasoning. Scaliger describes the anchovy as of the herring kind, about the length of a finger, having a pointed snout, a wide mouth, no teeth, but gums as rough as a saw.
Others make it a sort of sardine, or pilchard; but others, with better reason, hold it a peculiar species, very different from either. It is caught in the months of May, June, and July, on the coasts of Catalonia, Provence, &c. when it constantly repairs up the Strait of Gibraltar into the Mediterranean. The fishing is chiefly in the night time; when a light being put on the stem of their little fishing vessels, the anchovies flock round, and are caught in nets. When the fishery is over, they cut off the heads, take out the galls and guts, then lay them in barrels, and salt them.
We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as the fallico acid gravies of meat; the salt pickles of fish, anchovies, oysters.
Flower on the Humours.
ANCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]
1. Old; that happened long since; of old time; not modern.
Ancient and old are dissimil'd; old relates to the duration of the thing itself, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dress, a habit used in former times. But this is not always observed; for we mention old customs; but though old be sometimes opposed to ancient, an ancient is seldom opposed to new.
Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conqueror's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common persons, he caused to be written in a book, after a survey made of them, now remaining in the exchequer, and called Domesday book; and such as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demesnes.

Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.
With the ancient is wisdom, and in length of days understanding.
Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the most ancient, because he never had any beginning.
Raleigh.

- Industry*
Gave the tall ancient forest to his axe.
Transport.
3. Past; former.
I see thy fury: If I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings.
Shakespeare.

ANCIENT. n. f. [from ancient, adj.] Those that lived in old time were called ancients, opposed to the moderns.

And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings dispense with laws themselves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end.
Pope.

ANCIENT. n. f. The flag or streamer of a ship, and, formerly, of a regiment.

ANCIENT. n. f. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Pistol, whence in pious use, enlign.

ANCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

Not far from this is the great city of Trebifond, which, with the territory about it, anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjustly possessed, and as unjustly abused, by those who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it.
Sidney.

The colwort is not an enemy, though they were anciently received, to the vine only; but it is an enemy to any other plant, because it draweth strongly the fattest juice of the earth.
Bacon.

ANCIENTNESS. n. f. [from ancient.] Antiquity; existence from old times.

The Fescennine and Saturnian were the same; they were called Saturnian from their ancientness, when Saturn reigned in Italy.
Dryden.

ANCIENTRY. n. f. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the most mingled, and most uncertain. Wherefore, most foolishly do the Irish think to enoble themselves, by writing their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himself from any in certain.
Speiser.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenchas with child, wronging the ancientry, stealing, fighting.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

ANCKLE. See ANKLE.

ANCONY. n. f. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two square rough knobs, one at each end.
Chambers.

AND. conjunctive.

1. The particle by which sentences or terms are joined, which it is not easy to explain by any synonymous word.

Sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery

And filthy beverages, and unkindly theft,
And borrow bare, and some good lady's gift.
Spenser.

What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own?
Coats.

The Danes unconquer'd offspring march behind;
And Morion, the last of human kind.
Dryden.

It shall ever be my study to make discoveries of this nature in human life, and to settle the proper distinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and those false colours and assemblances of them that shine alike in the eyes of the vulgar.
Addison.

2. And sometimes signifies though, and seems a contraction of and if.

It is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will let an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs.

3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.

I pray thee, Launce, and if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste.

ANDIRON. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from hard-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may supply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the spit turns; or iron in which wood is laid to burn.

If you strike an entire bone, as an andiron of brass, at the top, it maketh a more treble found, and at the bottom a bafer.
Bacon.

ANDROGYNAL. adv. [from ἀνδρ and γυν.] Having two sexes;
hermaphroditical.

ANDROGYNALLY. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of her-maphrodites; with two sexes.

The examples heretofore have undergone no real or new transformation, but were androgynally burn, and under some kind of hermaphrodites.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
ANDRO.

ANDROGYNOUS. adj. The same with androgynal.

ANDROGYNUS. n. f. [Lat. See ANDROGYNAL.] An hermaphrodite; one that is of both sexes.

ANDROTEMY. n. f. [from ἀνδρ and τέμνω] The practice of cutting human bodies. Diët.

ANECDEOTE. n. f. [ἀνέκδοτον.] Something yet unpublished; secret history.

Some modern anecdotes aver,
He nodded in his elbow-chair.

ANEMOGRAPHY. n. f. [ἀνέμωσις and γράφω.] The description of the winds.

ANEMOMETER. n. f. [ἀνέμωσις and μέτρον.] An instrument contrived to measure the strength or velocity of the wind.

ANEMONE. n. f. [ἀνέμων.] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its single stalk, surrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many filamina in the center; the seeds are collected into an oblong head, and surrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemones are white, red, blue, and purple sometimes curiously intermixed. Miller.

Wind flowers are distinguished into those with broad and hard leaves, and those with narrow and soft ones; of both which sorts there are great variety of colours, some being double, and others single flowered. The broad leaved anemony roots should be planted about the end of September, and the small eminences which put forth the leaves set uppermost. These with small leaves must be set after the same manner, but not put into the ground till the end of October.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

From the soft wing of vernal breezes shed,

Anemini, auriculas, enrich'd

With shining meal o'er all their velvet leaves, Thomson.

ANEMOSCOPE. n. f. [ἀνέμωσις and σκοπεῖν.] A machine invented to foretell the changes of the wind. It has been observed, that hygroscopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoscopes, seldom failing, by the turning the index about to foretell the shifting of the wind. Chambers.

ANÉT. prep. A word used in the Scotch dialect.

1. Concerning; about; as, he said anét this particular.

2. Over against; opposite to; as, he lives anét the market-house.

ANÉ. n. f. The fibres or beards of corn. Diët.

ANÉ. n. f. The fibres or beards of corn. Diët.

ANEURISM. n. f. [ἀνέυρισμα.] A disease of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakness of any part of them, they become excessively dilated, or by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravasated amongst the adjacent cavities. Surgery.

In the office, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism.

Woman's Surgery.

ANÉ. n. f. [from ἀν and νέω.]

1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. This is the most common use.

Nor, if at mischief taken, on the ground

Be slain, but prisoners to the pillar bound,

At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,

Be freed, or, arm'd anév, the fight invade. Dryden.

That as in birth, in beauty you excel,

The muse might dictate, and the poet tell:

Your art no other art can speak; and you

To show how well you play, must play anév. Prior.

The miseries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our island from the thoughts of engaging anév in such desperate undertakings. Addison.

1. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anév the whole disposition of his soul, to acquire new habits of life, to practise duties to which he is utterly a stranger. Rogers's Sermons.

ANÉ. n. f. [from ἀν and νέω.]

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel. Shakespeare.
5. A piece of money anciently coined and impressed with an angel, in memory of an obsequy of Pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or English, were so beautiful, that, if they were christians, they would be Angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten shillings.

Take an empty bafon, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it; then go so far from the bafon, till you cannot fee the angel, because it is not in a right line; then fill the bafon with water, and you will fee it out of its place, because of the reflection. Bacon.

Cousin, away for England; haste before,
And, ere our coming, fee thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; thy imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakespeare.

ANGEL. adj. Resembling angels; angelical.

I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face; a thousand innocent flames
In angel whiteness bear away those blushes. Shakespeare's A. h. ads about Nothing.

Or virgins visited by angel powers,
With golden crowns and wreaths of heavenly flow'rs. Pope's K. of the Lake.

ANGEL-LIKE. adj. [from angel and like.] Resembling an angel. In heav'n itself thou fure wert deif

With that angel like disguise. Wallar.

ANGEL-SHOT. n. f. [from angel and shot.] Chain shot, being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Diët.

ANGELICA. n. f. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into large segments; its stalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the stalks, and consist of five leaves, succeeded by two large channelled seeds.

The species are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves.

The common angelica delights to grow in a very moist soil, and its seeds should be sown soon after it is ripe. This plant is used in medicine, as are its seeds; and the confectioners make a sweetmeat with its tender stalks, cut in May. The second sort grows wild; and the two last sorts may be propagated like the first. Miller.

ANGELICA. (Berry-bearing) [Ardisia, Lat.]

The flower consists of many leaves, expanding in form of a rose, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary; these flowers are succeeded by globular fruits, which are soft and succulent, and full of oblong seeds.

The species are, 1. Canada berry-bearing angelica. 2. Berry-bearing angelica, with a naked stalk and creeping root. 3. Angelica tree.

The two first are propagated either by sowing their seeds; or by parting of their roots. The third sort grows with us to the height of seven or eight feet, and is only propagated by seeds, which are frequently brought from America. Miller.

ANGELICAL. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]

1. Resembling angels.

It discovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and earrieth up, with an angelical swiftness, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his visible marvels, may continually travel upward. Religion's History of the World.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild

Retreated in a silent valley, sing

With notes angelical to many a harp,

Their own heroic deeds, and hapless fall

By doom of battle. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Belonging to angels.

It may be encouragement to consider the pleasure of speculations, which do ravish and sublime the thoughts with more clear angelical contentments. Wittien.

ANGELICALNESS. n. f. [from angelical.] The quality of being angelical; resemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGELICK. adv. [angelicus, Lat.] Partaking of the nature of angel; angelical; above human.

Here, happy creature, fair angelick Eve,

Partake thou also. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Some emanation of th' all beauteous mind. Pope.

ANGELOT. n. f. A musical instrument, somewhat resembling a lute. Diët.

ANGER. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology, but, with most probability, derive by Stimmer from angr, Sax. verard; which, however, seems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneasiness or discomposure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a present purpose of revenge. Locke.

Anger is like

A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way, Shakespeare.
Self-mettle tires him.

Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses and thy chariots of salvation?
Hab. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to some, a transient hatred, or at least very like it. South.

2. Pain, or smart, of a sore or swelling. In this sense it seems plainly deducible from anger.

I made the experiment, setting the moxa where the first violence of my pain began, and where the greatest anger and swelling still continued, notwithstanding the swelling of my foot. Temple.

To ANGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make angry; to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meanest artisan, which carrieth a good mind? Hosier.

Sometimes he angers me,

With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant. Shakespe.
There were some late taxes and impositions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It angered 'Turenne, once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

ANGRILY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner; like one offended.

Why, how now, Hecate, you look angrily. Shakespeare.

Such jellies's dishonest indelication, is rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angrily to be grieved at, or seriously to be confuted. Carver.

ANGIOGRAPHY. n. f. [from ἀγγίον and γραφία.] A description of vessels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphatics.

ANGIOLOGY. n. f. [from ἀγγίον and λογία.] A treatise or discourse of the vessels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPERMIOUS. adj. [from ἀγγίον, μονός, and ερίσμα.] Such plants as have but one single seed in the seed-pod.

ANGIOTOMY. n. f. [from ἀγγίον and τομή, to cut.] A cutting open of the vessels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

ANGLE. n. f. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.] The space intercepted between two lines intersecting each other.

Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whose vertex, or angular point, is at the centre of a circle, and whose legs are two radii of that circle. Sturm's Dict.

ANGLE. n. f. [angle, Germ. and Dutch.] An instrument to take fish, consisting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She also had an angle in her hand; but the taker was so taken, that he had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me mine angle, we'll to the river there,
My musick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny fin'd fish; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.

The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the kaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork, and bending reed. Pope.

To ANGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fish with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the crystal lake,

Feast on the waters with the prey they take. Haller.

2. To try to gain by some insinuating artifices, as fishes are caught by a bait.

By this face,

This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shakespeare.

The pleasant 'st angling is to see the fish!
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
So angle we for Beatrice. Shakespeare.

ANGEL-ROD. n. f. [angel rode, Dutch.] The stick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatness; the smallest being fit for thatching of houses; the second bigness is used for angel-rod, and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs.

He makes a May-day to a miracle, and furnishes the whole country with angel-rod. Spectator.

ANGLER. n. f. [from angle.] He that fishes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he strook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryden.

Neither do birds alone, but many sorts of fishes, feed upon insects; as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Roy.

ANGELICISM. n. f. [from Angelus, Lat.] A form of speech peculiar to the English language; an English idiom.

ANGOVER. n. f. A kind of pear. See PEAR.

ANGRIPLY. adv. [from angry.] In an angry manner; furiously;
peeishly.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the lion angrily. Shakespeare.

ANGRY. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.

O let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak: peradventure there shall be thirty found there. Græfi.

2. It seems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a person;
but this is not always observed.

Your Coriolanus is not much misfed, but with his friends;
the commonwealth doth stand, and so would do, were he angry at it. Shakespeare.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye fold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life. Græfi.

I think it a vast pleasure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, so many countdrels envy and are angry at them. Swift.

3. Having the appearance of anger; having the effect of anger.

The north wind driveth away rain, so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. Prov.

4. In chirurgery, painful; inflamed; smarting.

This serum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regress into the mals, first gathers into a hard swelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and so discharges. Wijeman.

ANGUSTIA. n. f. [angustia, Fr. angustia, Lat.] Excessive pain either of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of jealousy, and is seldom used to signify other passions.

Not all so cheerful seemed the old knight,
As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,
Or angustia in her heart, is hard to tell. Fairy Queen.

Virtue's but angustia, when 'tis feveral,
By occasion wak'd, and circumstantial;

True virtue's soul, always in all deeds all. Dante.

They had prosecutors, whose invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conspired to find out such deaths, and those of such incredible angustia, that only the manner of dying was the punishment, death itself the deliverance. South.

Perpetual angustia fills his anxious breast,

Not sloth by business, nor compass'd by rest;
No mulick cheers him, nor no feast can please. Dryden.

ANGUSTIFIED. adj. [from angustia.] Seized with angustia; tortured; excessively pained.

Feel no touch

Of conscience, but of fame, and be Angustified, not that 'twas sin, but that 'twas the. Dante.

ANGULAR. adj. [from angle.] Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six cornered, being built upon a confused matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures arise, even as in the anethyll and basilates. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The distance of the edges of the knives from one another, at the distance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eight part of an inch.

ANGULARITY. n. f. [from angular.] The quality of being angular, or having corners.

ANGULARLY. adv. [from angular.] With angles or corners.

Another part of the same solution afforded us an ice angularly figured. Boyle.

ANGULARNESS. n. f. [from angular.] The quality of being angular.

ANGULATED. adj. [from angle.] Formed with angles or corners.

Topazes, amethysts, or emeralds, which grow in the figures, are ordinarily crystallized, or shot into angulated figures;
whereas, in the strata, they are found in rude lumps, like yellow, purple, and green pebbles. Woodward.

ANGULOSITY. n. f. [from angulus.] Angularity; cornered form. Dill.

ANGULOUS. adj. [from angle.] Hooked; angular.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, and angulus involutions; since the coherence of the parts of these will be of as difficult a conception. Gianvelli.

ANGUST. adj. [angustus, Lat.] Narrow; strait.

ANGUSTATION. n. f. [from angustus.] The act of making narrow; straitening; the state of being narrowed.

The cause may be referred either to the grossness of the blood, or to obstruction of the vein somewhere in its passage, by some angustation upon it by part of the tumour. Wijeman.

ANGELATION. n. f. [angelia, Lat.] The act of panting; the state of being out of breath.

ANGLOSS. adj. [angulus, Lat.] Out of breath; panting; laboured of being out of breath. Dill.

ANGUSTED. adj. [angustus, Fr.] Frustrated; brought to nothing.

ANGHTS. adv. [from a for at, and night.] In the night time.

Sir Toby, you must come in earlier anghts; your niece, my lady, takes great exceptions at your ill hours.

ANGIL. n. f. The stirub from whose leaves and stalks indigo is prepared. Swartz.

ANIMENSES. n. f. [animatus, Lat.] The state of being an old animal.
ANIMALE. n. f. woman; the old age of women
ANIMABLE. adj. [from animate.] That which may be put into life, or receive animation. Dict.

ANIMADVERSION. n. f. [animadversio, Lat.]

1. Reproof; severe censure; blame.

He dissuaded their commissioners with severe and sharp animadversion. Cicero.

2. Punishment. When the object of animadversion is mentioned, it has the particle in or upon before it.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is usual to have the controversy handled by pamphlets on both sides; without the least animadversion upon the authors. Swift.

3. Inlaw.

An ecclesiastical censure, and an ecclesiastical animadversion, are different things; for a censure has a relation to a spiritual punishment, but an animadversion has only a respect to a temporal one; as, degradation, and the delivering the person over to the secular court. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANIMADVERSER. adj. [from animadversio.] That has the power of judging.

The representation of objects to the soul, the only animadverser principle, are conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of sense. Glavio's Sciencia.

ANIMADVERSERNESS. n. f. [from animadverser.] The power of animadverting, or making judgment. Dict.

TO ANIMADVERTISE. v. n. [animadvertis, Lat.]

1. To put censures upon.

I should not animadvert on him, who was otherwise a painful observer of the decorum of the stage, if he had not used extreme severity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakespear for that fault. Dryden on Dramatick Puffs.

2. To inflict punishments. In both senses with the particle upon.
 If the Author of the universe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher state of being? Grew's Cosmog. Sacra.

ANIMADVERTER. n. f. [from animadvertis.] He that passes censures, or inflicts punishments.

God is a strict observer of, and a severe animadverter upon, such as presume to partake of those mysteries, without such a preparation. South.

ANIMAL. n. f. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporeal, distinct, on the one side, from pure spirit; on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are such beings, which, besides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endued also with sensation and spontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives two schemes of tables of them.

Animals are either
 Sanguineous, that is, such as have blood, which breathe either by

Lungs, having either

Two ventricles in their heart, and those either

Viviparous.

Or Aquatick, as the whale kind;

Or Terrestrial, as quadrupeds;

Or Oviparous, as birds.

But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoises, and serpents.

Gills, as all sanguineous fishes, except the whale kind.

Exsanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into Greater, and those either,

Naked,

Or Terrestrial, as naked snails;

Or Aquatick, as the poulp, cuttle-fish, &c.

Covered with a tegument, either

Or Crustaceous, as lobsters and crab-fish;

Or Testaceous, either

Univalve, as limpets;

Bivalve, as oysters, muscles, cockles;

Turbinate, as periwinkles, snails, &c.

Lesser, as insects of all sorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, which are either

Hoofed, which are either

Whale-footed or hoofed, as the horse and ass;

Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into

Two principal parts, called bifida, either

Such as chew not the cud, as swine;

Ruminant, or such as chew the cud; divided into

Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.

Or Brev-kind,

Or Sheep-kind,

Or Goat-kind.

Such as have solid, branched and deciduous horns, as the deer-kind.

Four parts, or quadrifida, as the rhinoceros and hippopotamus.

Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into

Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel kind;

Many toes or claws; either

Undivided, as the elephant;

Divided, which have either

Broad nails, and an human shape, as apes;
 Or Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in respect of their teeth, are divided into such as have

Many fore-teeth, or cutters in each jaw;

The greater, which have

A shorter snout and rounder head, as the cat-kind;

A longer snout and head, as the dog-kind.

The lesser, the vermin or weasel-kind.

Only two large and remarkable fore-teeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare-kind. Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the same specific gravity with the animal juices, and as consisting of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Aristoteli in Aimentis.

Some of the animated substances have various organical or instrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a spring of life within themselves, as beasts, birds, fishes and insects; these are called animals. Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principles of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, such as we find in plants, herbs, and trees. Watt's Logic.

2. By way of contempt, we say of a stupid man, that he is a stupid animal.

ANIMAL. adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That which belongs or relates to animals.

There are other things in the world of spirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confused; such as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converse with each other. Watt's Logic.

2. Animal functions, distinguished from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind, as, the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is opposed, on one side, to intellectual, and, on the other, to vegetable.

4. Animal is used in opposition to spiritual or rational; as, the animal nature.

ANIMALCULE. n. f. [animalculum, Lat.] A small animal; particularly those which are in their first and smallest state.

We are to know, that they all come of the seeds of animalcules of their own kind, that were before laid there. Ray.

ANIMALITY. n. f. [from animal.] The state of animal existence.

The word animal there only signifies human animality. In the minor proposition, the word animal, for the same reason, signifies the animality of a grove: thence it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the conclusion upon. Watt's.

TO ANIMATE. v. a. [animare, Lat.]

1. To quicken; to make alive; to give life to; as, the soul animates the body; man must have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing.

But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,

And the mute strings with vocal fuses inspire;

Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,

Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;

None can record their heavenly praise so well

As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

3. To encourage; to incite.

The more to animate the people, he stood on high, from whence he might be best heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Kenil's History of the Turki.

ANIMATE. adj. [from To animate.] Alive; possessing animal life.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main differences between animate and inanimate, are two: the first is, that the spirits of things animate are all contained within themselves, and are branched in veins and secret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside, and whereto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in snow. Bacon's Natural History.

Nobler birth

Of creatures animate with gradual life,

Of growth, sense, reason, all sunn'd up in man.

There are several topics there used against the atheism and idolatry of the heathens; such as the visible marks of divine wisdom and goodness in the works of the creation, the vital union of soul with matter, and the admirable structure of animate bodies, and the like. Benley's Sermons.

ANIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively; vigorous.

Warriors animate the fires with animated fouds;

Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

ANIMATENESS. n. f. [from animate.] The state of being animated. Dict.

ANIMATION. n. f. [from animate.]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Y

Plants

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the first producat, which is the word of animation. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The state of being enlivened.

ANIMATIVE. adj. [from animate] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMATOR. n. f. [from animate.] That which gives life; that which implants a principle of life.

Those bodies being of a congenious nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor, and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite to their animator. Hirston's Vulgar Errours.

ANIMOSE. adj. [animosus, Lat.] Full of spirit; hot; vehement.

ANIMOSNESS. n. f. [from animos.] Spirit; heat; vehemence of temper. Ditt.

ANIMOSITY. n. f. [animositas, Lat.] Vehemence of hatred; passionate malignity. It implies rather the disposition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itself.

They were lure to bring passion, animosity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence soever they had from others.

If there is not some method found out for allaying these heats and animosities among the fair sex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Adelphi's Plebeian.

No religious felt ever carried their aversions for each other to greater heights than our state parties have done; who, the more to inflame their passions, have mixed religious and civil animosities together; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

ANISE. n. f. [anijum, Lat.] A species of apium or parsley, with large sweet fented seeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for use, because the seeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

The feed of this plant has a sweetish taste, intermixed with something pungent and bitter, is reputed an aromatick, and prescribed not barely as a carminative against wind, but also as a pectoral, stomachick, and digestive. Clambers.

Ye pay the tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxv. 25.

ANKER. n. f. [anker, Dut.] A liquid measure chiefly used at Amsterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two stekans: each steckan consists of sixteen mingles: the mingle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Clambers.

ANKLE. n. f. [androp, Sax. anclit, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much swelled and ulcerated on the inside, in several places. Wifeman.

My simple system shall suppose,
That Alma enters at the toes;
That then the mounts by joint degrees
Up to the ankles, legs, and knees.

ANKLE-BONE. n. f. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle. Prior.

The shin-bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow, the ankle-bone will show itself by a shadow given underneath, as the knee. Peasam on Drawing.

ANNALIST. n. f. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

I wonder my author should be offended, especially since their own annalist has given the same title to that of Symium. Atterb.

ANNALS. n. f. without singular number. [annales, Lat.] Histories digested in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate!
Through such a train of woes if I should run,
The day would sooner than the tale be done! Dryd. Virg.

We are assured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumstances of distress, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers's Sermons.

ANNATS. n. f. without singular. [annates, Lat.]

1. First fruits; because the rate of first fruits paid of spiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cecil.

2. Masses said in the Romish church for the space of a year, or for any other time, either for the soul of a person deceased, or for the benefit of a person living. Asyffe's Parergon.

TO ANNEAL. v. a. [alan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glass, that the colours laid on it may pierce through. But when thou dost anneal in glass thy story,
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win.

When you purpoe to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven; or, for want thereof, take a blue flane, which being made fit for the swardfoid oven, lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peasam on Drawing.

Which her own inward symmetry reveal'd.
And like a picture bone, in glass anneal'd. Dryden's Fables.

2. To heat glass after it is blown, that it may not break.

3. To heat any thing in such a manner as to give it the true temper.

TO ANNEX. v. a. [annexo, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.]

1. To unite at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.

2. To unite; as, a smaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom.

3. To unite a posterior; annexion always presupposing something: thus we may say, punishment is annexed to guilt; but not guilt to punishment.

Concerning fate or destiny, of which the opinions of those learned men that have written thereof, may be safely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an inevitable necessity, and made it more general and universally powerful than it is. Raleigh's History of the World.

Nations will decline to low

From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton's Par. Lost.
I mean not the authority, which is annex'd to your office;
I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happiness always to the exercise of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers's Sermons.

ANNEX. n. f. [from to annex.] The thing annexed; addition.

Failing in his first attempt to be but like the highest in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the same on earth, and hath accordingly assumed the annexes of divinity. Bruce's Vulgar Errours.

ANNEXATION. n. f. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.
If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedness, which Christ so vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promise, that the whole body will be full of light, Matt. vi. that all other Christian virtues will, by way of concomitance of annexation, attend them. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Union; coalition; conjunction.
How these annexations of benefices first came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great dispute. Asyffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANNEXION. n. f. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is necessary to engage the fears of men, by the annexion of such penalties as will overbalance temporal pleasure. Rogers.

ANNEXMENT. n. f. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.

2. The thing annexed.

Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boist'rous ruin. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

ANNIHILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of existence.

TO ANNIHILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of existence.

It is impossible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that as it was the work of the omnipotency of God, to make somewhat of nothing; so it requirith the like omnipotency to turn somewhat into nothing. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou taught'st me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee.

T' invent and practise this one way, t' annihilate all three. Deane.

He despair'd of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilat'd his mercy. Bacon's Vulgar Errours.

Whose friendship had stand against assaults, strong enough to annihilate the friendship of puny minds; such an one has reached true constancy. South.

Some imagined, water sufficient to a deluge was created, and when the business was done, disbanded, and annihilat'd. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To destroy, so as to make the thing otherwise than it was.

The flood that hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilat'd, this place, so as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. To annul; to destroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reason, that any one commonwealth should annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Histor.

ANNIHILATION. n. f. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing.

The state of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very effence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hobbes.

That knowledge, which as spirits we obtain,
Is to be valu'd in the midst of pain:

Annihilation were to lose heav'n more;
We are not quite exting'd, where thought can soar. Dryden.

ANNIVERSARY. n. f. [anniversarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the course of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive primitive Christians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praise God for them, and to observe the anniversary of their sufferings.

Stillinger's Defence.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniversary day.

Donne had never seen Mrs Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniversary-epitaph. Dryd.

3. Anniversary is an office in the Romish church, celebrated not only once a year, but which ought to be said daily through the year, for the soul of the deceased. Aylife.

ANNIVERSARY. adj. [anniversary, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, most constantly finishing its anniversary vicissitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worship to a creature, as inconsistent with Christianity; but confess the honour and esteem for the martyrs, which they expressed by keeping their anniversary days, and recommending their example. Stillinger's Defence.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the seventeen hundred and fifty-first year from the birth of our Saviour.

ANNUIANCE. n. f. [from annui, but not now in use.]

It has a double signification, being as well for any hurt done either to a public place, as highway, bridge, or common river, or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroachings, or such like means; as also, for the writ that is brought upon this transgression. See NUISANCE, the word now used. Blount.

ANOLIS. n. f. An American animal, like a lizard.

ANNOTATION. n. f. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books; notes.

It might appear very improper to publish annotations, without the text itself whereunto they relate. Boyle.

ANNOTATOR. n. f. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a scholar; a commentator.

I have not that respect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton.

TO ANNOUNCE. v. a. [annunciare, Fr. annuncius, Lat.]

1. To publish; to proclaim.

Of the Messiah I have heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length Announc'd by Gabriel with the first I knew. Parad. Reg.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial sentence.

Thou, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publish laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

TO ANNOY. v. a. [anoyre, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to tease; to molest.

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys him;
He heaps in inward grief, that most destroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous presence and sweet company,
In full content he there did long enjoy;

Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealousy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Q.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick, and fens were under air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
Among the pleasant villages, and farms

Adjourn'd, from each thing met conceives delight.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Insects seldom use their offensive weapons, unless provoked:
Let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray.

ASSAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] Injury; molestation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakspeare.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring less annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themselves they cannot slay. Donne.

What then remains, but, after past annoy,
To take the good vicissitude of joy. Dryd. Feb.

ASSAULT. n. f. [from annoy]

1. That which annoys; that which hurts.

A grain, a dull, a goat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious fence. Shakspeare.

Crows, ravens, rocks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mistaken's Husbandry.

2. The state of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The spite venom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hosier.

The greatest annoyance and disturbance of mankind, has been from one of those two things, force or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terror of any besieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Hilliers.

ASSULT. n. f. [from To annoy.] The person that annoys.

ANNUAL. adj. [annuus, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly.

Annual for me, the grape, the rose, renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew.

2. That which is reckoned by the year.

The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you; to which

A thousand pounds a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakspeare.

3. That which lasts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annuals, seemeth to be caused by the over-expect of the sap; which being prevented, they will superannuate, if they stand warm. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Every tree may, in some sense, be said to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit, proceeding from the coat that was superinduced over the wood the last year. Ray.

ANNUALLY. adv. [from annuus.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it sufficient to signify a heart; because the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and unto fifty years annually encreaseth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The whole strength of a nation is the utmost that a prince can raise annually from his subjects. Swift.

ANNUITANT. n. f. [from annuit.] He that possesses or receives an annuity.

ANNUITY. n. f. [annuit, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The difference between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the grantor, or his heirs, that have assets by descent. The second difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity against the grantor, his heirs, or successors; but of a rent, the same actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for assets, because it is no freehold in law; nor shall be put in execution upon a statute merchant, statute staple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowell.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the son of one earl, and brother to another, who supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

TO ANNUAL. v. a. [fr m n-let.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to abolish.

That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and whoever destroys this authority, does, in effect, annul the law. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light the pure work of God to me's extinct,
And all her various objects of delight

Annul'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd. Milton's Samson Agonist.

ANNUAL. adj. [from annuus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, rise up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Croyn.

ANNUAL. adj. [from annuus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

Because continual respiration is necessary, the wind-pipe is made with annular cartilages, that the sides of it may not stick and fall together. Ray.

ANNULET. n. f. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.

2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of distinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.

3. Annulets are also a part of the coat-armour of several families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and jurisdiction; it being the custom of prelates to receive their investiture per baculum & annulum.

4. [In architecture.] The small square members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.

5. Annulet is also used for a narrow flat moulding common to other parts of the column; so called, because it encompasses the column round. Chambers.

TO ANNUNCIATE. v. a. [annunciare, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to something beforementioned.

ANNUNCIATION. n. f. [annunciatio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

TO ANNUNCIATE. v. a. [annunciare, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate something that has fallen out: a word not in popular use.

ANNUNCIATION-DAY. n. f. [from annunciatio.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's salutation of the blessed virgin; solemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our blessed saviour: and so upon all the festivals of the year. Taylor.

ANODYNE. adj. [from an and dyne.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet durst the not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping still the nobler parts were found;

But strove with anodynes to assuage the smart,
And mildly thus her medicine did impart. Dryden.

Anodynes, or absters of pain of the alimentary kind, are such things as relax the tension of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient substances; those things which destroy the particular acrimony which occasions the pain, or what deadens the sensation of the brain, by procuring sleep. Arbuth.

TO ANOIN. v. a. [anoint, encuire; pr. ext. anoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed let me be with deadly venom,
And die, ere men can say, God gave the queen. Shak.
Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit. Dut.

2. To fugar; to be rubbed upon.

Warm waters then in brazen caldrons born,
Are pour'd to wash his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint. Dryd.

3. To consecrate by unction.

I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce fillet
In his anointed flesh tickle his itching fangs. Shaksp.

ANOMALY. n. f. [from anomalos.] The person that anoints.
ANOMALISM. n. f. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity;
deviation from the common rule. Dict.

ANOMALISTICAL. adj. [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in astronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth passeth through its orbit, distinct from the tropical year.

ANOMALOUS. adj. [a priv. and nomos.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things:
It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in astronomy, to the seemingly irregular motions of the planets.

There will arise anomalous disturbances not only in civil and artificial, but also in military officers. Brown's Vul. Er.

He being acquainted with some characters of every speech, you may at pleasure make him understand anomalous pronunciation. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Metals are gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, and iron: to which we may join that anomalous body, quicksilver or mercury.
Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.

ANOMALOUSLY. adv. [from anomalous.] Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.

Eve was not solemnly begotten, but suddenly framed, and anomalously proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANOMALY. n. f. [from anomalos, Fr. anomalie, Lat. anomalos.]
Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

If we should chance to find a mother decharging her daughter, as such monsters have been seen, we must change this upon a peculiar anomaly and benefits of nature. South.

I do not pursue the many pseudographies in use, but intend to shew how most of these anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better supplied. Holder.

ANOMY. n. f. [a priv. and nomos.] Breach of law.
anomalos proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANOMY. n. f. [from anomalos, Fr. anomalie, Lat. anomalos.]
Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

1. Quickly; soon; in a short time.

A little snow, tumbl'd about,
Anon becomes a mountain. Shakespeare.

Will they come abroad anon? B. Johnson.

Shall we see young Oloon? B. Johnson.

However, witness, heav'n!

Heav'n, witness thou anon! while we discharge

Freely our part. Milton's Par. Lost.

He was not without design at that present, as shall be made out anon; meaning by that device to withdraw himself. Clas.

Still as I did the leaves inspire,

With such a purple light they shone,

As if they had been made of fire,

And spreading so, would flame anon. Hall.

2. Sometimes; now and then; at other times. In this sense is used anon and anon. Par. Reg.

I full forty days he pa's'd, whether on hill

Sometimes, anon in shady vale, each night,

Or ha'nd in one cave, is not revealed. Par. Reg.

ANONYMOUS. adj. [a priv. and onymos.] Wanting a name.

These animals serve also for food to another anonymous

insect of the waters. Ray on the Creation.

They would forthwith publish flanders unpunished, the authors being anonymous, the immediate publishers thereof skulking.

Notes on the Dunciad.

ANONYMOUSLY. adv. [from anonymous.] Without a name.

I would know, whether the edition is to come out anony- ously, among complaints of spurious editions? Swift.

ANONYMOUSLY. adv. [from anonymous.] Inappreciably, or loathing of food.

Quincy.

ANOTHER. adj. [from an and alios.]

1. Not the same.

He that will not lay a foundation for perpetual disorder, must of necessity find another site of government than that. Locke.

2. One more; a new addition to the former number.

— A fourth?

Start eye!

What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?

As yet yet?—a seventh! I'll see no more. Shaksp.

3. Any other; any one else.

If one can sin against another, the judge shall judge him. 1 Samuel.

Why not of her? prefer'd above the rest,
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd; }
So had another been, where he his vows address'd. Dryden's Fables.

4. Not one's self.

A man shall have diffused his life, his self, and his whole concernments so far, that he can weep his sorrows with another's eyes; when he has another heart besides his own, both to share, and to support his grief. South.

5. Widely different; much altered.

When the soul is beaten from its station, and the mounds of virtue are broken down, it becomes quite another thing from what it was before. South.

ANOTHERGAINES. adj. [See ANOTHERGUESSES.] Of another kind. This word I have found only in Sidney. South.

If my father had not plaid the hasty fool, I might have had another gains husband than Danabas. Sidney.

ANOTHERGUESSES. adj. [This word, which though rarely used in writing, is somewhat frequent in colloquial language, I conceive to be corrupted from another guess; that is, of a different guess, or manner, or form.] Of a different kind.

O! Hocus! where art thou? It used to go in another guess manner in thy time. Arbutnot.

ANSIABLE. adj. [a priv. and ans.] Having handles; or something in the form of handles.

TO ANSWER. v. n. [The etymology is uncertain; the Saxons had andspayan, but in another sense; the Dutch have en-

ten rden.]

1. To speak in return to a question.

Are we succor'd? are the Moors removed?

Answer these questions first, and then a thousand more. Dryd.

2. To speak in opposition.

No man was able to answer him a word. Matt.

If it be said, we may discover the elementary ingredients of things, I answer, that it is not necessary that such a discovery should be practicable. Boyle.

3. To be accountable for.

Some men have sinned in the principles of humanity, and mult answer for not being men. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If there be any absurdity in this, our author mult answer for it. Locke.

4. To vindicate; to give a justificatory account of.

The night, so impudently fixed for my last, made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my family. Swift.

5. To give an account.

How they have been since received, and so well improved, let those answer either to God or man, who have been the authors and promoters of such vice counsel. Tenple.

He wants a father to protect his youth,

And rear him up to virtue. You must bear

I he future blame, and answer to the world,

When you refuse the only honest means

Of taking care of him. South.

6. To correspond to; to suit with.

In water lace answereth to lace; so the heart of man to man.

Proctor.

7. To be equivalent to; to stand for something else.

A teat is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry; but money answereth all things. Ecc.

8. To satisfy any claim or petition.

Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt

Of this proud king, who studies day and night

To answer all the debt he owes unto you,

Ev'n with the bloody payments of your deaths. Shaksp.

Men no sooner find their appetites unsatisfied, than they complain the times are injurious. Rollin.

9. To act reciprocally upon.

Say, do'st thou yet the Roman harp command?

To the strings answer to thy noble hand? Dryd.

10. To stand as opposite or correlative to something else.

There can but two things create love, perfection and un-fulness; to which answer, on our part, T. Admiration; and

2. Desire; and both these are centered in love. Taylor.

11. To bear proportion to.

He desired, that proper officers might search me; for probably I might carry several weapons, which must needs be dangerous things; if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a petition. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.

Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity; and when that is done, all is done that lies in our power: the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury.

13. To comply with.

He does it at touches of this fruit,

Till I and my affairs are answer'd. Shaksp.

14. To succeed; to produce the wished event.

Jason followed her counsel, whereto when the event had an- swer'd, he again demanded the fleece. Rollin.

We fee likewise, that much water draweth forth the juice of the body insatiated, but little water is imbued by the body; and this

this is a principal cause, why, in operations upon bodies for their venison or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not answer the trial in small; and so deceiveth many.

Bacon's Natural History.

15. To appear to any call, or authoritative summons; in which sense, though figuratively, the following passage may be, perhaps taken.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare.

16. To be over-against any thing.

Fire answers fire, and by their pale beams,
Each battle sees the other's umber'd faces. Shakespeare.

ANSWER. n. f. [from Te answer.]

1. That which is said, whether in speech or writing, in return to a question, or position.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in wine than in your fight, wine is good. Locke.

How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready answer to the questions which he shall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the sick and imprisoned? Atterbury.

2. In law, a confutation of a charge exhibited against a person.

A personal answer ought to have three qualities; it ought to be pertinent to the matter in hand; it ought to be absolute and unqualified; it ought to be clear and certain. Aylmer.

ANSWER-JOBBER. n. f. [from answer and jobber.] He that makes a trade of writing answers.

What disgusts me from having any thing to do with answer-jobbers, is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

ANSWERABLE. adj. [from answer.]

1. That to which a reply may be made; that which may be answered; as, the argument, though subtle, is yet answerable.

2. Obligated to give an account, or stand the trial of an accusation.

Every chief of every kindred or family should be answerable, and bound to bring forth every one of that kindred, at all times to be justified, when he should be required, or charged with any treason, felony, &c. Spenser.

Will any man argue, that if a physician should manifestly prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God? Swift.

He cannot think ambition more justly laid to their charge, than to other men; because that would be to make church government answerable for the errors of human nature. Swift.

3. Correspondent.

It was but such a likeness as an imperfect glass doth give, answerable enough in some features and colours, but erring in others. Bacon.

4. The daughters of Atlas were ladies, who, accompanying such as came to be registered among the worthies, brought forth children answerable in quality to those that begot them. Raleigh.

5. Proportionate.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

The following, by certain estates of men, answerable to that which a great person himself professeth, as of soldiers to him that hath been employed in the wars, hath been a thing well taken even in monarchies. Bacon.

If answerable style I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness, who deigns
Her nightly visitation unimprov'd. Milton.

6. Equal.

There be no kings whose means are answerable unto other men's desires. Raleigh.

7. Relative; correlative.

That, to every petition for things needful, there should be some answerable sentence of thanks provided particularly to follow, is not requisite. Hooker.

ANSWERABLY. adv. [from answerable.] In due proportion; with proper consequence; suitably.

The broader seas are, if they be intire, and free from islands, they are answerably deeper. Brevintus.

It bears light, and more adlive sorts, into the atmosphere, to a greater or lesser height, answerably to the greater or lesser intensities of the heat. Woodward.

ANSWERABLENESS. n. f. [from answerable.] The quality of being answerable. Dict.

ANSWERER. n. f. [from answer.]

1. He that answers; he that speaks in return to what another has spoken.

2. He that manages the controversy against one that has written first.

It is very unfair in any writer to employ ignorance and malice together; because it gives his answerer double work. Swift.

ANT. n. f. [æmetæ, Sax. which Junius imagines, not without probability, to have been first contracted to ænt, and then followed to ant.] An emmet; a pismire. A small insect that lives in great numbers together in hillocks.

We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no lab'ring in the winter. Shakespeare.

Metthink, all cities now but ant-hills are;
Where when the several labourers I see
For children, house, provision, taking pain,
They're all but ants, carrying eggs, straw, and grain. Dennet.
Learn each small people's genius, policies;
The ant's republic, and the realm of bees;
How those in common all their stores below,
And anarchy without confusion know. Pope.

ANT-BEAR. n. f. [from ant and bear.] An animal that feeds on ants.

Divers quadrupeds feed upon insects; and some live wholly upon them; as two sorts of tamanduas upon ants, which therefore are called in English ant-bears. Ray.

ANT-HILL, or HILLOCK. n. f. [from ant and hill.] The small protuberances of earth in which ants make their nests.

Put blue flowers into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red; because the ants drop upon them their stinging liquor, which hath the effect of oil of vitriol. Ray.

Those who have seen ant-hills, have easily perceived those small heaps of corn about their nests. Addison.

ANT. A contradiction for and it, or rather and if it; as, 'twill please you; that is, and if it please you.

ANTAGONIST. n. f. [ἀντί and ἄγωνίζω.]

1. One who contends with another; an opponent. It implies generally a personal and particular opposition.

Our antagonists in these controversies may have met with some not unlike to Ithacius. Hooker.

What was set before him,
To heave, pull, draw, and break, he fill perform'd,
None daring to appear antagonist. Milton.

It is not fit, that the history of a person should appear, till the prejudice both of his antagonists and adherents be softened and subdued. Addison.

2. Contrary.

The short club consists of those who are under five feet; ours is to be composed of such as are above six. These we look upon as the two extremes; and antagonists of the species; considering all these as neutrals, who fill up the middle space. Addison.

3. In anatomy, the antagonist is that muscle which counteracts some others.

A relaxation of a muscle must produce a spasm in its antagonist, because the equilibrium is destroyed. Arbucut.

Te ANTAGONIZE. v. n. [ἀντί and ἄγωνίζω.] To contend against another. Dict.

ANTALGIC. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ἄλγος, pain.] That which lessens pain; anodyne.

ANTANACLASIS. n. f. [Lat. from ἀντιανάκλησις, from ἀντιανα-κλῶ, to drive back.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, when the same word is repeated in a different, if not in a contrary signification; as, In thy youth learn some craft, that in old age thou may'st get thy living without craft. Craft, in the first place, signifies science or occupation; in the second, deceit or subtilty.

2. It is also a returning to the matter at the end of a long parenthesis; as, Shall that heart (which does not only feel them, but hath all motion of his life placed in them) shall that heart, I say, &c. Smith's Rhetoric.

ANTAPHRODISIACK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ἀφροδίτη, Venus.] That which is efficacious against the venereal disease.

ANTAPOPLECTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀποπληξίς, an apoplexy.] Good against an apoplexy.

ANTARCTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀρκτικός, the bear or northern constellation.] The southern pole, so called, as opposite to the northern.

Downward as fire as antarctic. Milton.

They that had sail'd from near th' antarctic pole,
Their treasure safe, and all their vessels whole,
In sight of their dear country ruin'd be,
Without the guilt of either rock or sea. Waller.

ANTATHRISTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀθεΐστις, the goat.] Good against the goat.

ANTASTHMATICK. adj. [from ἀντί and ἀσθμα.] Good against the asthma.

ANTE. A Latin particle signifying before, which is frequently used in compositions; as, antediluvian, before the flood; antechamber, a chamber leading into another apartment.

ANTEACT. n. f. [from ante and act.] A former act.

ANTEAMBULATION. n. f. [from ante and ambulatio, Lat.] A walking before. Dict.

Te ANTECEDE. v. n. [from ante, before, and cede, to go.] To precede; to go before.

It seems more consonant to reason, that the fabric of the world did not long antecede its motion. Hale.

ANTECEDENCE. n. f. [from antecede.] The act or state of going before; precedence.

It is impossible that mixed bodies can be eternal, because there is necessarily a pre-existence of the simple bodies, and an antecedence of their constitution preceding the existence of mixed bodies. Hale.

ANTECEDENT. adj. [antecedent, Lat.]

1. Going before; preceding. Antecedent is used, I think, only with regard to time; precedent, with regard both to time and place.

To assert, that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it, when, without any antecedent sin of his, it was impossible for him not to fall, seems a thing that highly reproaches essential equity and goodness. South.

2. It has to be before the thing which it is supposed to follow.

No one is so hardy as to say, God is in his debt; that he owed him a nobler being: for existence must be antecedent to merit. Collin.

Did the blood first exist, antecedent to the formation of the heart? But that is to set the effect before the cause. Bentley.

ANTECEDENT. n. f. [antecedent, Lat.]

1. That which goes before.

A duty of so mighty an influence, that it is indeed the necessary antecedent, if not also the direct cause of a sinner's return to God. South.

2. In grammar, the noun to which the relative is subjoined; as, the man who comes hither.

3. In logic, the first proposition of an enthymeme or argument, constituting only of two propositions.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move: if there be no fire, there will be no smoke. The first part of these propositions, or that wherein the condition is contained, is called the antecedent, the other is called the consequent. Hart's Logic.

ANTECEDENTLY. adv. [from antecedent.] In the state of antecedence, or going before; previously.

We consider him antecedently to his creating, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities. South.

ANTECESSOR. n. f. [Lat'n.] One who goes before, or leads another. Dial.

ANTECHAMBER. n. f. [from ante before, and chamber; it is generally written, improperly, antichamber.] The chamber that leads to the chief apartment.

The empress has the antechamber path, And this way moves with a disorder'd haste. Dryden.

His antechamber, and room of audience, are little square chambers wainscoted. Adelphi.

ANTECURSOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who runs before. Dial.

ANTEDECE. v. a. [from ante and dece, datum, Lat.]

1. To date earlier than the real time, so as to confer a fictitious antiquity.

Now thou hast lov'd me one whole day, To-morrow when thou leav'st, what wilt thou say?

Wilt thou then antedate some new-made vow, Or, say that now

We are not just those persons, which we were? Dunke.

By reading a man does, as it were, antedate his life, and make himself contemporary with the ages past. Collins.

2. To take something before the proper name.

Our joys bore it, it can improve, And antedate the bliss above. Pope.

ANTEDEILUVIAN. adj. [from ante before, and diluvium a deluge.]

1. Existing before the deluge.

During the time of the deluge, all the stone and marble of the antediluvian earth were totally dissolved. Hesiodus.

2. Relating to things existing before the deluge.

The text intends only the line of Seth, condescendable unto the genealogy of our saviour, and the antediluvian chronology. Heaven's Fulgor Errans.

ANTEDEILUVIAN. n. f. One that lived before the flood.

We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians, that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial. Bentley.

ANTELOPE. n. f. [The etymology is uncertain.] A goat with curled or wreathed horns.

The antelope, a wolf both fierce and fell. F. Queen.

ANTERIOR. adj. [from ante, before, and meridian, noon.]

Before noon.

ANTERIOR. adj. [Lat.] against, and vom, to vomit.] That which has the power of calming the stomach; of preventing or stopping vomiting.

ANTERIOR. adj. [ante, before, and mundus, the world.] That which was before the creation of the world.

ANTERIOR. n. f. [from ante and nander.] The number that precedes another.

Whatever virtue is in numbers, for conducting to confident notes, is rather to be ascribed to the antenunder, than to the entire number, as that the found returneth after six, or after twelve; so that the seventh or thirteenth is not the matter, but the sixth or the twelfth. Bacon.

ANTEPAST. n. f. [from ante, before, and pastum, to feed.] A foretaste; something taken before the proper time.

We, we to expect our bliss only in the satiating our appetites, it might be reasonable, by frequent antepasts, to excite our pull for that profuse perpetual meal. Dancy of Pity.

ANTEPAST. n. f. [Antepastum, Lat.] The last syllable but two, as the syllable te in antepast: a term of grammar.

ANTEPASTIC. adj. [anti and pastum.] A medicine against convulsions.

That beyond is antidotal, lapis judaeus diuretical, coral antepastical, we will not deny. Fulgor Errans.

ANTIPPOSE. v. a. [antepos, Lat.] To set one thing before another; to prefer one thing to another. Dial.

ANTIPREDICAMENT. n. f. [antepredicamentum, Lat.] Something to be known in the study of logic, previously to the doctrine of the predicament.

ANTERIORITY. n. f. [from anterior.] Priority; the state of being before in time or situation.

ANTERIOUR. adj. [anteprior, Lat.] Going before, either with regard to time or place.

If that be the anterior or upper part wherein the fenses are placed, and that the posterior and lower part, which is opposite thereunto, there is no inferior or former part in this animal; for the fenses being placed at both extremes, make both ends anterior, which is impossible. Fulgor Errans.

ANTES. n. f. [Latin.] Pillars of large dimensions that support the front of a building.

ANTESTOMACH. n. f. [from ante, before, and stomach.] A cavity which leads into the stomach.

In birds there is no mallocation or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but it is immediately swallowed into a kind of antestomach, which I have observed in piscivorous birds. Ray.

ANTHILLM'S THICK. adj. [anti against, and anthill, a worm.] That which kills worms.

Anthelminticks, or contrary to worms, are things which are known by experience to kill them, as oils, or honey taken upon an empty stomach. Aschm.

ANTHEM. n. f. [antepast, a hymn sung in alternate parts, and should therefore be written antepast.] A holy song; a song performed as part of divine service.

God Moses first, then David did inspire, To compose anthems for his heavenly choir. Dryden.

There is no passion that is not finely expressed in those parts of the inspired writings, which are proper for divine song and anthems. Adm.

ANTI'ICIPATE. v. a. [anticipate, Lat.]

1. To take something sooner than another, so as to prevent him that comes after.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man, to draw him early into his church; to give piety the prepossession, and so to engage him in holiness. Hammond.

2. To take up before the time, at which any thing might be regularly had.

I find I have anticipated already, and taken up from Boccaccio, before I come to him; but I am of the temper of kings, who are for present money, no matter how they pay it. Dryden.

3. To foretell, or take an impression of something, which is not yet, as if it really was.

The life of the desperate equals the anxiety of death, who but ad the life of the damned, and anticipate the deceptions of hell. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Why should we Anticipate our sorrows? 'tis like those

That die for fear of death.

4. To prevent any thing by crowding in before it; to preclude.

Time, thou anticipate'st my dread exploits:

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,

Unless the deed go with it.

I am far from pretending to instruct the profession, or anticipating their directions to such as are under their government. Shakespeare.

Arctostaphylos Aliments.

If our Apostle had maintained such an anticipating principle even upon our souls before all exercise of reason; what did he talk of seeking the Lord, seeing that the knowledge of him was innate and perpetual. Bentley.

ANTI'CIPIATION. n. f. [from anticipate.]

1. The act of taking up something before its time.

The golden number gives the new moon four days too late, by reason of the aforesaid anticipation, and our neglect of it. Heder on Time.

2. Foretelling.

It is not enough to be miserable when the time comes, unless we make ourselves so before-hand, and by anticipation. E. Strange.

If we really live under the hope of future happiness, we shall taste it by way of anticipation and forethought, an image of it will meet our minds often, and flay there, as all pleasing expectations do. Atterbury.

3. Opinion implanted before the reasons of that opinion can be known.

The east and west, the north and south, have the same anticipation concerning our supreme disposer of things. Stillingfleet.

What nation is there, that, without any teaching, have not a kind of anticipation, or preconceived notion of a Deity? Derham's Physico-Theology.

ANTI'CK. adj. [probably from antiquus, ancient, as things out of use appear old.] Odd; ridiculously wild; buffoon in gesticulation.

What! dares the slave

Come hither cover'd with an antick face,

And leer and scorn at our solemnity.

Shakespeare.

Of all our antick fights, and pageantry,

Which English idiots run in crowds to see.

Dryden.

The prize was to be conferred upon the whistler, that could go through his tune without laughing, though provoked by the antick postures of a merry Andrew, who was to play tricks. Addison, Freeholder.

ANTI'CK. n. f.

1. He that plays antick; he that uses odd gesticulation: a buffoon.

Within the hollow crown,

That rounds the mortal temples of a king,

Keeps death his court; and there the antick fits,

Scorning his state.

Shakespeare.

If you should smile, he grows impatient.—

Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves,

Were he the veriest antick in the world.

Shakespeare.

2. Odd appearance.

A work of rich entail, and curious mold,

Worn with antick, and wild imagery.

Fairy Queen.

For ev'n at first reflection the espies

Such toys, such anticks, and such vanities,

As the retires and shrinks for shame and fear.

De Witt.

To ANTI'CK. v. a. [from antick.] To make anticks.

Mine own tongue

Splits what it speaks; the wild disguise hath almost Anticks us all.

Shakespeare.

ANTI'CKLY. adv. [from antick.] In an antick manner; with odd postures, or wild gesticulations.

Scrambling, outcasing, fashion-mongering boys;

That lye, and cogy, and flout, deprave and lander;

Go antickly, and shew an outward hideousness,

And speak of half a dozen dangerous words.

Shatej. Much ado about Nothing.

ANTI'CLIMAX. n. f. [from ἀντί and κλίμαξ.] A sentence in which the last part is lower than the first.

A certain figure which was unknown to the ancients, is called by some an anticlimax. Addison.

This diffich is frequently mentioned as an example.

Next comes Dalhousie the great god of war,

Lieutenant col'nel to the earl of Mar.

ANTI'CONVULSIVE. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and convulsio.] Good against convulsions.

Whatever produces an inflammatory disposition in the blood, produces the asthma, as anticonvulsive medicines. Feyer.

ANTI'COR. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and cor, the heart.]

A pretumatural swelling of a round figure, occasioned by a sanguine and bilious humour, and appearing in a horse's breast, opposite to his heart. An anticor may kill a horse, unless it be brought to a suppuration by good remedies. Forster, Diff.

ANTI'CURTIER. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and courtier.] One that opposes the court.

ANTI'DOTAL. adj. [from antidote.] That which has the quality of an antidote, or the power of countering poison.

That bezoar is antidotal, we shall not deny. Brown's V. Err.

ANTI'DOTIDE. n. f. [antidote, antidotal, Lat. a thing given in opposition to something else.]

A medicine given to expel the mischiefs of another, as of poison. Quincy.

Trust not the physician,

His antidotes are poison, and he slays

More than you rob.

Shakespeare.

What fool would believe that antidote delivered by Puerus against the sting of a scorpion; to sit upon an ass, with one's face towards his tail.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Poison will work against the stars: beware;

For ev'ry meal an antidote prepare. Dryden.

ANTI'DYSENTERICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and dysenteria, a bloody flux.] Good against the bloody flux.

ANTI'LOQUIST. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and loqueri, to speak.] A contradicator.

ANTI'MONARCHICAL. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and μοναρχία, government by a single person.] Against government by a single person.

When he spied the statue of King Charles in the middle of the crowd, and most of the kings ranged over their heads, he concluded that an antimonarchical assembly could never choose such a place. Addison.

ANTI'MONARCHICALNESS. n. f. [from antimonarchical.] The quality of being an enemy to regal power.

ANTI'MONIAL. adj. [from antimony.] Made of antimony; having the qualities of antimony; relating to antimony.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes. Grew.

Though antimonial cups prepar'd with art,

Their force to wine through ages should impart;

This distillation, this profuse expence,

Nor shrinks their lives, nor waxes their stores immense.

Bladmore on the Creation.

ANTI'MONY. n. f. [The Alibum of the ancients, by the Greeks called σίμας. The reason of its modern denomination is referred to Basil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown some of it to the hogs, observed, that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore, he imagined, his fellow monks would be the better for a like dose. The experiment, however, succeeded ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine; antimank.]

Antimony is a mineral substance, of a metallic nature, having all the seeming characters of a real metal, except malleability; and may be called a femimetal, being a fossil globe of some undetermined metal, combined with a sulphurous and stony substance. Mines of all metals afford it; but chiefly those those of silver and lead; that in gold mines is reckoned best. It has also its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. It is found in clods or flosses of several sizes, bearing a near resemblance to black lead, only being lighter and harder. Its texture is full of little shining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glass. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called mule antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuses in the fire, though with some difficulty; and dissolves more easily in water. When dug out of the earth, it is put into large crucibles, fused by a violent fire, and then poured into cones, which make the crude antimony of the shops. Of these cones the top is the purest part, and the base the foulest. It destroys and dissipates all metals fused with it, except gold; and is therefore useful in refining. It is a common ingredient in facculums, or burning concaves; serving to give them a finer polish. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the found more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and sound; and with lead, in the casting of printers' letters, to render them more smooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and especially in casting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is used under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetic. It had no place in medicine before the fourteenth century; and was generally neglected, till Paracelsus brought it into esteem, in the beginning of the sixteenth century; but much mischief was done by it, till the proper methods of preparing it were, after a long course of experiments, discovered. Chemists.

ANTIEMPHRICTIC. adj. [from ἀντί and ἐμψριτικόν.] Medicines good against dyspepsia of the reins and kidneys.

ANTINOMY. n. f. [from ἀντί and νόμος.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the same law.

ANTIPARALYTIC. adj. [from ἀντί and παράλυσις.] Efficacious against the palsy.

ANTIPATHETICAL. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The soil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venomous creatures. Hevel.

ANTIPATHETICALNESS. n. f. [from antipathetical.] The quality or state of having a natural contrariety to any thing. Dict.

ANTIPATHY. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and πάθος, feeling, antipathia, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, so as to shun it involuntarily; aversion; dislike. It is opposed to sympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,

Than I and such a knave. Shakespeare.

To this perhaps might be justly attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in men. Locke.

2. It has sometimes the particle against before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy against standing armies in times of peace; because I took armies to be hired by the master of the family, to keep his children in slavery. Suiff.

3. Sometimes is.

Ask you, what provocation I have had?

The strong antipathy of good to bad.

When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,

Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours. Pope.

4. Formerly with; but improperly. Tangible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more dense, they will draw, condense, and, in effect, incorporate. Bacon.

ANTIPERISTASIS. n. f. [from ἀντιπεριστάσις, formed of ἀντί and περιστάσις, to stand round.] The opposition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it opposes, becomes heightened or intended; or the action, by which a body attacked by another, collects itself, and becomes stronger by such opposition; or an intention of the activity of one quality caused by the opposition of another. Thus quicklime is set on fire by the affusion of cold water; so water becomes warmer in winter than in summer; and thunder and lightning are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperistasis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetic philosophy.

Th' antiperistasis of age

More inflam'd his am'rous rage. Cowley.

The riotous prodigal detests covetousness; yet let him find the springs grow dry, which feed his luxury, covetousness shall be called in; and so, by a strange antiperistasis, prodigality shall beget rapine. Decay of Piety.

ANTIPHTHISIAL. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and φθίσις, a form of speech.] The use of words in a sense opposite to their proper meaning.

Perfumes correct the air before it is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antiphtisical unguents, to anoint the nostrils with. Harvey on the Plague.

ANTIPIPHRASIS. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and φράσις, a form of speech.] The use of words in a sense opposite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cause to repent, that you never dipt your hands in the bloody high courts of justice, so called only by antiphrasis. South.

ANTIPODAL. adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodals unto the Indians.

ANTIPODES. n. f. It has no singular. [from ἀντί, against, and πῶδες, feet.] Those people who, living on the other side of the globe, have their feet directly opposite to ours.

We should hold day with the antipodes,

If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. So shines the fun, tho' hence remov'd as clear

When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here. Waller.

ANTIPOPE. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and pope.] He that usurps the popedom, in opposition to the right pope.

This house is famous in history, for the retreat of an anti-pope, who called himself Felix V.

ANTIPTOSIS. n. f. [ἀντιπτώσις.] A figure in grammar, by which one case is put for another. Addison.

ANTIQUARY. n. f. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man studious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All rhose arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the stamp it once bore. South's Sermons.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,

Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

The rude Latin of the monks is still very intelligible; had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be understood, unless by antiquaries. Suiff.

ANTIQUARY. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Nestor,

Instructed by the antiquary times;

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida. To ANTIQUATE. v. a. [antique, Lat.] To put out of use; to make obsolete.

The growth of christianity in this kingdom might reasonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate some old ones, that seemed less consistent with the christian doctrines.

Hale's Common Law of England. Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,

Shall like an antiquated fable sound. Addison.

ANTIQUATEDNESS. n. f. [from antiquated.] The state of being antiquated, worn out of use, or obsolete.

ANTIQUE. adj. [antique, Fr. antique, Lat.] It was formerly pronounced according to the English analogy, with the accent on the first syllable; but now after the French, with the accent on the last, at least in prose; the poets use it variously.]

1. Ancient; old; not modern.

Now, good Cæsar, but that piece of song,

That old and antique song we heard last night.

Such truth in love as th' antique world did know,

In such a title as counts might boast of now. Waller.

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The seals which we have remaining of Julius Cæsar, which we know to be antique, have the star of Venus over them.

Dryden's Virgil; Milton's Pref.

My copper lamps at any rate,
For being true antique I bought;
Yet wisely melted down my plate,
On modern models to be wrought;
And tiffles I alike pursue,
Because they're old, because they're new. Prior.

3. Of old fashion.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments right well befeen. Fairy Queen.

Must he no more divert the tedious day?
Nor sparkling thoughts in antique words convey?

Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Old; wild; antick.

Name not these living death-heads unto me;
For these not ancient but antique be. Dennis.

And sooner may a gulling weather-spy
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Dennis.

ANTIQUÉ. n. f. [from antique, ar.] An antiquity; a reman of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now earl of Oxford, my seal of Julius Cæsar; as also another seal, supposed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and let in gold. Suiff.

ANTIQUENESS. n. f. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may discover something venerable in the antiqueness of the work; but we would see the design enlarged, the figures reformed, and the colour laid on. Addison.

ANTIGUITY. n. f. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time past long ago.

I mention Aristotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greatest philosophers, the most impartial historians, and the most consummate statesmen of all antiquity. Adelphi's Frodo.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That such pillars were raised by Sells, all antiquity has avowed. Religion's History of the World.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the observation of Machiavel, translating Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay to extinguish all heathen antiquities: I do not find that those zeals last long; as it appeared in the succession of Sabianus, who did revive the former antiquities. Bacon's Essay.

4. Old age; a ludicrous scold.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. Ancientness; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTISCILL. n. f. [It has singular, from anti and cilla.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different sides of the equator, who, consequently, at noon have their shadows projected opposite ways. Thus the people of the north are Antiscilli to those of the south; the one projecting their shadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the south pole. Chambers.

ANTISCORBUTICAL. adj. [from anti, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbutical plants, in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANTISCORBUTIC. adj. [from anti, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbutic, animal diet, and animal fats, are proper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANTISPASIS. n. f. [from anti, against, and spasus, to draw.] The revulsion of any humour into another part.

ANTISPASMODIC. adj. [from anti, against, and spasmodus, the cramp.] That which has the power of relieving the cramp.

ASTHMA-TICK. adj. [from asthma and tick.] Medicines which cause a revulsion of the humours.

ASTHMA-TICK. adj. [from asthma and tick.] Efficacious in diseases of the spleen.

Asthmatick open the obstructions of the spleen. Floyer.

ANTISTROPE. n. f. [antistrophe, from anti, the contrary way, and strophe, turning.] In an ode supposed to be sung in parts, the second stanza of every three, or sometimes every second stanza; so called because the dance turns about.

ANTISTRUMATICK. adj. [from anti and struma, a scrophulous swelling.] Good against the king's evil.

I prescribed him a distilled milk, with antistrumatick, and purged him. Wife's Surgery.

ANTITHESIS. n. f. in the plural antitheses. [antithesis, placing in opposition.] Opposition of words or sentiments; contrast; as in these lines:

Though gentle, yet not dull,

Strong without rage, without overflowing, full. Dunham.

I for a chief, who lends my chosen fons.

All arm'd with points, antithesis, and puns. Pope's Dunciad.

ANTITHY. n. f. [antithy.] That which is resembled or shadowed out by the type; that of which the type is the representation. It is a term of theology. See Type.

When once upon the wing, he soars to an higher pitch, from thence to the antithy, to the days of the Messiah, the ascension of our Saviour, and, at length, to his kingdom and dominion over all the earth. Bacon's Theory of the Earth.

He brought forth bread and wine, and was the priest of the most high God; imitating the antithy, or the substance, Christ himself. Taylor's Worship Communicant.

ANTITHY. adj. [from antithy.] That which relates to an antithy; that which explains the type.

ANTIVENEREAL. adj. [from anti and venereal.] Good against the venereal disease.

If a lues be joined with it, you will scarce cure your patient without exhibiting antivenereal remedies. Wife's Surgery.

ANTLER. n. f. [antennula, Fr.] Properly the first branches of a stag's horns; but, popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow less branched, and first lose their brow antlers, or lowest furcations next to the head.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A well grown stag, whose antlers rise

High o'er his front, his beams invade the skies. Dryden.

Bright Diana

Brought hunted wild goats' heads, and branching antlers

Of fangs, the fruit, and honour of her toil. Prior.

ANTYGLI. n. f. [It has singular, Lat. from anti and glyca, to inhabit.] In geography, those inhabitants of the earth, who live under the same meridian, and at the same distance from the equator; the one toward the north, and the other to the south. Hence they have the same longitude, and their latitude is also the same, but of a different denomination. They are in the same No VI.]

femicircle of the meridian, but opposite parallels. They have precisely the same hours of the day and night, but opposite seasons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Cramer's.

ANTONOMASIA. n. f. [from anti and nomia, a name.] A form of speech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of some dignity, office, profession, science, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majesty; a nobleman, his lordship. We say the philosopher instead of Aristotle, and the orator for Cicero; thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wise man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetoric.

ANTRIX. n. f. [antra, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den.

With all my travels history;

Wherein of antra vast, and depths idle,

It was my bent to speak. Shakespeare's Othello.

ANVIL. n. f. [anvil, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the smith lays his metal to be forged;

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,

The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool. Shak. King John.

On their eternal anvil here he found

The brethren beat egg, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip

The anvil of my sword, and do contest

Hutly and nobly. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Figuratively; to be upon the anvil, is to be in a state of formation or preparation.

Several members of our house knowing, some time ago, what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and desired their judgment. Swift.

ANXIETY. n. f. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind about future event; suspense with uneasiness; perplexity; solicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diseases of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of spirit; not only to enjoy the pleasures of sense, but peace of conscience, and tranquillity of mind. Tilghman.

2. In the medical language, depression; lowness of spirits. In anxiety which attend fevers, when the cold fit is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed; and because anxieties often happen by (palms from winds, spices are useful. Arbuthnot.

ANXIOUS. adj. [anxi, Lat.]

1. Disturbed about some uncertain event; solicitous.

His pensive cheek upon his hand reclin'd,

And anxious thoughts revolving in his mind. Dryden.

With beating hearts the dire event they wait,

Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate. Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; uneasy.

In youth alone, unhappy anxiety is live;

But ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive;

Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,

And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden's Virgil.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

There being no writings we need to be solicitous about the meaning of, but those that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey, we may be less anxious about the sense of other authors. Lact.

4. It has generally for or about before the object, but sometimes of. Who anxious of neglect, suspecting changes, Consults her pride, and meditates revenge. Granville.

ANXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxi.] In an anxious manner; solicitously; unequally; carefully.

But where the loss is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us to anxiously to prevent it, since it might be repaired again. Saunders.

Thou what befits the new lord mayor,

And what the Gallick arms will do,

Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

ANXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from anxi.] The quality of being anxious; susceptibility of anxiety.

ANY. adj. [anxi, enxi, Sax.]

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its senses, applied indifferently to persons or things.

I know you are now, sir, a gentleman born—Ay and have been so any time these four hours. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

[You contemned yourself with being capable, as much as any whosoever, of defending your country with your sword. Dryden.

How fit is this retreat for winterproof study? Any one that sees it will own, I could not have chosen a more likely place to converse with the dead in. Pope's Letters.

2. Whoever; whatever; as distinguished from some other.

What warmth is there in your solicitation towards any of these princely suitors that are already come. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

An inverted motion being begun any where below, continues itself all the whole length. Lact.

3. It is used in opposition to none.

I wound and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. Psalm xxxiii. 39.

ANAST. n. f. [anastasis.] Indefinite; a term in the Greek grammar.

ACRTA. n. f. [ἀσπὴ.] The great artery which rises immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart. Quincy.

APACE. adv. [from a and pace; that is, with a great pace.]

1. Quick; speedily: used of things in motion.

Or when the flying lizzard she did chase,
She could them nimbly move, and after fly apace. F. Quen.

Ay, quoth my uncle Glo'ster,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace.

And hence methinks, I would not grow so fast,

Because sweet flow'rs are slow, and weeds make haste.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

He promis'd in his cast a glorious race;
Now sunk from his meridian, sets apace. Dryden's Aurengz.

Is not he imprudent, who, seeing the tide making haste towards him apace, will sleep till the sea overwhelm him. Tillotson.

2. With haste; applied to some action.

The baron now his diamonds pours apace;

Th' embroider'd king who shows but half his face,

And his resplendent queen. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

3. Hastily; with speed: spoken of any kind of progression from one state to another.

This second course of men,

With some regard to what is just and right,

Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace. Milton's Par. Lost.

If sensible pleasure, or real grandeur, be our end, we shall proceed apace to real misery. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

APAGOGICAL. adj. [from ἀπαγωγή]; compounded of ἀπό, from, and ἀγος, to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonstration is such as does not prove the thing directly; but shews the impossibility, or absurdity, which arises from denying it; and is also called reductio ad impossibile, or ad absurdum. Coombers.

APART. adv. [εἰς μέρος, Fr.]

1. Separately from the rest in place.

Since I enter into that question, it becometh me to give reason for my opinion, with circumspection; because I walk aside, and in a way apart from the multitude. Raleigh's History.

The party discerning, that the earl of Essex would never serve their turn, they resolved to have another army apart, that should be at their devotion. Clarendon.

2. In a state of distinction; as, to set apart for any use.

He is so very figurative, that he requires a grammar apart, to construe him. Dryden.

The tyrant shall demand yon sacred load,

And gold and vessels set apart for God. Prior.

3. Distinctly.

Moses first nameth heaven and earth, putting waters but in the third place, as comprehending waters in the word earth; but afterwards he nameth them apart. Raleigh's History.

4. At a distance; retired from the other company.

So please you, madam,

To put apart these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

APARTMENT. n. f. [appartement, Fr.] A part of the house allotted to the use of any particular person; a room; a set of rooms.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,

Not to the face yet known. Sir J. Denham.

Pale as death, despoil'd of his array,

Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden's Fables.

The most considerable ruin is that on the eastern promontory, where are still some apartments left, very high and arched at top. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

APATHY. n. f. [α, not, and πάθος, feeling.] The quality of not feeling; exemption from passion; freedom from mental perturbation.

Of good and evil much they argued then,

Passion, and apathy, and glory, and shame. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To remain insensible of such provocations, is not constancy, but apathy. South.

In lazy apathy let flaccids boast

Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fix'd as in frost,

Contracted all, retiring to the breast;

But strength of mind is exercise, not rest. Pope.

APE. n. f. [ἄψ, I stand off.]

1. A kind of monkey remarkable for imitating what he sees.

I will be more newfangled than an ape, more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Writers report, that the heart of an ape worn near the heart, comforteth the heart, and increaseth audacity. It is true, that the ape is a merry and bold beast. Bacon's Natural History.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,

But ape and monkeys are the gods within. Graville.

2. An imitator; used generally in the bad sense.

Julio Romano, who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom: so perfectly he is her ape. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

To ape v. a. [from ape.] To imitate, as an ape imitates human actions.

Aping the foreigners in every dress,

Which, bought at greater cost, becomes him less. Dryden.

Curle on the stripping! how he ape his fire!

Ambitiously fomentious! Addison's Cato.

AP'AK, or AP'E'IK. adv. [probably from à pique.] In a posture to pierce the ground.

AP'ESY. n. f. [ἀπὲς.] A loss of natural concoction. Quincy.

APERITION. n. f. [from apertus, Lat.]

1. An opening; a passage through any thing; a gap.

The next now in order are the aperitions; under which term

I do comprehend doors, windows, staircases, chimneys, or other conduits: in short, all inlets or outlets. Watson's Architect.

2. The act of opening, or state of being opened.

The plenitude of vessels, otherways called the plethora, when it happens, causeth an extravasation of blood, either by rupture or aperition of them. Wifeman's Surgery.

AP'ERTLY. adv. [apertis, Lat.] Openly; without covert.

AP'ERTNESS. n. f. [from apertis.] Openness.

In general, the freedom, or apertness and vigour of pronouncing, and the clearness and mufing, and, as I may say, laziness of speaking, render the sound considerably different.

He der's Elements of Speech.

AP'ERTURE. n. f. [from apertus, open.]

1. The act of opening.

Hence ariseth the facility of joining a consonant to a vowel, because from an aperture is easier than from one appliance to another. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. An open place.

If memory be made by the easy motion of the spirits through the opened passages, images, without doubt, pass through the same apertures. Glanville's Scripta Scientifica, Frejus.

sun.]] That part of the orbit of a planet, in which it is at the point remotest from the sun.

The reason why the comets move not in the zodiac, is, that, in their aphelia, they may be at the greatest distances from one another; and consequently disturb one another's motions

the least that may be. Cheney's Philosophical Principles.

APHET'A. n. f. [with astrologers.] The name of the planet, which is imagined to be the giver or disposer of life in a nativity.

Diid.

APHETICAL. adj. [from apheta.] Relating to the apheta.

Quincy.

APHORISM. n. f. [ἀφορισμός.] A maxim; a precept contracted in a short sentence; an unconnected position.

He will easily discern how little of truth there is in the multitude; and though sometimes they are flattered with that aphor- ism, will hardly believe the voice of the people to be the voice of God. Brown's vulgar Errors.

I shall at present consider the aphorism, that a man of religion and virtue is a more useful, and consequently a more valuable member of a community. Rogers's Sermons.

APHORISTICAL. adj. [from aphorism.] In the form of an aphorism; in separate and unconnected sentences.

APHORISTICALLY. adv. [from aphoristical.] In the form of an aphorism.

APIARY. n. f. [from apis, Lat. a bee.] The place where bees are kept.

Those who are stilled in bees, when they see a foreign swarm approaching to plunder their hives, have a trick to divert them into some neighbouring apiary, there to make what havoc they please.

APICES of a flower. [Lat. from apex, the top.] Little knobs that grow on the tops of the flamina, in the middle of a flower. They are commonly of a dark purplish colour. By the microscope they have been discovered to be a sort of capula seminaria, or seed vessels, containing in them small globular, and often oval particles, of various colours, and exquisitely formed.

APICE. adv. [from a for each, and piece, or share.] To the part or share of each.

Men, in whose mouths at first found nothing but mortification, were come to think they might lawfully have six or seven wives apice.

I have to-night dispatched sixteen business, a month's length apice, by an abstract of success.

One copy of this paper may serve a dozen of you, which will be less than a farthing apice.

APISH. adj. [from ape.]

1. Having the qualities of an ape; imitative.

Report of fashions in proud Italy,

Whole manners fill our tardy, apish nation

Limps after, in base awkward imitation.

2. Foppish; affected.

Because I cannot flatter, and look fair,

I duck with French nods and apish courtesy,

I must be held a rancorous enemy.

3. Silly; trifling; insignificant.

All this is but apish foppishry; and, to give it a name divine and excellent, is abusive and unjust.

4. Wanton; playful.

Gloomy fits the queen;

Till happy chance reverts the cruel scene;

And apish folly, with her wild resort

Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court.

APISHLY. adv. [from apish.] In an apish manner; foppishly; conceitedly.

APISHNESS. n. f. [from apish.] Mimicry; foppery; insignificance; playfulness.

APULSTRE. n. f. [Latin.] The ancient ensign carried in sea vessels.

The one holds a sword in her hand, to represent the Iliad, as the other has an apistris, to represent the Odyssey, or voyage of Ulysses.

APOCALYPSE. n. f. [from ἀποκαλύπτω.] Revelation; discovery; a word used only of the sacred writings.

O for that warning voice, which he who saw

Th' apocalyptic heard cry in heav'n aloud.

With this throne, of the glory of the Father, compare the throne of the Son of God, as seen in the apocalypsis.

APOCALYPTICAL. adj. [from apocalypsis.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.

If we could understand that scene, at the opening of this apocalypsic theatre, we should find it a representation of the majesty of our Saviour.

APOCALYPTICALLY. adv. [from apocalypsic.] In such a manner as to reveal something secret.

APOCOPPE. n. f. [ἀποκοπή.] A figure in grammar, when the last letter or syllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni for ingenium.

APOCRYSTICK. adj. [ἀποκρυφικός, from ἀποκρύπτω, to drive.] Remedies endued with a repelling and alluring power, by which they prevent the too great afflux of humours to a part diseased.

APOCRYPHA. n. f. [from ἀποκρύπτω, to put out of sight.] Books whose authors are not known. It is used for the books appended to the sacred writings, which, being of doubtful authority, are less regarded.

We hold not the apocrypha for sacred, as we do the holy scriptures, but for human compositions.

APOCRYPHAL. adj. [from apocrypha.]

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.

Jerom, who faith, that all writings not canonical are apocryphal, uses not the title apocryphal, as the rest of the fathers ordinarily have done, whose custom is so to name, for the most part, only such as might not publicly be read or divulged.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To speak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers, wisdom is glorious, and never fadeeth away.

3. It is sometimes used for an account of uncertain credit.

APOCRYPHALLY. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indisputably.

APOCRYPHALNESS. n. f. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness of credit.

APODICTICAL. adj. [from ἀποδείκνυμι, evident truth; demonstration.] Demonstrative; evident beyond contradiction.

Holding an apodictical knowledge, and an assured knowledge of it; verily, to persuade their apprehensions otherwise, were to make Euclid believe, that there were more than one square in a circle.

We can say all at the number three, we declare the world is perfect. I obit went, and his dog followed him; the more there is a world in the moon, were an argument as apodictical.

APODYSIS. n. f. [ἀποδύσις.] Demonstration.

APOGÆON. n. f. [from ἀπὸ, from, and γῆ, the earth.] A

APOGES. } point in the heavens in which the sun, or a APOGEUM. } planet, is at the greatest distance possible from the earth in its whole revolution. The ancient astronomers regarding the earth as the centre of the system, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon, which the moderns, making the sun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion.

Thy fin is in his eye, apogæon passed,

And when it moveth next, must needs descend.

It is not yet a read in what time, precisely, the apogæon was dissolved one degree.

APOLOGICAL. adj. [from ἀπολογία, to defend.] That which APOLOGICK. } is said in defence of any thing or person.

I design to publish an essay the greater part of which is apologistical, for one sort of chymists.

APOLOGUALLY. adv. [from apologistical.] In the way of defence or excuse.

APOLOGIST. n. f. [from ἀπολογία.] He that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

TO APOLOGIZE. v. n. [from apologize.]

1. To plead in favour of any person or thing.

It will be much more reasonable to reform than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports those, who dwell secure, to look about them.

2. It has the particle for before the subject of apology.

I ought to apologize for my indifferency in the whole undertaking.

The translator needs not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood.

APOLOGUE. n. f. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; story contrived to teach some moral truth.

An apologue of Æsop is beyond a syllogism, and proverbs more powerful than demonstration.

Some men are remarked for pleasantness in rallery; others for apologues and apocryphal diverting stories.

APOLOGY. n. f. [ἀλογία, Lat. apologia.]

1. Defence; excuse. Apology generally signifies rather excuse than vindication, and tends rather to exonerate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, sometimes unavailing by writers.

In her face excuse

Came prologue; and apology too prompt;

Which with bland words at will the suit address'd.

2. It has for before the object of excuse.

It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem: some will think it needs no excuse, and others will receive none.

I shall neither trouble the reader, nor myself, with any apology for publishing of these sermons; for if they be, in any measure, truly serviceable to the end for which they are designed, I do not feel what apology is necessary; and if they be not, I am sure none can be sufficient.

APOMETRICAL. n. f. [ἀπό, from, μέτρον, distance, and μέτρον, to measure.] The art of measuring things at a distance.

APONEUROSIS. n. f. [from ἀπὸ, from, and νῆρος, a nerve.] An expansion of a nerve into a membrane.

When a cyst rises near the orifice of the artery, it is formed by the aponeurosis that runs over the vessel, which becomes excessively expanded.

APOPHÆSIS. n. f. [Lat. apophæsis, a denying.] A figure in rhetoric, by which the orator, speaking ironically, seems to wave what he would plainly insinuate: as, Neither will I mention those things, which if I should, you nevertheless could neither confute nor speak against them.

APOPHLEGMATICK. adj. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] That which has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

APOPHLEGMATISM. n. f. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] A medicine of which the intention is to draw phlegm from the blood.

And so it is in apophlegmatism and gargarisms, that draw the rheum down by the palate.

APOPHLEGMATIZAN. n. f. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] Any remedy which causes an evacuation of ferrous or mucous humour by the nostrils, as particular kinds of fomentations.

APOPHTEGM. n. f. [ἀπόφθεγμα.] A remarkable saying; a valuable maxim uttered on some sudden occasion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wisdom, dom, whereof many are to be seen in Læsius and Lycosthenes.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I had a mind to collect and digest such observations and apophthegms, as tend to the proof of that great assertion, All is vanity.

Prior.

APOPHYGES n. f. [ἀποφυγή, flight, or escape.] Is, in architecture, that part of a column, where it begins to spring out of its base; and was originally no more than the ring or fessel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from splitting, and were afterward imitated in stone work. We sometimes call it the spring of the column.

Chambers.

APOPHYSIS n. f. [ἀποφύσις.] The prominent parts of some bones; the snout as process. It differs from an epiphysis, as that is a continuance of the bone itself; whereas the latter is somewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part.

It is the apophysis, or head of the os tibize, which makes the knee.

Wifman's Surgery.

APOPLETICAL adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the same complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive seems abolished; as may be observed in supporting persons incoriated, apoplectic, or in lipothymies and swoonings.

Brown.

In an apoplectic case, he found extravasated blood, making way from the ventricles of the brain.

Derham.

APOPLETICK adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

A lady was seized with an apoplectic fit, which afterward terminated in some kind of lethargy.

Wifman.

APOPLEXY n. f. [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The last syllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Present punishment pursues his maze,
When hurried and swelled, the peacock raves;

He dear into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplexy, intestine death.

Dryden.

APOPLEXED adj. [from apoplexy.] Seized with an apoplexy.

Else could you not have motion; but sure that sense
Is lost at a d.

Shakespeare.

APOPLEXY n. f. [ἀποπληξία.] A sudden deprivation of all internal and external sensation, and of all motion, unless of the heart and thorax. The cause is generally a repletion, and indicates evacuation, joined with stimuli.

Boerhaave.

Apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves destined for those motions.

A boerhaave in Dict.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, muffled, deaf, sleepy, insensible.

Shakespeare.

A fever may take away my reason, or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither sense nor understanding.

Locke.

APORIA n. f. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetoric, by which the speaker shews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to say in some strange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, agree the case with himself. Thus Cicero says, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudent, y gave them to a harlot more lasciviously, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or a terea them more presumptuously, I cannot well set out.

Smith's Rhetoric.

APORRHOEA n. f. [ἀπορροή.] Effluvia; emanation; something emitted by another.

The reason of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhon, which passing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the falve, carry them to the affected part.

Glaucile.

APORRHOESIS n. f. [ἀπορροήσις, from ἀπορρ, after, and ροήσις, to be silent.] A form of speech, by which the speaker, through some affection, as sorrow, bashfulness, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his speech before it be all ended. A figure, when, speaking of a thing, we yet seem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the course of the sentence begun is to be thyed, as thereby some part of the sentence not being uttered, may be understood; as, I might say much more, but must leave and silence.

Smith's Rhetoric.

APOTASY n. f. [ἀποτάσις.] Departure from what a man has professed; it is generally applied to religion; sometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apostasy to be a wilful departure from that state of faith, which any person has professed himself to hold in the christian church.

Ayliffe.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware

Against, by what belied in heav'n
To those apostates.

Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedness, but apostasy, degenerate wickedness.

Spenser.

Whoever do give different worships, must bring in new gods; which is an apostasy from one God.

Stillingfleet.

APOSTATE n. f. [ἀποστάτης, Lat. apostatus.] One that has forsaken his profession; generally applied to one that has left his religion.

7

The angels, for disobedience, thou hast referred to a miserable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apostate from thee and goodness, thou hast given a Saviour.

Regis's Sermons.

Apostate in point of faith, are, according to the civil law, subject unto all punishments ordained against heretics.

Ayliffe's Foreign Juris Canonici.

APOSTATICAL adj. [from apostate.] After the manner of an apostate.

To APOSTATIZE v. n. [from apostate.] To forsake one's profession; it is commonly used of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith; not because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances, and libidinous thoughts, had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless.

Barlow.

To APOSTEMATE v. n. [from aposteme.] To become an aposteme; to swell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abscesses of the breast and belly, in danger of breaking inwards; yet, by opening these too soon, they sometimes apostemate again, and become crude.

Wifman.

APOSTEMATON n. f. [from apostema.] The formation of an aposteme; the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing, or curing of fevers; as vomitings, apostemations, salivations, &c.

Cruic.

APOSTEME n. f. [ἀποστήμα.] A hollow swelling, filled with a purulent matter; an abscess.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apostemes of the brain, do happen only in the left side.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The opening of apostemes, before the suppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude.

Wifman.

APOSTLE n. f. [ἀπόστολος, Lat. apostolus.] A person sent with mandates by another; it is particularly applied to them whom our Saviour deputed to preach the gospel.

But all his mind is bent to balines;
His champions are the prophets and apostles.

Shakespeare.

I am far from pretending infallibility; that would be to erect myself into an apostle: a personification in any one that cannot confirm what he says by miracles.

Locke.

We know but a small part of the notion of an apostle, by knowing barely that he is sent forth.

Watson.

APOSTLESHIP n. f. [from apostle.] The office or dignity of an apostle.

Where, because faith is in too low degree,
I thought it some apostleship in me

To speak things, which by faith alone I see.

Dante.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epistles; which are all confined within the business of his apostleship; and so contain nothing but points of christian instruction.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

APOSTOLICAL adj. [from apostolic.] Delivered or taught by the apostles; belonging to the apostles.

They acknowledged not, that the church keeps any thing as apostolic, which is not found in the apostles writings, in what other records never it be found.

Hooker.

Declare yourself for that church, which is founded upon scripture, reason, apostolic practice and antiquity.

Hooker.

APOSTOLICALLY adv. [from apostolic.] In the manner of the apostles.

APOSTOLICALNESS n. f. [from apostolic.] The quality of relating to the apostles; apudolical authority.

APOSTOLICK adj. [from apostle.] Taught by the apostles; belonging to an apostle.

Their oppositions in maintenance of publick superstition against apostolick endeavours, were vain and frivolous.

Hooker.

Or where did I at sure tradition strike,
Provided still it were apostolick?

Dryden.

APOSTROPHE n. f. [ἀποστροφή, from ἀπο, from, and στροφή, to turn.]

1. In rhetoric, a diversion of speech to another person, than the speech appointed did intend or require; or it is a turning of the speech from one person to another, many times abruptly.

A figure when we break off the course of our speech, and speak to some new person, present or absent, as to the people or witnesses, when it was before directed to the judges, or argument.

This diversion of speech is made many ways. 1. To God. 2. To Angels. 3. To men in their several ranks, whether absent or present, dead or alive. 4. To the adversary. 5. To the heavenly bodies and meteors. 6. To the earth and things in it. 7. To the sea and things in it. 8. To beasts, birds, and fishes. 9. To inanimate things.

Smith.

2. In grammar, the contraction of a word by the use of a comma; as, tho' for though; rep' for reputation.

Many laudable attempts have been made, by abbreviating words with apostrophes; and by lopping polysyllables, leaving one or two words at most.

Swift.

3. APOSTROPHIZE v. n. [from apostrophe.] To address by an apostrophe.

There is a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing

Æneas.

Eloquent, and speaking of him in the second person, it is generally applied only to men of account. Pope.

APPEAL, n. f. See APPEALMENT. [This word is properly appellum.] A hollow tumour filled with pusulent matter.

How an apoplexy in the mesentery breaking, causes a consumption in the pectus, is apparent. Hart.

APPOULETTE, v. n. [from apouletum.] To apoplemate. Dial.

APPOULETTE, n. f. [from apouletum, Lat. a repository.] A man whose business it is to keep medicines for sale.

Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination. Shakespeare.

They have no other doctor but the sun and fresh air, and that such a one as never lends them to the apothecary. South.

Wandering in the dark,
Physicians, for the time, have found the bark;
They, striving for relief of human kind,
With sharpen'd fight some remedies may find;
Th' apothecary is wholly blind. } Dryden.

APPOULETTE, n. f. [properly apoplexum; which fee.] A remarkable lying.

By frequent conversing with him, and scattering short apoplexes, and little pleasant stories, and making useful applications of them, his son was, in his infancy, taught to abhor vanity and vice as monstrous. Watson's Life of Sanderson.

APPOULETTE, n. f. [from apouletum and apouletum.] Dedication; the rite of adding any one to the number of gods.

As if it could be graven and painted omnipotent, or the nails and the hammer could give it an apoplexy. South.

Allots the prince of his celestial line,
An apoplexy, and rites divine. Garth.

APPOULETTE, n. f. [from apouletum, to cut off.]

1. In mathematics, the remainder or difference of two incommensurable quantities.

2. In music, it is the part remaining of an entire tone, after a greater semitone has been taken from it. The proportion in numbers of the apoplexy, is that of 2048 to 2187. The Greeks thought that the greater tone could not be divided into two equal parts; for which reason they called the first part apoplexy and the other apoplexy. Chambers.

APPOULETTE, n. f. [from apouletum, to boil.] A decoction; an infusion made by boiling ingredients.

During this evacuation, he took opening broths and apoplexes. Wijeman.

APPOULETTE, v. a. [from apouletum, Fr. To might more properly have been written apouletum.] To fright; to strike with sudden fear; to depress; to discourage.

Whilst the spake, her great words did apoplex
My feeble courage's, and my heart oppress,
That yet I quake and tremble over all. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that th' apoplex
May pierce the head of thy great combatant. Shakespeare.

The house of peers was long while apoplex at this alarm;
but took time to consider of it till next day. Clarendon.

Does neither rage inflame, nor fear apoplex,
Nor the black fear of death that fadens all. Pope.

The monster curls
His flaming crest, all other thirft apoplex,
Or driving fier, or choak'd at distance stands. Tamson.

APPOULETTE, n. f. [from apouletum.] Depression; discouragement; impression of fear.

As the furious slaughter of them was a great discouragement and apoplex to the rest. Bacon's Henry VII.

APPANAGE, n. f. [from appanage, low Latin; probably from pau, bread.] Lands let at art by princes for the maintenance of their younger children.

He became suitor for the earldom of Chester, a kind of appanage to Wales, and using to go to the king's son. Bacon.

Had he thought it fit,
That wealth should be the appanage of wit,
The God of light could ne'er have been so blind,
To deal it to the worth of human kind. Swift.

APPARATUS, n. f. [Latin.] Things provided as means to any certain end, as the tools of a trade, the furniture of a house, ammunition for war; equipage; show.

There is an apparatus of things previous, to be adjusted before I come to the calculation itself. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Ourselves are easily provided for; it is nothing but the circumstances, the apparatus or equipage of human life, that costs so much. Pope's Letters to Gay.

APPAREL, n. f. It has no pl. Lat. [from apparell, Fr.]

1. Dress; vesture.

I cannot cog and say, that thou art this and that, like many of those lipping Hawthorn buds, that come like women in mens apparel, and smell like Bucklesbury in fimpling time. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. External habiliments.

Our late burnt London, in apparel new,
Shook off her ashes to have treated you. Waller.

At publick devotion, his resigned carriage made religion appear in the natural apparel of simplicity. Tatler, No 54.

3. To cover or deck, as with dress.

You may have trees apparell'd with flowers, by boring holes in them, and putting into them earth, and sowing seeds of violets. Bacon.

Shelves, and rocks, and precipices, and gulphs, being apparell'd with a verdure of plants, would resemble mountains and valleys. Bentley's Sermons.

APPARENT, adj. [from appare, Fr. apparent, Lat.]

1. Plain; indubitable.

The main principles of reason are in themselves apparent. For to make nothing evident of itself unto man's understanding, were to make away all possibility of knowing any thing. Hobbes, b. i.

2. Seeming; in appearance; not real.

The perception intellectual often corrects the report of phantasy, as in the apparent bigness of the sun, the apparent crookedness of the staff in air and water. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Visible; in opposition to secret.

What secret imaginations we entertain'd is known to God: this is apparent, that we have not behaved ourselves, as if we preserved a grateful remembrance of his mercies. Atterbury.

The outward and apparent sanctity of actions should flow from purity of heart. Regis.

4. Open; discoverable; known.

As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent, in my opinion ought to be prevented. Shakespeare, Richard III.

5. Certain; not presumptive.

He is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

APPARENT, n. f. Elliptically used for heir apparent.

Arise a knight;
And learn this lesson, Draw thy sword in right.—
—I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

APPARENTLY, adv. [from apparent.] Evidently; openly.

Arrest him, officer;
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should come me so apparently. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors.

Vices apparently tend to the impairing of men's health. Tillot.

APPARITION, n. f. [from appareo, Lat. to appear.]

1. Appearance; visibility.

When suddenly flood at my head a dream,
Whose inward apparition gently mov'd
My fancy. Milton.

2. The thing appearing; a form; a visible object.

I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames
In angel whiteness bear away those bluffs. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

A glorious apparition! had not doubt,
And carnal fear, that day dimm'd Adam's eyes. Parad. Lost.

Any thing besides may take from me the sense of what appeared; which apparition, it seems, was you. Tatler.

3. A spectre; a walking spirit.

Horatio says 'tis but our phantasy,
Touched this dreaded light twice seen of us;
Therefore I have entreated him,
That if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and speak to it. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Tender minds should not receive early impressions of goblins, spectres, and apparitions, wherewith maids fright them into compliance. Locke.

One of these apparitions had his right hand filled with darts, which he brandish'd in the face of all who came up that way. Tatler, N. 81.

4. Something only apparent, not real.

That checks my joys
—Nor can I yet distinguish
Which is an apparition, thither that. Drummond's Sophy.

5. Astronomically, the visibility of some luminary, opposed to occultation.

A month of apparition is the space wherein the moon appears, deducting three days wherein it commonly disappears; and this containeth but twenty-six days and twelve hours. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

APPARITORS, n. f. [from appareo, Lat. to be at hand.]

1. Such persons as are at hand to execute the proper orders of the magistrate or judge of any court of judicature. Ayliffe's Perjury.

2. The lowest officer of the ecclesiastical court.

They swallowed all the Roman hierarchy, from the pope to the apporitor. Ayliffe's Perjury.

APPARITION, v. a. [from appareo, old Fr. to satisfy.] To satisfy; to content; whence well appared, is pleased; ill appared, is unsatisfied. It is now obsolete.

How well appeal the was her bird to find? Sidney.
 Ay, Willy, when the heart is ill ally'd,
 How can baggage or joints be well appeal. Spenser.
 I am well appeal that you had rather believe, than take the pain of a long pilgrimage, you will never be to flit in any opinion. Cambden.
Milton.

So only well can high justice rest appeal.

To APPEAL. v. a.

1. To accuse; to inform against any person.

 My son, I would appeal him. Shakespeare.
 Diocle

The state of your affection; for your passions
 Have to the full *appeal*ed. Shakespeare.

2. To censure; to reproach; to taint with accusation.
 For when Cymochles saw the foul reproach,
 Which them *appeal*ed, prick'd with guilty shame,
 And inward grief, he fiercely gen *appeal*ed,
 Resolv'd to put away that lordly thame. Fairy Queen.

Nor canst, nor durst thou, traitor, on the pain,
Appeal mine honour, or thine own maintain. Dryden.

APPEALMENT. n. f. [from appeal.] Charge exhibited against any man; accusation.

A busy headed man gave first light to this appealment; but the earl did avouch it. Hayward.

The duke's answers to his appealments, in number thirteen,
 I find civilly couched. Watson.

To APPEAL. v. n. [appell, Lat.]

1. To transfer a cause from one to another; with the particle to and from.

From the ordinary therefore they appeal to themselves. Hosker.

2. To refer to another as judge.

Force, or a declared delinquency of force, upon the person of an other, where there is no common superior on earth to appeal to for relief, is the state of war; and it is the want of such an appeal gives a man the state of war, even against an aggressor, though he be in society and a fellow subject. Locke.

They knew no foe, but in the open field,
 And to their cause and to the gods *appeal*ed. Stepney.

3. To call another as witness.

Whether this, that the foul always thinks, be a self-evident proposition, I appeal to mankind. Locke.

4. To charge with a crime; to accuse.

One but flatters us,
 As well appeareth by the cause you come,
 Namely, appeal each other of high treason. Shakespeare.

APPEAL. n. f. [from the verb To appeal.]

1. An appeal is a provocation from an inferior to a superior judge, whereby the jurisdiction of the inferior judge is for a while suspended, in respect of the cause; the cognizance being devolved to the superior judge. Asyffe's Parergon.

This ring
 Deliver them, and your appeal to us
 There make before them. Shakespeare.

Our reason prompts us to a future fate,
 The last appeal from fortune and from fate,
 Where God's all righteous ways will be declar'd. Dryden.
 There are distributors of justice, from whom there lies an appeal to the prince. Addison.

2. In the common law.

An accusation; which is a lawful declaration of another man's crime before a competent judge, by one that sets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may ensue of the contrary; more commonly used for the private accusation of a murderer, by a party who had interest in the party murdered, and of any felon, by one of his accomplices in the fact. Cruwell.

The duke's unjust,
 Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
 And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
 Which here you come to accuse. Shakespeare.

Halt thou, according to thy oath and bond,
 Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold fon,
 Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal
 Against the duke of Norfolk? Shakespeare.

3. A summons to answer a charge.

Nor shall the sacred character of king
 Be urg'd to shield me from thy bold appeal,
 If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal. Dryden.

4. A call upon any as witness.

The calling up of the eyes, and lifting up of the hands, is a kind of appeal to the Deity, the author of wonders. Bacon.

APTORE. n. f. [of a and ptore.] A noun which is not declined with cases.

AQUA. n. f. [Latin.] A word signifying water, very much used in chymical writings.

AQUA FORTIS. [Latin.] A corrosive liquor made by dissolving purified nitre with calcined vitriol, or rectified oil of vitriol in a strong heat: the liquor, which rises in fumes red as blood, being collected, is the spirit of nitre or aqua fortis; which serves as a menstruum for dissolving of silver, and all other metals, except gold. But if sea salt, or sal ammoniac, be added to aqua fortis, it commences aqua regia, and will then dissolve no metal but gold. Aqua fortis is commonly held to have been invented about the year 1300; though others will have it to have been known in the time of Moses. It is serviceable to refiners, in separating silver from gold and copper; to the workers in mosaic, for staining and colouring their woods; to dyers, in their colours, particularly scarlet; and to other artists, for colouring bone and ivory. With aqua fortis bookbinders make the covers of books, and diamond cutters separate diamonds from metalline powders. It is also used in etching copper or brass plates. Chambers.

The dissolving of silver in aqua fortis, and gold in aqua regia, and not vice versa, would not be difficult to know. Locke.

AQUA MARINA. of the Italian lapidaries, is of a sea or bluish green. This stone seems to me to be the berylus of Pliny.

Wardour's Math. of Fossils.

AQUA MIRABILIS. [Latin.] The wonderful water, is prepared of cloves, galangals, cubeba, mace, cardamoms, nutmegs, ginger, and spirit of wine, digested twenty four hours, then distilled. It is a good and agreeable cordial.

AQUA REGIA. or AQUA REGALIS. [Latin.] An acid corrosive spirit or water, so called because it serves as a menstruum to dissolve gold, commonly esteemed the king of metals. Its basis, or essential ingredient, is common sea salt, the only salt in nature which will operate on gold. It is commonly prepared by mixing common sea salt, or sal ammoniac, or the spirit of them, with spirit of nitre, or common aqua fortis. Chambers.

He adds to his complex idea of gold, that of fixedness or solubility in aqua regia. Locke.

AQUA VITÆ. [Latin.] It is commonly understood of what is otherwise called brandy, or spirit of wine, either simple or prepared with aromatics. But some appropriate the term brandy to what is procured from wine, or the grapes: aqua vite, to that drawn after the same manner from malt. Chambers.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vite bottle, or a thief to walk with my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself. Shakspeare.

AQUATIC. adj. [aquaticus, Lat. from aqua, water.]

 1. One of the tunicks of the eye, so called from its resemblance to a cobweb.

As to the tunicks of the eye, many things might be taken notice of; the prodigious fineness of the arabians, the acute fine of the retina, &c. Dryden.

2. It is also a fine thin transparent membrane, which, lying between the dura and the pia mater, is supposed to invest the whole substance of the brain. Chambers.

ARAGNEE. n. f. [French.] A term in fortification, which sometimes denotes a branch, return, or gallery of a mine. DiB.
ARANTOUS. adj. [from aranea, Lat. a cobweb.] Resembling a cobweb.

The curious araneus membrane of the eye coustringeth and cluteth it, and so varieth its focus. Dryden.

ARATON. n. f. [Aratis, Lat.] The act or practice of plowing.

ARATORY. adj. [from ara, Lat. to plow.] That which contributes to tillage. DiB.

ARABAST. n. f. [from araba, a bow, and bast, an engine to throw stones.] A cross-bow.

It is reported by William Brito, that the arcubalista, or arbast, was first shewed to the French by our king Richard the first, who was shortly after slain by a quarrel thereof. Camden.

ARBITER. n. f. [Lat.]
 1. A judge appointed by the parties, to whose determination they voluntarily submit.

He would put himself into the king's hands, and make him ruler of the peace. Bacon.

2. One who has the power of decision or regulation; a judge.
 Next him, high arbiter,
 Chance governs all. Milton.

His majesty, in this great conjuncture, seems to be generally allowed for the sole arbiter of the affairs of Christendom. Temple.

ARBITRABLE. adj. [from arbitrator, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending upon the will.

The ordinary revenue of a parsonage is in land, called the glebe; in tythe, a part part of our goods rendered to God; in tithes, offerings bestowed upon God by the people, either in such arbitrarily proportion as their own devotion moveth them, or as the laws or customs of particular places do require them. Spekman.

ARBITRIMENT. n. f. [from arbitrator, Lat.] Will; determination; choice.

Stand fast! to stand or fall,
 Free in thine own arbitriment it stands,
 Perfect within, no outward aid require;
 And all temptation to transgresses repel. Milton.

ARBITRARILY. adv. [from arbitrarius.] With no other rule than the will; despotically; absolutely.

He governed arbitrarily, he was expelled; and came to the distressed end of all tyrants. Dryden.

ARBITRARIOSUS. adj. [from arbitrarius, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending on the will.

These are standing and irrepealable truths, such as have no precarious existence, or arbitrarius dependence upon any will understanding whatsoever. Norris.

ARBITRARIOSUS. adv. [from arbitrarius.] Arbitrarily; according to mere will and pleasure.

Which words are imposed arbitrarily, distorted from their common use, the mind must be led into misperception. Glennell.

ARBITRARY. adj. [from arbitrarius, Lat.]
 1. Dependent; absolute; bound by no law; following the will without restraint. It is applied both to persons and things.

In vain the Tyrian queen reigns her life
 For the shallow glory of a virtuous wife,
 If living hard may false amours rehearse,
 And blash her name with arbitrary verse. Walsh.

Their little lusts of arbitrary pride,
 Nor bear to lose their vassals ty'd.
 Depending on no rules; capricious. Prior.

It may be perceived, with what inaccuracy we ascribe effects depending on the natural power of time, unto arbitrary calculation, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown's Vulgar Err.

ARBITRATOR. v. a. [from arbitrator, Lat.]
 1. To decide; to determine.

This might have been prevented, and made whole,
 With very easy arguments of love,
 Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
 With fearful bloody issue arbitrate. Shakespeare.

2. To judge of.
 Yet where an equal poise of hope and fear
 Does arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope, rather than fear. Milton.

ARBITRATE. v. n. To give judgment.
 It did arbitrate upon the several reports of sense, not like a drowsy judge, only hearing, but also directing their verdict. South.

ARBITRARINESS. n. f. [from arbitrarius.] Despoticalness; tyranny.

He that by harshness of nature, and arbitrariness of commands, uses his children like servants, is what they mean by a tyrant. Temple.

ARBITRATION. n. f. [from arbitrator, Lat.] The determination of a cause by a judge mutually agreed on by the parties contending.

ARBITRATOR. n. f. [from arbitrator.]
 1. An extraordinary judge between party and party, chosen by their mutual consent. Conrad.

Be a good soldier, or upright trustee,
 An arbitrator from corruption free. Dryden.

2. A governor; a president.
 Though heav'n be shut,
 And heav'n's high arbitrator sit secure
 In his own strength, this place may be expos'd. Milton.

3. He that has the power of acting by his own choice without limit or controul.

Another Blenheim or Ramillies will make the confederates masters of their own terms, and arbitrators of a peace.
Addison on the State of the War.

4. The determiner; he that puts an end to any affair.
 But now the arbitrator of despair,
 Just death, kind usurper of man's miseries,
 With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakespeare.

The end crowns all;
 And that old common arbitrator, time,
 Will one day end it. Shakespeare.

ARBITREMENT. n. f. [from arbitrator, Lat.]
 1. Decision; determination.

I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more. Shakespeare.

Aid was granted, and the quarrel brought to the arbitrement of the sword. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

2. Compromise.
 Linkswarm persons think they may accommodate points of religion by middle ways, and witty reconciliations; as if they would make an arbitrement between God and man. Bacon.

ARBORARY. adj. [from arborarius, Lat.] Of or belonging to a tree. D.
ARBORIST. n. f. [from arbor, Lat. a tree.] A small tree or shrub.

No arborist with painted blossoms dress'd,
 And smelling sweet, but there it might be found,
 To bud out fair, and her sweet smells throw all around. Fairy Queen.

Now hid, now seen,
 Among thick woven arborists, and flow'rs,
 Imbroider'd on each bank. Milton.

ARBOREOUS. adj. [from arborus, Lat.]
 1. Belonging to trees.

2. A term in botany, to distinguish such funguses or mosses as grow upon trees, from those that grow on the ground. Quincy.

They speak properly, who make it an arborescens excellence, or rather a superplant breed of a vicious and superfluous lopp, which the tree itself cannot assimilate. Brown's Vulgar Err.

ARBORIST. n. f. [from arbor, Fr. from arbor, a tree.] A naturalist who makes trees his study.

The nature of the mulberry, which the arborists observe to be long in the begetting his buds; but the cold seasons being past, he shoots them all out in a night. Hewel.

ARBOROUS. adj. [from arbor, Lat.] Belonging to a tree.
 From under shady arborous roof

Soon as they forth were come to open light
 Of day-spring, and the sun. Milton.

ARBOR. n. f. [from arbor, Lat. a tree.] A bower; a place covered with green branches of trees.

Nay you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbor, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting. Shakespeare.

Let us divide our labours: thou, where choice
 Leads thee, or where most needs, whither to wind
 The woodbine round this arbor, or direct
 The clapping ivy where to climb. Milton.

For moon-day's heat are cloier arbours made,
 And for fresh evening air the op'ner glade. Dryden.

ARBOR VITAE. A species of bindweed; which see.
ARBUSCLE. n. f. [from arbuscula, Lat.] Any little shrub. DiB.

A'RBUTE. n. f. [arbutus, Lat.]

Arbutus, or strawberry tree, grows common in Ireland. It is difficult to be raised from the seeds, but may be propagated by layers. It grows to a goodly tree, endures our climate, unless the weather be very severe, and makes beautiful hedges.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

Rough arbutus slips into a hazel bough

Are oft ingrafted; and good apples grow

Out of a plain tree stock. May.

ARC. n. f. [arcus, Lat.]

1. A segment; a part of a circle; not more than a femicircle. Their segments, or arcs, for the most part, exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

2. An arch.

Lead some vain church with old theatrick flate,

Turn arc of triumph to a garden gate;

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all

On some patch'd dog-hole c'd with ends of wall. Pope.

Or call the winds through long arcades to roar,

Proud to catch hold at a Venetian door. Pope.

ARCA'NUM. n. f. in the plural arcana. A Latin word, signifying a secret.

ARCH. n. f. [arcus, Lat.]

1. Part of a circle, not more than the half.

The mind perceives, that an arch of a circle is less than the whole circle, as clearly as it does the idea of a circle. Locke.

2. A building in form of a segment of a circle, used for bridges and other works.

Ne'er through an arch bo hurried the blown tide,

As the comforted through the gates. Shakespeare.

Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch.

Of the rais'd empire fall! here is my space. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The royal squadron marches,

Erect triumphal arches

For Albion and Albanian. Dryden.

3. The key, or vault of heaven.

Hath nature given them eyes

To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope

Of sea and land. Shakespeare.

4. [from ἀρχή.] A chief. Obsolete.

The noble duke, my master,

My worthy arch and patron comes to night. Shakespeare.

75 ARCH. vs. n. [arcus, Lat.]

1. To build arches.

The nations of the field and wood

Build on the wave, or arch beneath the fand. Pope.

2. To cover with arches.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through. Shakespeare.

The proud river which makes her bed at her feet, is arched over with such a curious pile of stones, that considering the rapid course of the deep stream that roars under it, may well take place among the wonders of the world. Keats.

ARCH. adj. [from ἀρχή, chief.]

1. Chief; of the first class.

The tyrannous and bloody as is done;

The most arch deed of piteous massacre,

That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakespeare.

There is sprung up

An heretick, an arch one, Cranmer. Shakespeare.

2. Wagging; mirthful; triflingly mischievous. This signification it seems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy most remarkable for his pranks; as the arch rogue, &c.

Eugenio set out from the same university, and about the same time with Corufades; he had the reputation of an arch lad at school. Swift.

ARCH. in composition, signifies chief, or of the first class, [from ἀρχή, or ἀρχή] as, archangel, archbishop. It is pronounced variously with regard to the ch, which before a consonant found as in chief, as archdeacon; before a vowel like i, as archangel.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. f. [archangelus, Lat.] One of the highest orders of angels.

His form had yet not loft

All her original brightness, nor appear'd

Less than archangel ruin'd, and th' excels

Of glory obscur'd. Milton.

'Tis sure th' archangel's trumpet I hear,

Nature's great pulsing-bell, the only call

Of God's that will be heard by all. Norris.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. f. [lanius, Lat.] The name of a plant, called also Dead nettle.

It hath a labiated flower of one leaf, whose upper lip is hollow like a spoon; but the under one divided into two segments, in the form of a heart, and both end in chaps brimmed and edged; out of the flower cup, which is fistulous and cut into segments, rises the pointal, fixed, like a nail, to the hinder part of the flower, with four embayes, which become triangular feeds inclosed in a bulk formed of the flower cup. The species are fourteen, and seven of them grow wild on dry banks, or under hedges, two sorts of which are used in medicine. Milton.

ARCHANGE'LICK. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels.

He ceas'd, and th' archangelick pow'r prepar'd

For swift descent; with him the cohort bright

Of watchful cherubim. Milton.

ARCHB'ACON. n. f. [from arch and beacon.] The chief place of prospect, or of signal.

You shall win the top of the Cornish archbeacon Hainborough, which may for prospect compare with Rama in Palestina. Carew.

ARCHBISHOP. n. f. [from arch and bishop.] A bishop of the first class, who superintends the conduct of other bishops his suffragans.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,

Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury. Shakespeare.

The archbishop was the known architect of this new fabric.

Clarendon.

ARCHBISHOPRICK. n. f. [from archbishop.] The state or jurisdiction of an archbishop.

'Tis the cardinal;

And merely to revenge him on the emperor,

For not bestowing on him, at his asking,

The archbishoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd. Shakespeare.

This excellent man, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, underwent the envy and malice of men who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

ARCHCHA'NTER. n. f. [from arch and chanter.] The chief chanter.

ARCHDE'ACON. n. f. [archidiaconus, Lat.] One that supplies the bishop's place and office in such matters as do belong to the episcopal function. The law styles him the bishop's vicar, or vicegerent. Ayliffe.

Left negligence might foist in abuses, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carew.

ARCHDE'ACONRY. n. f. [archidiaconatus, Lat.] The office or jurisdiction of an archdeacon.

It oweth subjection to the metropolitan of Canterbury, and hath one only archdeaconry. Carew.

ARCHDE'ACONSHIP. n. f. [from archdeacon.] The office of an archdeacon.

ARCHDU'KE. n. f. [archidux, Lat.] A title given to some foreign princes, as of Austria and Tuscany.

Philip archduke of Austria, during his voyage from the Netherlands towards Spain, was weather-driven into Weymouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ARCHDU'CHESS. n. f. [from arch and duchess.] A title given to the sister or daughter of the archduke of Austria, or to the wife of an archduke of Tuscany.

ARCH-PHILO'SOPHER. n. f. [from arch and philosopher.] Chief philosopher.

It is no improbable opinion therefore, which the arch-philos- opher was of, that the chiefest person in every household was always as it were a king. Hester.

ARCH-PRE'LATE. n. f. [from arch and prælate.] Chief prælate.

May we not wonder, that a man of St. Basil's authority and quality, an arch-prælate in the house of God, should have his name far and wide called in question. Hester.

ARCH-PRE'SBYTER. n. f. [from arch and presbyter.] Chief pre-byter.

As simple deacons are in subjection to presbyters, according to the canon law; so are also presbyters, and arch-presbyters in subjection to these archdeacons. Ayliffe.

ARCH-PRI'EST. n. f. [from arch and priest.] Chief priest.

The word decanus was extended to an ecclesiastical dignity, which included the arch-priests. Ayliffe.

ARCHAIO'LOGY. n. f. [from ἀρχαίολογία, ancient, and λόγος, a discourse.] A discourse on antiquity.

ARCHAIOLOG'ICK. adj. [from archaiology.] Relating to a discourse on antiquity.

ARCHAISM. n. f. [ἀρχαϊσμός.] An ancient phrase, or mode of expression.

I shall never use archaisms, like Milton. Watts.

A'RCED. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou haft

the right arched bent of the brow. Shakespeare.

A'RCHE. n. f. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that shoots with a bow; he that carries a bow in battle.

Fight, gentlemen of England; fight, bold yeomen!

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head;

Spur your proud horses hard.

This Cupid is no longer an archer, his glory hath be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Shakespeare.

Thou frequent bring'st the smitten deer;

For seldom, archer lay, thy arrows err. Prior.

A'RCHE. n. f. [from archer.]

1. The use of the bow.

Among the English artillery, archery challengeth the pre-eminence, as peculiar to our nation. Camden.

2. The art of flouting with the bow.

Flower of the purple dyes,
Hit with Cupid's arrows,
Sink in apple of his eye!

Statist. Anst. Night's Dr.

3. The art of an archer.

Bill's raptures shall leave their quire,
And turn love's follies upon thee.

Grasshopper's Steps to Temple.

ARCHIEPISCOPAL n. f. [from archies and episcopus.] The chief and most ancient consistory that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the directing of spiritual causes, so called from Bow Church in London, where it is kept, whose top is raised of stone pillars, built arch-wise. The judge of this court is named the dean of the arches, or official of the archiepiscopal: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he satisfies, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made. Crævell.

ARCHITECTURE n. f. [from architectus, Lat.] The original of which any resemblance is made.

Our souls, though they might have perceived images themselves by simple sense, yet it seems inconceivable, how they should apprehend that architecture. Glanville's Scripta Scientia. A man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward architectures or patterns of our ideas; so our sensations of hunger, cold, are also inward architectures or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of these things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts's Logic.

ARCHITECTURAL adj. [from architectus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's optics I have seen
Him who is fairer than the sons of men:

The source of good, the light architectural. Norris's Mssell.

ARCHIPEUS n. f. [probably from archipus.] A word by which Pausanias seems to have meant a power that presides over the animal economy, distinct from the rational soul.

ARCHIDIACONAL adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be censured in an archidiaconal visitation.

ARCHIEPISCOPAL adj. [from archiepiscopus, Lat. an archbishop.] Belonging to an archbishop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiscopal see, the suffragans are subject to archiepiscopal jurisdiction.

ARCHITECT n. f. [from architectus, Lat.]

1. A possessor of the art of building.

The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work, his ambition should be to make the form triumph over the matter. Watson.

2. A contriver of a building; a builder.

The hasty multitude
Almiring enter'd, and the work fore praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'rd structure high,
Where scepter'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated.

Ray on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An ingenious Moot,
Chief architect; and plotter of these woes. Shak. Tit. And on.

ARCHITECTIVE adj. [from architectus.] That performs the work of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architective materials?

Derham's Physico-Theology.

ARCHITECTURAL adj. [from architectus, Lat. an architect.] That which has the power or skill of an architect; that which can build or form any thing.

To say that some more huge part of either, or all the hypothetical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure, is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima adorned this architectural spirit, and what agent made so skillful and happy a mixture. Boyle's Sept. Chym.

ARCHITECTURE n. f. [from architectus, Lat.]

1. The art or science of building.

Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence a science, military architecture, or fortifications, and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c. Some think the Tyrians were the first improvers of architecture; but others contend that the rules of this art were delivered by God himself to Solomon, from whom the Tyrians had their instruction, which they afterwards communicated to the Egyptians; these to the Grecians, and these again to the Romans. Under Augustus architecture arrived to its great glory; but it afterwards dwindled by degrees, and at last fell with the western empire, in the fifth century, when the Visigoths destroyed all the most beautiful monuments of antiquity; and a new manner of building took its rise, called the Gothick, coarse, arched, and massive. Of the last and was the Arabick, Moorish or Moorish architecture, brought from the south by the Moors and Saracens. The architects of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, who had some knowledge of sculpture, seemed to make perfection consist altogether in the delicacy and multitude of ornaments, which they frequently bestowed on their buildings without any conduct or taste. In the two last centuries, the architects of Italy and France were wholly bent upon retrieving the primitive simplicity and beauty of ancient architecture, in which they did not fail of success. This art is divided into five orders, the Tuscan, Dorick, Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite, which took their rise from the different proportions that the different kinds of buildings rendered necessary, according to the bulk, strength, delicacy, richness, or simplicity required. Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build:

Then palaces and lofty domes arose,
These for devotion, and for pleasure thine. Blackm. Great.

2. The effect or performance of the science of building.

The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, ascribed to a particular providence. Barrett's Theory. ARCHITRAVE n. f. [from architrave, chief, and trave, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave door and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or miter beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloisters, &c. In chimney it is called the mantle piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hypertilion. Builders Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; through the lightness whereof the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Wellward a pompous frontpiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,

And sculpture rising on the rugged gold. Pope.

ARCHIVES n. f. without a singular. [from archivus, Lat.] The places where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps found-times used for the writings themselves.

Though we think our words vanish with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us.

Government of the Tongue. I shall now only look a little into the Modish architect, to observe what they furnish us with upon this subject. Hudson's.

ARCHWISE adv. [from arch and wise.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, so called archata ecclesia, or from How church in London, which is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, by reason of the temple or cloister thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars in fashion of a bow bent archwise. A Jiff's Port.

ARCHITENT adj. [from architectus, Lat.] Bow-bearing. Dict.

ARCTATION n. f. [from archus, to straighten.] Daightening; confinement to a narrower compass.

ARCTIC n. f. [from Arctus, the northern constellation.] Northern; lying under the Arctus, or bear. See ARCTIC.

Ever during snows, perpetual fables
Of darkness, would congeal their livid blood,
Did not the arctic tract spontaneous yield

A cheering purple berry big with wine. Philips.

ARCTIC Circle. See CIRCLE.

ARCUATE adj. [from arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the confusion of species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Boyle's Nat. Hist.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carnosus fibres are inflected and arcuate. Ray on Creation.

ARCUATE adj. [from arcuatus.] Bent; inflected. Dict.

ARCUATION n. f. [from arcuatus.] Bent in the form of an arch.

1. The act of bending any thing; incurvation.

2. The state of being bent; curvity, or crookedness.

3. [In gardening.] The method of raising by layers such trees as cannot be raised from seed, or that bear no wood, as the elm, lime, alder, willow; and is so called from bending down to the ground the branches which spring from the offsets or bolls after they are planted. Chambers.

ARCUATURE n. f. [from arcuatus, low Latin.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Dict.

ARCUATE n. f. [from arcus, a bow, and calista, an engine.] A cross-bow man.

King John was equipp'd by a very good arcuballista, who said, that he would soon dispatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet, quoth the earl, that we should procure the death of the holy one of God.

C Camden's Remains.

ARD. [Saxon.] Signifies natural disposition; as, Goddard is a divine temper; Reinard, a fureur temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal disposition; Bernard, filial affection, &c.

Giffon's Camden.

ARDENCY. n. f. [from ardent.] Ardour; eagerness; warmth of affection.

Accepted they shall be, if qualified with humility, and ardency and preference, so far as concerns the end immediate to them.

Hannond's Pract. Catchpjm.

The ineffable happiness of our dear Redeemer must needs bring an increase to ours, commensurate to the ardency of our love for him.

Bylle.

ARDENT. adj. [ardens, Lat. burning.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.

Chymists observe, that vegetables, as lavender, rue, marjoram, &c. distilled before fermentation, yield oils without any burning spirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent spirits without oils; which shews, that their oil is, by fermentation, converted into spirit.

Newton's Opticks.

2. Fierce; vehement.

A knight of swarthy face,
High on a cole-black ficed purf'd the chace;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd.

Dryden.

3. Passionate; affectionate: used generally of desire.

Another nymph with fatal pow'r may rise,
To damp the sinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confess,
And scorn the ardent vows that I have blest.

Prior.

ARDENTLY. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately. With true zeal may our hearts be most ardently inflamed to our religion.

Spratt's Sermons.

ARDOUR. n. f. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.

2. Heat of affection, as love, desire, courage.

Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend.

South.

The soldiers throut around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, inly pleas'd to see
His host.

Dryden.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd,
And the vain ardours of our love restrain'd.

Pope's Odyssey.

3. The person ardent or bright. This is only used by Milton. Nor delay'd the winged faint,
After his charge receiv'd; but from among Thousand celestial ardours, where he stood Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-springing light,
Flew thro' the midst of heav'n.

Paradise Lost.

Watt's Logick.

2. Any open surface, as the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or stage of an amphitheatre. An inclosed place, as hills, or a bowling-green, or grass-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth somewhat more than half the longitude.

Wotton.

The Alban lake is of an oval figure, and, by reason of the high mountains that encompass it, looks like the area of some vast amphitheatre.

Addison on Italy.

In areas vary'd with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the javlin dart.

Pope's Odyssey.

To ARE'AD, or AREED. v. a. [areban, Sax. to counsel.] To advise; to direct.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds,
Whose praises having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred muse areeds
To blazon broad.

Fairy Queen.

But mark what I areed thee now: avant,
Fly thither whence thou fed'st! If from this hour
Within these hallow'd limits thou appear
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd.

Paradise Lost.

AREFACTION. n. f. [arefacis, Lat. to dry.] The state of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally, proceed arefaction, and most of the effects of nature.

Bacon's Nat. History.

To A'REFY. v. a. [arefacis, Lat. to dry.] To dry; to exhale moisture.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, clay, &c. and do both time or age arefy, as in the same bodies, &c.

Bacon's Nat. History.

Or as it were the pagans of the fies,

Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

Do overpeer the petty traffickers.

To ARGUE. v. n. [arguo, Lat.]

1. To reason; to offer reasons.

I know your majesty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her what
A woman of less place might ask by law;
Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her.

Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

Publick arguing oft serves not only to exasperate the minds, but to whet the wits of heretics.

Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not passing on, would perplex any one, who should argue from such an idea.

Lect.

2. To persuade by argument.

It is a sort of poetical logic which I would make use of, to argue you into a protection of this play.

Congr. Ded. to Old Bat.

3. To dispute; with the particles with or against before the opponent, and against before the thing opposed.

Why do christians, of several persuasions, so fiercely argue against the fallibility of each other?

Decay of Piety.

He that by often arguing against his own sense, imposes falsehoods on others, is not far from believing himself.

Lect.

I do not see how they can argue with any one, without first turning down their boundaries.

Lect.

To ARGUE. v. a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,
By the sun's fall, which now toward's earth doth bend,
Then we might fear that virtue, since the fell
So low as woman, should be near her end.

Denne.

2. To debate any question; as, to argue a cause.

3. To prove, as an arguer.

So many laws argue to many fins
Among them: how can God with such reside?

Parad. Lost.

It argues distemper of the mind as well as of the body, when a man is continually suffering from one side to the other. Scutb.
 This argues a virtue and disposition in those sides of the rays, which answers to that virtue and disposition of the crystal. Newton's Opticks.

To charge with, as a crime; with arg.

4. I have pleaded guilty to all thoughts and expressions of mine, which can be truly argued of obscenity, proflundity, or immorality, and retract them. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
 The accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a fervid copyist, and total barrenness of invention; yet the facts were the same. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

ARGUER, n. f. [from argue.] A reasoner; a disputor; a controversialist.

Men are ashamed to be proficients to a weak arguer, as thinking they must part with their reputation as well as their fin. Deay of Pity.

ARGUMENT, n. f. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reason alleged for or against anything.
 We sometimes see, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at least unpunished; yet it ought not to be an argument against the art. Dryden's Preface to a Tyrannical Love.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as that thing is capable of supposing it were; we ought not in reason to make any doubt of the existence of that thing. Tilley's Preface.
 And thus we have our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Lect.

2. The subject of any discourse or writing.
 That the who er but now was your best object, Your praise's argument, balm of your age, Dearth and beil. Shakspeare's King Lear.

To the height of this great argument I may assert eternal providence, And justify the ways of God to man. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Sad task! yet argument

Not less, but more heroic than the wrath Of stern Achilles. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 A much longer discourse my argument requires; your merciful dispositions a much shorter. Spratt's Sermons.

3. The contents of any work furnished up by way of abstract.
 'The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the economy and disposition of it, are the things which distinguish copies from originals. Dryden's Æneid, Preface.

4. A controversy.
 This day, in argument upon a case,

Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me. Sh. H. VI.
 If the idea be not agreed on betwixt the speaker and hearer, the argument is not about things, but names. L. etc.

It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses. So. C. m. d. i. n.
 5. It has sometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The best moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itself. Tilley's

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the very best argument for a future state. Atterbury's Sermons.

6. [In astronomy.] An arch by which we seek another unknown arch, proportional to the first. Chambers's

ARGUMENTAL, adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reasoning.

Affected sense thou kindly dost feel free, Oppress'd with argument 'nd tyranny, And routed reason finds a safe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTATION, n. f. [from argument.] Reasoning; the art of reasoning.

Argument as it is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one proposition from two or more propositions premised. Or as it is the drawing a conclusion, which before was unknown, or useful, from some propositions more known and evident; to which we have judged that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think, we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not mortal. Watts's Logic.

I suppose it is no ill topic of argumentation, to the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of respect. Scutb.
 His thoughts must be masculine, full of argumentation, and that sufficiently warm. Dryden.

It is certain, that the whole course of his argumentation comes to nothing. Johnson's Preface to his Sermons.

ARGUMENTATIVE, adj. [from argument.] Consisting of argument; containing argument.

This omission, considering the bounds within which the argumentative part of my discourse was confined, I could not avoid. Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

2. Shagreened.
ARIA, n. f. [Ital. in music.] An air, song, or tune.

ARID, adj. [aridus, Lat. dry.] Dry; parched up.
 My complexion is become adult, and my body arid, by visiting lands. Arbutnot and Pope's Maritima Scriblers.

NO IX.

His harden'd fingers deck the gaudy springs,

Without him summer were an arid waste. Thomson's Autumn.

ARIDITY, n. f. [from arid.]

1. Dryness; scarcity.

Salt taken in great quantities will reduce an animal body to the greatest extremity of aridity, or dryness. A. but on Elements.
 2. In the theological sense, a kind of infensibility in devotion, contrary to melting.

Strike my soul with lively apprehensions of thy excellencies, to bear up my spirit under the greatest aridity and dejections, with the delightful prospect of thy glories. Norris.

ARIES, n. f. [Lat.] The Ram; one of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

At last from Aries roll the bounteous fun,
 And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson's Spring.

ARISTATE, v. n. [arietis, Lat.]

1. To butt like a ram.

2. To strike in imitation of the blows which rams give with their heads.

ARISTATON, n. f. [from aristate.]

1. The act of butting like a ram.

2. The act of battering with an engine called a ram.

The strength of the percussion, wherein ordnance does exceed all aristatons and ancient inventions. Bacon's Essays.

3. The act of striking, or conducting in general.

Now those heterogeneous atoms by themselves, hit so exactly into their proper residence, in the midst of such tumultuary motions, and aristatons of other particles. Glanv. S. e. p. i.

ARISTATON, n. f. [Ital. in music.] A short air, song, or tune.

ARISTATON, adv. [from a and right.]

1. Rightly; without mental error.

How him I lov'd, and love with all my might;
 So thought I like of him, and think I thought aristat. F. 2.

These were thy thoughts, and those could'st judge aristat, Till interst made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden's Fables.

The motions of the tongue are so easy, and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aristat. Haller.

2. Rightly; without crime.

A generation that set not their heart aristat. Pf. lxxviii. 8.

3. Rightly; without failing of the end designed.
 Guardian of the groves, and goddess of the night,
 Fair queen, he said, direct my dark aristat. Dryden's Æneid.

ARISTOLATION, or ARISTOLATION, n. f. [aristolus, Lat. a soothsayer.] Soothsaying; vaticination.

The priests of older time have deluded their apprehensions with aristolations, soothsaying, and such oblique idolatries. Barrow's Vulgar Errors.

ARIO, n. f. [Ital. in music.] The movement of a common air, song, or tune. Di. d.

ARISTE, v. n. pret. ariste, particip. ariste. [from a and rise.]

1. To mount upward as the sun.

He rose, and, looking up, beheld the skies

With purple blushing, and the day ariste. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To get up as from sleep, or from rest.
 So Edith ariste up, and said unto them, ye have transgressed the law. E. f. ix. 7.

How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard; when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Proverbs vi. 9.

3. To come into view, as from obscurity.

There shall ariste false Christs and false prophets. Matt. xxiv.

4. To revive from death.

Thy dead men shall live, together with my body shall they ariste: awake and sing ye that dwell in dust. Isaiah xxvi. 19.

5. To proceed, or have its original.

They which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arise about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice. Acts xi. 19.

I know not what mischief may arise hereafter from the example of such an innovation. Dryden.

6. To enter upon a new station.

Another Mary then arise,
 And did rigorous laws impole. Cowley.

7. To commence hostility.
 And when he arise against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him. 1 Samuel xvii. 35.

For the various senses of this word, see Rise.

ARISTOCRACY, n. f. [ἀριστοκρατία, greatness, and κράτος, to govern.] That form of government which places the supreme power in the nobles, without a king, and exclusively of the people.

The aristocracy of Venice hath admitted for many abuses through the degeneracy of the nobles, that the period of its duration seems to approach. Swift.

ARISTOCRATICAL, or ARISTOCRATIC, adj. [from aristocracy.] Relating to aristocracy; including a form of government by the nobles.

Cockham distinguishes, that the papacy, or ecclesiastical monarchy, may be changed in an extraordinary manner, for some time, into an aristocratical form of government. Alfieri's Par.

ARISTOCRATICALNESS, n. f. [from aristocratical.] An aristocratical state.

ARITHMANCY, n. f. [from ἀριθμός, number, and μανία, divination.] A foretelling future events by numbers. D. d.

ARITHMETICAL, adj. [from arithmetick.] According to the rules or method of arithmetic.

The principles of bodies may be infinitely small, not only beyond all naked or assisted sense, but beyond all arithmetical operation or conception. Grego's Casm. Sacra.

The squares of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatic colour, were in arithmetical progression, as in the fifth observation. Newton's Opticks.

ARITHMETICALLY, adv. [from arithmetical.] In an arithmetical manner; according to the principles of arithmetic.

Though the fifth part of a selen being a simple fraction, and arithmetically regular, it is yet no proper part of that measure. A. Labrous on Cains.

ARITHMETICIAN, n. f. [from arithmetick.] A master of the art of numbers.

A man had need be a good arithmetician, to understand this author's works. His description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison on Ancient Medals.

ARITHMETICK, n. f. [ἀριθμητική, number, and μέτρον, measure.] The science of numbers; the art of computation.

We have very little intelligence about the origin and invention of arithmetick; but probably it must have taken its rise from the introduction of commerce, and consequently be of Syrian invention. From Asia it passed into Egypt, where it was greatly cultivated. From thence it was transmitted to the Greeks, who conveyed it to the Romans with additional improvements. But, from some treatises of the ancients remaining on this subject, it appears that their arithmetick was much inferior to that of the moderns. Chambers.

On fair ground I could heat forty of them; But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetick. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

The Christian religion, according to the Apostle's arithmetick, hath but these three parts of it; sobriety, justice, religion. Taylor.

ARK, n. f. [ἀρκή, Lat. a cheit.]

1. A vessel to swim upon the water, usually applied to that in which Noah was preserved from the universal deluge.

Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms thou shalt make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without. Gen. vi. 14.

The one just man alive, by his command,

Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,

To save himself and household, from amidst

A world devote to universal wreck. Milven's Paradise Lost.

2. The repository of the covenant of God with the Jews.

This coffer was of shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold, being two cubits and a half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high. It had two rings of gold on each side, through which the flaves were put for carrying it. Upon the top of it was a kind of gold crown all around it, and two cherubim were fastened to the cover. It contained the two tables of stone, written by the hand of God. Calmet.

ARM, n. f. [αἶμα, eorum, Sax.]

1. The limb which reaches from the hand to the shoulder.

If I have lift up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Jeb xxxi. 21.

Like helpless friends, who view from thence

The labouring ship, and hear the tempest roar,

So flood they with their arms across. Dryden.

2. The bough of a tree.

The trees fired out their arms to shade her face, But she on elbow leant. Sidney.

Hide me, ye forests, in your cloist' bowers,

Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,

And with the beech a mutual shade combines. Gay.

3. An inlet of water from the sea.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,

An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Dryden's Fœnix.

We have yet seen but an arm of this sea of beauty. Norris.

4. Power; might. In this sense is used the secular arm, &c.

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. Jer. xvii. 5.

O God, thy arm was here!

And not to us, but to thy arm alone. Shakspeare's Henry V.

ARM'S END, n. f. A phrase taken from boxing, in which the weaker man may overcome the stronger, if he can keep him from closing.

Such a one as can keep him at arm's end, need never wish for a better companion. Sidney's Arcadia.

For my sake be comfortable, hold death awhile at the arm's end. Shakspeare's As you like it.

TO ARM, v. a. [arma, Lat.]

1. To furnish with armour of defence, or weapons of offence.

And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and purified them unto Dan. Gen. xiv. 14.

True conscious honour is to feel no sin;

He's arm'd without that's innocent within. Pope.

2. To plate with any thing that may add strength.

Their wounded fleeds

Yerk out their arm'd heels at their dead masters. Sh. H. V.

3. To furnish; to fit up; as, to arm a landstreak, is to case it with iron.

You must arm your book with the line in the inside of it.

W. alston's Angler.

Having armed the callus, I left off those tents, and dress'd it with others armed with digestives. W. alston's Surgeon.

TO ARM, v. n.

1. To take arms.

Think we king Harry strong;

And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. Sh. H. V.

2. To provide against

His servants, thoroughly arm'd against such coverture,

Reported unto all, that he was sure

A noble gentleman of high regard. Spenser's Hobbs Tale.

ARMADA, n. f. [span.] A fleet of war.] An armament for sea;

a fleet of war. It is often erroneously spelt armad.

In all the mid-east seas was left no armad,

Spred was the huge armad wide and broad,

From Venice, Genoa, and towns which them confine. Fairfax.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,

A whole armad of collected sail

Is scatter'd and disjoint'd from fellowship. Shakspeare's King John.

At length resolv'd to assert the wat'ry ball,

He in himself did whole armad bring;

His aged seamen might their master call,

And choose for general, were he not their king. Dryden.

ARMADILLO, n. f. [Spanish.] A four-footed animal of Brazil, as big as a cat, with a snout like a hog, a tail like a lizard, and feet like a hedge-hog. He is armed all over with hard scales like armour, whence he takes his name, and retires under them like the tortoise. He lives in holes, or in the water, being of the amphibious kind. His scales are of a bony or cartilaginous substance; but they are easily pierced. This animal hides himself a third part of the year under ground. He feeds upon roots, sugar-canes, fruits, and poultry. When he is caught, he draws up his feet and head to his belly, and rolls himself up in a ball, which the strongest hand cannot open; and he must be brought near the fire before he will show his nose. His flesh is white, fat, tender, and more delicate than that of a sucking pig. Trevan.

ARMAMENT, n. f. [armamentum, Lat.] A force equipped for war; generally used of a naval force.

ARMAMENTARY, n. f. [armamentarius, Lat.] An armoury;

a magazine or arsenal of warlike implements. D. d.

ARMAN, n. f. A confection for restoring lost appetite in horses. D.

ARMATURE, n. f. [armatura, Lat.] Armour; something to defend the body from hurt.

Others should be armed with hard shells; others with pri-ckles; the rest that have no such armature, should be endued with great swiftness and perversity. Ray on the Creation.

ARMED, adj. [in heraldry.] Is used in respect of beasts and birds of prey, when their teeth, horns, feet, beaks, talons, or tusks, are of a different colour from the rest; as, he bears a cock or a falcon armed, or. Chambers.

ARMED Chair, n. f. [from armed and chair.] An elbow chair, or a chair with rests for the arms.

ARMENIAN Bile, n. f. A fatty medicinal kind of earth, of a pale reddish colour, of considerable use as an absorbent, astringent, and vulnerary; which takes its name from the country of Armenia, whence it is chiefly brought.

ARMENIAN Stone, n. f. A mixt stone or earth of a blue colour, spotted with green, black and yellow; anciently brought only from Armenia, but now found in Germany, and the Ty-rol. It bears a near resemblance to lapis lazuli, from which it seems only to differ in degree of maturity; it being softer, and speckled with green instead of gold. Boerhaave ranks it among femineals; and supposes it composed of a metal and earth.

Woodward says, it owes its colour to an admixture of copper.

Its chief use is in mosaic work, though it has some place also in physick. Chambers.

ARMENTAL, adj. [armenialis, or armeninus, Lat.] Belonging to a drove or herd of cattle. D. d.

ARMENTO'SE, adj. [armeniosus, Lat.] Abounding with cattle. D.

So he needed,

And soberly did mount an armgaunt steed. Sh. Ant. and Cl.

ARM HOLE, n. f. [from arm and hole.] The cavity under the shoulder.

Tickling is most in the soles of the feet, and under the arm- holes, and on the sides. The cause is the thinness of the skin in those parts, joined with the rareness of being touched there.

Boisson's Natural History.

ARMIGEROUS, adj. [from armiger, Lat. an armour-bearer.]

Bearing arms.

ARMILLARY, adj. [from armilla, Lat. a bracelet.] Resembling a bracelet.

When the circles of the mundane sphere are supposed to be described on the convex surface of a sphere, which is hollow within, and, after this, you imagine all parts of the sphere's surface to be cut away, except those parts on which such circles are described; then that sphere is called an armillary sphere, because it appears in the form of several circular rings, or bracelets. Id.

lets, put together in a due position. Harri's Description of the Globe.

ARMILLATED. adj. [armillatus, Lat.] Wearing bracelets. Ditt.
ARMING. n. f. [in a ship.] The fame with wasteclothes, being red clothes, hung about the outside of the ship's upper works fore and aft, and before the cubbidge heads. Some are also hung round the tops, called top arming. Chambers.

ARMIPOTENCE. n. f. [from arma, arms, and potentia, power, Lat.] Power in war.

ARMIPOTENT. adj. [armipotent, Lat.] Powerful in arms; mighty in war.

This is your devoted friend, Sir, the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier. Shakspeare's As You Like It

For if our God the Lord a mighty,
Those armed angels in our aid down fend,
That were at Dathan to his prophet sent,
Thou wilt come down with them, and well defend
Our host. Fairfax.

Beneath the low'ring brow, and on a bent,
The temple flood of Mars armipotent. Dryden.

ARMISTIOUS. adj. [armistius, Lat.] Ruffling with armour.

ARMISTICE. n. f. [armistitium, Lat.] A short truce; a cessation of arms for a short time.

ARMLET. n. f. [from arm.] 1. A little arm; as, an armlet of the sea.
2. A piece of armour for the arm.

3. A bracelet for the arm.
And, when she takes thy hand, and dith seem kind,
Duth searh what rings and armlets she can find. Danne.

ARMNACK. n. f. [erroneously so written for armenic.] A sort of volatile salt. See ARMONIC.

ARMORER. n. f. [armier, Fr.] 1. He that makes armour, or weapons.

Now thrive the armorer, and honour's thought Reigns solely in the breast of every man. Shakspeare.

The armorers make their steel more tough and pliant, by asperion of water and juice of herbs. Bacon.

The whole divition that to Mars certains,
All trades of death that deal in steel for gains
Were there: I he butcher, armor, and smith,
Who forges sharpen'd fauchions, or the scythe. Dryden.

When armorers temper in the ford
The keen-edg'd pole-ax, or the shining sword,
The red-hot metal hites in the lake. Pope's Od.

2. He that dresses armour in armour.

The armorers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers cloving rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspeare.

The morning he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his back before, and his breastplate behind. Camd.

ARMORIAL. adj. [armorial, Fr.] Belonging to the arms or escutcheon of a family, as enigms armorial.

Rage in each thought, by restless musing fed,
Chill the warm cheek, and blast the bloom of life. Thomson.

AROW. adv. [from a and rou.] In a row; with the breaths all bearing against the same line.

Then some green gowns were by the lasses worn
In chaffed plays, till home they walk arow. Sidney.

But with a pace more sober and more flow,
And twenty, rank in rank, they rode arow. Dryden.

AROVNT. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology, but very ancient use.] Be gone; away; a word of expulsion, or avoiding.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world,
He met the night-mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shakspeare's Lear.

ARQUEBUSE. n. f. [Fr. spelt falsely barquebuse.] A hand gun.
It seems to have anciently meant much the same as our carbine or fuscus.

A barquebuse, or ordnance, will be farther heard from the mouth of the piece, than backwards or on the sides. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ARQUEBUSIER. n. f. [from arquebuse.] A soldier armed with an arquebuse.

He compassed them with him well appointed.

ARRACK, or ARACK. n. f. A spirituous liquor imported from the East Indies, used by way of dram and in punch. The word arrack is an Indian name for strong waters of all kinds; for they call our spirits and brandy English arrack. But what we understand by the name arrack, is really no other than a spirit procured by distillation from a vegetable juice called toddy, which flows by incision out of the coccoloba tree. There are divers kinds of it; single, double, and treble distilled. The double distilled is commonly sent abroad, and is preferred to all other arracks of India.

I lend this to be better known for choice of china, tea, arrack, and other Indian goods.

ARRACH, ORRACH, or ORRAGE. n. f. One of the quickest plants both in coming up and running to seed. Its leaves are very good in pottage. It should be used as soon as it peeps out, because it decays quickly. It thrives very well in all sorts of ground.

ARRAIGN. v. a. [from arranger, Fr. to set in order.]

1. To set a thing in order, or in its place. One is said to arraign a writ in a county, that fits it for trial before the justices of the circuit. A prisoner is said to be arraigned, where he is indicted and brought forth to his trial.

Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal Lady; for as the hath Been publicly accused, so shall she have A just and open trial.

2. To accuse; to charge with faults in general, as in controversy, in a satire.

Revels of nature! I shall such copies then arraign th' originals of Maro's pen?
He that thinks a man to the ground, will quickly endeavour to lay him there; for while he despises him, he arraigns and condemns him in his heart.

3. It has for before the fault.

My own enemies I shall never answer; and if your lordship has any, they will not arraign you for want of knowledge.

ARRAIGNMENT. n. f. [from arraign.] The act of arraigning; an accusation; a charge.

In the sixth satire, which seems only an arraignment of the whole sex, there is a latent admonition to avoid ill women.

To ARRANGE. v. a. [from arranger, Fr.] To put in the proper order for a purpose.

I chanc'd this day
To see two knights in travel on my way,
(A sorry sight!) arranged in battle new.

How awkwardly are its muscular fibres arranged, and with what judgment are its columns and furrows disposed!

ARRANGEMENT. n. f. [from arrange.] The act of putting in proper order; the state of being put in order.

There is a proper arrangement of the parts to be brought about in elafick bodies, which may be facilitated by use.

ARRANT. adj. [a word of uncertain etymology, but probably from arrant, which being at first applied in its proper signification to vagabonds, as an arrant or arrant rascal, that is, a rambling rascal, lost, in time, its original signification, and being by its use understood to imply something bad, was applied at large to any thing that was mentioned with hatred or contempt.] Bad in a high degree.

Country folks, who halloo'd and shouted after me, as at the arrant coward that ever shewed his shoulders to the enemy.

A vain fool grows forty times an arranter for than before.

And let him every deity adore,
If his new bride prove not an arrant whore.

ARRANTLY. adv. [from arrant.] Contumaciously; shamefully.

Funeral tears are as arrantly hired out as mourning clothes.

ARRAS. n. f. [from Arras, a town in Artois, where hangings are woven.] Tapestry; hangings woven with images.

I hence to the hall, which was on every side
With rich array and costly arras dight.

He's going to his mother's closet;
Behind the arras I'll convey myself,

To hear the process.

As he shall pass the galleries, I'll place
A guard behind the arras.

ARRAUGHT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser in the preter tense, of which I have not found the prefix, but suppose he derived it from arraha, Fr.] Seized by violence.

His ambitious sons unto them twin Arraught the rule, and from their father drew.

ARRAY. n. f. [from array, Fr. array, Sp. arraz, Ital. array, Teut. order. It was adopted into the middle Latin, misc. humanum arrayum, Knight.]

1. Order, chiefly of war.

The ear clapping them scattered near the army, sent one to command them to their array.

the care of seeing the soldiers duly appointed in their armour.

ARREREAR. adv. [from arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive signification of the word, which, though not now in use, seems to be retained by Spenser. See REAR.

To leave with speed Atlanta swift arrear,
Through forests wild and unrequented land,
To chase the lion, bear, or rugged bear.

ARREREAR. n. f. That which remains behind unpaid, though
due. See ARREREARE.

His boon is given; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize; th' arriers are yet to pay.

If a tenant run away in arrear of some rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away, or lost.

It will comfort our grand children, when they see a few tags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arriers, and booting as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich.

ARRERAGE. n. f. a word now little used. [from arriere, i. e.
behind.]

Arrearage is the remainder of an account, or a sum of money remaining in the hand of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due time, as arrearage of rent.

Paget set forth the king of England's title to his debts and pension from the French king; with all arrearages.

I think,
He'll grant the tribute, send th' arrearages,
Let me look upon our Romans.

The old arrearages under which that crown had long groaned, being defrayed, he hath brought Lurana to uphold and maintain his title.

2. Crept in privily.

ARREST. n. f. [from arrest, Fr. to stop.]

1. In law.

A stop or stay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is said to be arrested. To plead in arrest of judgment, is to shew cause why judgment should be stayed, though the verdict of the twelve be passed. To plead in arrest of taking the inquest upon the former issue, is to shew cause why an inquest should be to-former issue, is to shew cause why an inquest should be to-former issue, is to shew cause why an inquest should be to-

An arrest is a certain restraint of a man's person, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law, and may be called the beginning of imprisonment.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would lend for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment.

2. Any caution.

To the rich man, who had promised himself ease for many years, it was a sad arrest, that his soul was forfeited the first night.

3. A flop.

The flop and arrest of the air sheweth, that the air hath little appetite of ascending. Bacon's Nat. History, N^o 24.

An hereditary consumption, or one engendered by arsenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Hurvy.

There are arsenical, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Hood and.

ARSENICK. n. f. [ἀρσενικόν.] A ponderous mineral substance, volatile and unflammable, which gives a whiteness to metals in fusion, and proves a violent corrosive poison; of which there are three sorts. Native or yellow arsenick, called also auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines, in a sort of gables or stones of different figures and sizes. Its colour, though always yellow, yet admits of different shades and mixtures, as a golden yellow, a reddish yellow, or a green yellow. It contains a small portion of gold, but not worth the expence of separating it. White or crystalline arsenick is extracted from the native kind, by subliming it with a proportion of sea salt, and is chiefly used among us. It is said to be found native in some German mines. The smallest quantity of crystalline arsenick, being mixed with any metal, absolutely destroys its malleability; and a single grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful seeming silver, but without ductility. There is a method practised in Hungary, of procuring yellow and white arsenick from cobalt. Red arsenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral sulphur. There are several chymical preparations of arsenick, intended to blunt its corrosive sales, and render it a safe medicine; but experience proves that it should never be used inwardly, in any form. Chamber.

Arsenick is a very deadly poison; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Hood and.

ART. n. f. [artes, Fr. art, Lat.]

1. The power of doing something not taught by nature and instinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. Scyth.

Blest with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,

The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A science; as, the liberal arts.
Arts that respect the mind were ever reputed nobler than those that serve the body. Ben. Johnson.

3. A trade.

 The art of our necessities is strange,
 That can make vile things precious. Shakespeare.

5. Cunning.
 6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;
 But yet my nature could not bear it so. Shakespeare.

ARTICIAL. adj. [from artery.] That which relates to the artery, that which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,

The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,

Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle passeth through the arterial tube, it is pressed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward against the sides of the tube, and the elastic force of the air, pressing it on the opposite sides of those air-bladders; along the surface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO-TOMY. n. f. [from ἀρτηρία, and τέμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in use among the French.

ARTERY. n. f. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is composed of three coats; of which the first seems to be a thread of fine blood vessels and nerves, for nourishing the coats of the artery; the second is made up of circular, or rather spiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer (that, according to the bigness of the artery. These fibres have a strong elasticity, by which they contract themselves with some force, when the power by which they have been stretched out ceases. The third and inmost coat is a fine transparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwise, upon the dilatation of an artery, would easily separate the spiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow smaller, these coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins seem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elastic tubes, endowed with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Art.

ARTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The last of these was certainly the most easy, but, for the same reason, the least artful. Dryden.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; sly; sly; sly.

O still the fame, Olyfies, the rejoind,
 In useful craft successfully refin'd,
Artful in speech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

ARTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; skillfully; dextrously.

The rest in rank: Honoria chief in place,
 Was artfully contriv'd to set her face,
 To front the thicket, and behold the chase. Dryden.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption.
 How irresistibly mult it prevail, when the seeds of it are artfully sown, and industriously cultivated? Regis.

ARTFULNESS. n. f. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Consider with how much artfulness his bulk and situation is contriv'd, to have just matter to draw round him these massy bodies. Chapman.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRITICK. adj. [from arthritis.]

ARTHRITIC. adj. [from arthritis.]

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritic diseases. Arbuth.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leaches, though some want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritic analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and muscular parts, are able to make progression. Brown.

ARTHRITIS. n. f. [ἀρθριτις, from ἀρτηρία, a joint.] Any distemper that affects the joints, but the gout most particularly. Quincy.

ARTICHOKE. n. f. [artichaut, Fr.]

This plant is very like the thistle, but hath large scaly heads shaped like the cone of the pine tree; the bottom of each scale, as also at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleshy eatable substance. The species are, 1. The garden artichoke, with prickly and smooth leaves. 2. Garden artichoke, without prickles, and reddish heads. 3. The wild artichoke of Beronia. There is at present but one sort of artichoke cultivated in the gardens near London, which is commonly known by the name of the red artichoke. It is propagated from slips or suckers taken from the old roots in February or March. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the stalk, another to the fruit or head, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, stimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Rheumatism.

ARTICHOKE of Jerusalem. See SUN-FLOWER, of which it is a species.

ARTICK. adj. [It should be written artick, from ἀρτικόν.] Northern; under the Bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like those beyond the artick circle; for the sun would be 82 degrees from them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In the following example it is, contrary to custom, split after the French manner, and accented on the last syllable.

To you, who live in chill degree,
 As map informs, of fifty three,
 And do not much for cold atone,
 By bringing thither fifty one,
 Methinks all climes should be alike,
 From tropic c'en to pole artique. Dryden.

ARTICLE. n. f. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of speech, as the, an; the man, on ox.

2. A single clause of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws touching matters of order are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine not so. Hunter.

Have the summary of all our gliets,
 When time shall serve to shew in article. Shakespeare.

Many believe the article of remission of sins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwise than God intended it. Taylor.

All the precept, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us; and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, that we did not obey the gospel which we professed to believe; that we made confession of the christian faith, but lived like heathens. T. Webster.

You have small reason to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; stipulations.

I embrace these conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Which easily endures not article,
 Tying him to aught. Shakespeare.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Caustil had not, in that article of time, given them that brisk charge, by which other troops were read, the king himself had been in danger. Claudian.

To ARTICLE. v. n. [from the noun article.] To stipulate; to make terms.

Such in love's warfare is my case,

I may not artile for grace,

Having put love at last to show this face.

Deane.

He had not infringed the least title of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentric.

Howell's Focal Fergil.

If it be said, God chose the successor, that is manifestly not so in the story of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them.

Lact.

ARTICLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whose life seems fair, yet if all his errors and follies were articled against him, the man would seem vicious and miserable.

Taylor's Rule of living body.

ARTICULAR. adj. [articulus, Lat. belonging to the joints.] Is, in medicine, an epithet applied to a disease, which more immediately infects the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articulis.

ARTICULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Diffinct, as the parts of a limb by joints; not continued in one tone, as articulate sounds; that is, sounds varied and changed at proper pauses, in opposition to the voice of animals, which admit no such variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of speaking clear and distinct, in which one sound is not confounded with another.

In speaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate sounds, the words, are not confounded.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 193.

The first, at least, of these I thought deny'd

To beasts; whom God, on their creation-day,

Creased mute to all articulate sound. Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. Branch'd out into articles. This is a meaning little in use. His instructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquisition, than negotiation: requiring from his ambassadors an answer in distinct articles to his questions.

Bacon's Henry VII.

TO ARTICULATE. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to speak as a man.

The dogmatist knows not by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating sounds into voices. Glover's Steps Scientific.

Parian academicians, in their anatomy of apes, tell us, that the muscles of the tongue, which do most serve to articulate a word, were wholly like to those of man. Roy on Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themselves with a little articulated air. Lact.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things, indeed, you have articulated, Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches, To face the garment of rebellion With more fine colour. Shakespeare Henry IV.

3. To make terms. These two latter significations are unusual.

Send us to Rome

The best, with whom we may articulate For their own good and ours. Shakespeare Coriolanus.

ARTICULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice. The ferret purpose of our heart, no less articulate spoken to God, who needs not our words to discern our meaning.

Deacy of Pity.

2. Art; trade.

ARTIFER. n. f. [artifex, Lat.]

1. An artist; a manufacturer; one by whom any thing is made. The lights, doors, and flairs, rather directed to the use of the guest, than to the eye of the artifex. Saith.

The great artist would be more than ordinarily exact in drawing his own picture. Saith.

So in the practices of artificer, and the manufactures of several kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways. Lact.

2. A forger; a contriver.

He soon aware,

Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calm,

A officer of fraud! and was the first

That practis'd falsehood under a nely shew. Paradise Lost.

The artificer of lies

Renews th' assault, and his last batt'ry tries. Dryden's Fables.

3. A dexterous or artful fellow.

Let you alone, cunning artificer.

Ben. Johnson.

ARTIFICIAL. adj. [artificialis, Fr.]

1. Made by art; not natural.

Basilus used the artificial day of torches to lighten the sports their inventions could contrive.

Saith, b. i.

The curtains closely drawn the light to screen,

As if he had contriv'd to lie unseen;

Thus cover'd with an artificial night,

Sleep did his office.

Dryden's Fables.

There is no natural motion perpetual; yet it doth not hinder but that it is possible to contrive such an artificial revolution.

Wilkins's Dædalus.

2. Fictitious; not genuine.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile,

And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart,

And wet my cheeks with artificial tears. Shakespeare Ham. VI.

3. Artful; contrived with skill.

These seem to be the more artificial, as those of a single person the more natural governments, orders, and institutions.

Temple.

ARTIFICIAL Arguments. [in rhetoric.] Are proofs on confutations which arise from the genius, industry, or invention of the orator; such are definitions, quotes, effects, &c. which are thus called, to distinguish them from laws, authorities, citations, and the like, which are said to be inartificial arguments.

ARTIFICIAL Lines. on a sector or scale, are lines so contrived as to represent the logarithmic lines and tangents; which by the help of the line of numbers, solve, with tolerable exactness, questions in trigonometry, navigation, &c. Chambers.

ARTIFICIAL Numbers. are the same with logarithms.

ARTIFICIALLY. adv. [from artificial.]

1. Artfully; with skill; with good contrivance.

How cunningly he made his faultless life, how artificially he set out the torments of his own conscience. Saith.

Should any one be cast upon a desolate island, and find there a palace artificially contrived, and curiously adorned. Roy.

2. By art; not naturally.

It is covered on all sides with earth, crumbled into powder, as if it had been artificially fitted. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

ARTIFICIALNESS. n. f. [from artificial.] Artfulness. Diët.

ARTIFERIOUS. adj. [from artifice.] The same with artificial.

ARTILLERY. n. f. It has no plural. [artillerie, Fr.]

1. Weapons of war.

And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them unto the city. 1 Samuel.

2. Cannon; great ordnance.

Have I not heard great ordnance in the field? And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Shakespeare Troilus.

I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can,

To view th' artillery and ammunition. Shakespeare Hen. VI.

Upon one wing the artillery was drawn, being sixteen pieces, every piece having pioneers to plain the ways.

He that views a fort to take it,

Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest place. Den. Sophy.

ARTISAN. n. f. [French.]

1. Artist; professor of an art. What are the most judicious artisans, but the mimicks of nature? Watson's Architecture.

Best and happiest artisan,

Best of painters, if you can,

With your many-colour'd art,

Draw the mistress of my heart.

Guardian.

2. Manufacturer; low tradesman.

I who had none but generals to oppose me, must have an artisan for my antagonist.

Addison's Whig Examiner.

ARTIST. n. f. [artifex, Fr.]

1. The professor of an art, generally of an art manual.

How to build ships, and dreadful ordnance cast, Instruct the artists, and reward their haste. Waller.

Rich with the spoils of many a conquer'd land, All arts and artists Thæleus could command,

Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame;

The master painters and the carvers came. Dryden's Fables.

When I made this, an artist undertook to imitate it; but using another way, fell much short.

Newton's Opticks.

2. A skillful man; not a novice.

If any one thinks himself an artist at this, let him number up the parts of his child's body. Lact.

ARTLESSLY. adv. [from artless.] In an artless manner; naturally; sincerely.

Nature and truth, though never so low or vulgar, are yet pleasing when openly and artlessly reprinted. Pope's Letters.

ARTLESS. adj. [from art and less.]

1. Unskillful; sometimes with the particle of.

The high-shoe'd plowman, should he quit the land,

Artless of stars, and of the moving band. Dryden.

ARUNDINOUS. adj. [arundinus, Lat.] Abounding with reeds. As. conjunct. [alt. 1. cut.]

1. In the same manner with something else.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

In fusing, as in plying, you excel;

And scarce your matter could perform so well. Dryden.

I live as I did, I think as I did, I love you as I did; but all these are to no purpose; the world will not live, think, or love as I do. Swift.

2. In the manner that.

Mad as I was, I could not bear his fate

With silent grief, but loudly blam'd the fate. Dryden.

The landlord, in his furt as he was, taking a candle in one hand, and a drawn sword in the other, ventured out of the room. Arbutnot and Pope.

3. That; in a consequential sense.

The cunningest mariners were so conquered by the storm, as they thought it best with thicken sails to yield to be govern'd by it. Shaw.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were vain to restrain his forwardness. Walton.

The relations are so uncertain, as they require a great deal of examination. Bacon.

God shall by grace prevent sin so soon, as to keep the soul in the virginity of its first innocence. South.

4. In the state of another.

Madam, were I as you, I'd take her counsel;

I'd speak my own distress. A. Philips, Disfranch Mother.

5. Under a particular consideration; with a particular respect.

Besides that law which concerneth men as men, and that which belongs unto men as they are men, linked with others in some society; there is a third which touches all several bodies politick, so far forth as one of them hath publick concerns with another. Hobbes.

I say 'tis copper. Dar'f't thou be as good as thy word now?—

—Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man, I dare;

but as thou art a prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp. Shakespeare.

The objections that are rais'd against it as a tragedy, are as follow. Gay.

6. Like; of the same kind with.

A simple idea is one uniform idea, as sweet, bitter. Watts.

7. In the same degree with.

Where you, unless you are as matter blind,

Conduct and beauteous disposition find. Blackmore.

Well hast thou spoke, the blue-eyed maid replies,

Thou good old man, benevolent as wise. Pope.

8. As if; in the same manner.

The fquire began nigher to approach,

And wind his horn under the cattle-wall,

That with the roafe it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

They all contended to creep into his humour, and to do that, as of themselves, which they conceived he desired they should do. Sir J. Heyward.

Contented in a nest of snow

He lies, as he his bliss did know,

And to the wood no more would go. Waller.

So hot th' assault, so high the tumult rose,

As all the Dardan Argolic race. Dryden.

Had been contracted in that narrow space.

Can misery no place of safety know,

The noise pursues me wheresoe'er I go,

As fate fought only me. Dryden.

9. According to what.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man. 1 Cor. iii. 5.

Their figure being printed,

As just before, I think, I hinted,

Alma inform'd can try the case,

As he had been upon the place. Prior.

The republick is shut up in the great duke's dominions, who at present is very much incens'd against it. The occasion is as follows. Addison.

10. As it were; in some fort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought king

Richard had said enough for them; and took them to be but ard of the king's party, because they were in his power, and at his disposal. Bacon.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end, it whistled as it flew,

And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew;

Infect'd as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue. Dryden.

These haughty words Alcdo's rage provoke,

And frighted I urnus trembled as the spoke. Dryden.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with rains

Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,

Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. Addison.

12. Because.

He that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound;

then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did as this.

as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. As being.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon.

14. Equally.

Before the place

A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;

As many voices issue, and the found

Of Sibil's word a many times rebound. Dryden.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood. Boyle.

16. With; answering to for or fame.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?—

—No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,

Upon the like devotion as you live;

To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to at.

Every officer committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far forth as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As sure as it is good, that human nature should exist; so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been, do declare God. Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first, as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison.

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Granville.

19. Answering to in h.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a governour of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage? Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understandings, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am full desirous of doing some good in this particular. Speilauer.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love,

To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;

As thou, to whom the muse commends

The best of poets and of friends,

Do st thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant; but this is low language. As how, dear Syphax? Addison.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse

On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;

So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,

Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope.

26. As for; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice. Dryden.

27. As if; in the same manner that it would be, if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed

it. Locke.

28. As to; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,

As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worth of thoughts

The worth of words. Shakespeare.

They pretend, in general, to great refinements, as to what regards christianity. Addison.

I was mistaken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner than it happened. Swift.

29. As WELL AS; equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face, that distinguishes him from all others. Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern as ancient. Addison.

30. As THOUGH; as if.

These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an imposthumation. Shap.

ASA DULCIS. See BENZOIN.

ASA FOETIDA. } n. f. A gum or resin brought from the East Indies, of a sharp taste, and a strong offensive smell; which is said to distil, during the heat of summer, from a little shrub, frequent in Meda, Persia, Assyria, and Arabia. It is at first white, bordering on yellow, then on red, and, lastly, violet; and melts under the fingers like wax. It is of

of known efficacy in some uterine disorders; but the rankness of its smell occasions it to be seldom used; but by farriers; yet, in the East Indies, it makes an ingredient in their ragouts.

Chambers.

ASARABACCA. n. f. [asarum, Lat.] The name of a plant. The flower cup is divided into four parts, and the fruit into six cells, filled with oblong seeds. The leaves are roundish, thick, and almost of the colour of those of the ivy tree. There are two sorts, the common asarabacca, and that of Canada. The first root is used in medicine. It delights in a moist shady place, and is increased by parting the roots in autumn. Miller.

ASBESTOS. n. f. [asbestos, Gr.] Something incombustible, or that partakes of the nature and qualities of the lapis asbestus. ASBESTOS. n. f. [asbestos, Gr.] A sort of native fossil stone, which may be split into threads and filaments, from one inch to ten inches in length, very fine, brittle, yet somewhat tractable, silky, and of a greyish colour, not unlike talc of Venice. It is almost insipid to the taste, indissoluble in water, and endued with the wonderful property of remaining unconsumed in the fire, which only whitens it. But, notwithstanding the common opinion, in two trials before the Royal Society, a piece of cloth made of this stone was found to lose a dram of its weight each time. Paper as well as cloth has been made of this stone; and Pliny says he had seen napkins of it, which, being taken foul from the table, were thrown into the fire, and better covered than if they had been washed in water. This stone is found in many places of Asia and Europe; particularly in the island of Anglesey in Wales, and in Aberdeen-shire in Scotland. Chambers.

ASCETRIDES. n. f. [ascetis, from ascetis, to leap.] Little worms in the rectum, so called from their continual troublesome motion, causing an intolerable itching. Quincy. TO ASCEND. v. n. [ascendi, Lat.]

1. To mount upwards.
Then to the heav'n of heav'n shall he ascend
With victory, triumphing through the air
Over his foes and thine. Milton.
2. To proceed from one degree of knowledge to another.
By these steps we shall ascend to more just ideas of the glory of Jesus Christ, who is intimately united to God, and is one with him. Watts.
3. To stand higher in genealogy.
The only incest was in the ascending, not collateral or descending branch; as when parents and children married, this was accounted incest. Broom.

TO ASCEND. v. e. To climb up any thing.
They ascend the mountains, they descend the vallies.

Deane's Revelation examined.

ASCENDANT. adj. [ascendens, Lat.] That may be ascended. DI. ASCENDANT. n. f. [ascendens, Lat.]

1. The part of the ecliptic at any particular time above the horizon, which is supposed by astrologers to have great influence. South.
2. Height; elevation.
He was initiated, in order to gain instruction in sciences that were there in their highest ascendancy. Temple.
3. Superiority; influence.
By the ascendancy he had in his understanding, and the docility of his nature, he could persuade him very much. Clarendon.
What star I know not, but some star I find,
Has giv'n thee an ascendancy o'er my mind. Dryden.
When they have got an ascendancy over them, they should use it with moderation, and not make themselves scarecrows. Locke.
4. One of the degrees of kindred reckoned upwards.
The most nefarious kind of bastards, are incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants in incest; and between collaterals, as far as the divine prohibition. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASCENDANT. adj.

1. Superior; predominant; overpowering.
Christ outdoes Moses, before he displaces him; and shews in ascendancy spirit above him. South.
2. In an astrological sense, above the horizon.
Let him study the constellation of Pegasi, which is about that time ascendancy. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ASCENDENCY. n. f. [ascendens, Lat.] Influence; power.
Custom has some ascendancy over understanding, and what at one time seemed decent, appears disagreeable afterwards. Watts.

ASCENSION. n. f. [ascensio, Lat.]

1. The act of ascending or rising; frequently applied to the visible elevation of our Saviour to heaven.
Then rising from his grave,
Spou'd principalities and pow'rs, triumph'd
In open shew; and, with ascension bright,
Captivity led captive through the air. Paradise Lost.

2. The thing rising, or mounting.
Men err in the theory of incubation, conceiving the brain does only suffer from vaporous ascensions from the stomach. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ASCENSION. in astronomy, is either right or oblique. Right ascension of the sun, or a star, is that degree of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which rises with the sun or star in a right sphere. Oblique ascension is an arch of the N° IX.

equator intercepted between the first point of Aries, and that point of the equator which rises together with a star in an oblique sphere.

ASCENSION-DAY. The day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thursday; the Thursday but one before Whit Sunday.

ASCENSIONAL Difference, is the difference between the right and oblique ascension, of the same point to the surface of the sphere. Chambers.

ASCENSIVE. adj. [from ascend.] In a state of ascent.
The cold augments when the days begin to encrease, though the sun be then ascensive, and returning from the winter tropic. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ASCENT. n. f. [ascensus, Lat.]

1. Rise; the act of rising.
To him with swift ascent he up return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reascend'd
In glory, as of old. Milton.
2. The way by which one ascends.
The temple, and the several degrees of ascent, whereby men did climb up to the fame, as if it had been a scola caeli, be all poetical and fabulous. Bacon.

It was a rock
Conspicuous far, winding with one ascent Accessible from earth, one entrance high. Per. Lost.

3. An eminence, or high place.
No land like Italy erects the fight,
By such a vast ascent, or swells to such a height. Addison.
A wide flat cannot be pleasant in the Elyfian fields, unless it be diversified with depressed valleys and swelling ascents. Basil.

TO ASCERTAIN. v. e. [ascertiner, Fr.]

1. To make certain; to fix; to establish.
The divine law both ascertaineth the truth, and supplieth unto us the want of other laws. Hooker.
Money differs from uncoined silver, in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece is ascertained by the stamp. Locke.
2. To make confident; to take away doubt; often with of.
If it be on right judgment of myself, it may give me the other certainty, that is, ascertain me that I am in the number of God's children. Hammond.
This makes us act with a repose of mind and wonderful tranquillity, because it ascertain us of the goodness of our work. Dryden.

ASCERTAINER. n. f. [from ascertain.] The person that proves or establishes.

ASCERTAINMENT. n. f. [from ascertain] A settled rule; an established standard.

For want of ascertainment how far a writer may express his good wishes for his country, innocent intentions may be charged with crimes. Swift.

ASCETICK. adj. [asceticus, Gr.] Employed wholly in exercises of devotion and mortification. South.

None lived such long lives as monks and hermits, frequenter from plenty to a constant ascetic course of the severest abstinence and devotion. South.

ASCETICK. n. f. He that retires to devotion and mortification; a hermit.

I am far from commending those asceticks, that, out of a pretence of keeping themselves unspotted from the world, take up their quarters in deserts. Norris.

He that preaches to man, should understand what is in man; and that skill can scarce be attained by an ascetic in his solitudes. Atterbury.

ASCII. n. f. It has no singular. [from a, without, and exis, a shadow.] Those people who, at certain times of the year, have no shadow at noon; such are the inhabitants of the torrid zone, because they have the sun twice a year vertical to them. DiD.

ASCITES. n. f. [from ascus, a bladder.] A particular species of dropsy; a swelling of the lower belly and depending parts, from an extravasation and collection of water broke out of its proper vessels. This case, when certain and inveterate, is universally allowed to admit of no cure but by means of the manual operation of tapping. Quincy.

There are two kinds of dropsy, the anasarca, called also leucoplegmy, when the extravasated matter swims in the cells of the membrana adiposa; and the ascites, when the water possesses the cavity of the abdomen. Sharp.

ASCITICAL. adj. [from ascites.] Belonging to an ascites; drop-ASCITICK. } fical; hydropical.

When it is part of another tumour, it is hydropical, either anasarca or ascitical. W. Jones.

ASCITIOUS. adj. [ascitius, Lat.] Supplemental; additional; not inherent; not original.

Homer has been reckoned an ascitious name from some accident of his life. Pope.

ASCRIBABLE. adj. [from ascribe.] That which may be ascribed.
The greater part have been forward to reject it, upon a mistaken persuasion, that those phenomena are the effects of nature's abhorrence of a vacuum, which seem to be more fitly ascribable to the weight and spring of the air. Boyle.

TO ASCRIBE. v. e. [ascribis, Lat.]

1. To attribute to as a cause.

The cause of his banishment is unknown, because he was unwilling to provoke the emperor, by ascribing it to any other reason than what was pretended. Dryden.

To this we may justly ascribe those envies, jealousies, and encroachments, which render mankind uneasy to one another. Rogers's Sermon.

2. To attribute to as a possessor, or substance receiving accidents. These perfections must be somewhere, and therefore all other much better be ascribed to God, in whom we suppose all other perfections to meet, than to any thing else. Tillotson.

ASCRPTION. n. f. [ascriptio, Lat.] The act of ascribing. Diit.

ASCRPTION. adj. [ascriptivus, Lat.] That which is ascribed. Diit.

ASH. n. f. [fraxinus, Lat. æpe, Saxon.]

This tree hath pinnated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote distance from the fruit, have no petals, but consist of many stamens. The ovary becomes a seed vessel, containing one seed at the bottom, shaped like a bird's tongue. The species are, 1. The common ash first tree. 2. The striped ash. 3. The manna ash, &c. The ash fort is a common timber tree in every part of England. The second is a variety of the first. The third fort is supposed to be the tree from whence the true Calabrian manna is taken. The timber is of excellent use to the wheelwright and cartwright. Müller.

Let me twine

My arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And fear'd the moon with splinters. Shakespeare.

With which of old he charm'd the savage train,
And call'd the mountain ashes to the plain. Dryden.

ASH-COLOURED. adj. [from ash and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an ashen branch.

Clay, ash-coloured, was part of a firatrum which lay above the strata of stone. Hoodward.

ASHAMED. adj. [from shame.] Touched with shame; generally with ash before the cause of shame.

Profess publicly the doctrine of Jesus Christ, not being ashamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it. Taylor.

One would have thought she would have flir'd; but strove
With modesty, and was asham'd to move. Dryden.

This I have shadowed, that you may not be ashamed of that hero, whose protection you undertake. Dryden.

ASHEN. adj. [from ash.] Made of ash-wood.

At once he said, and threw
His ashen spear; which quiver'd as it flew. Dryden.

ASHES. n. f. wants the singular. [ayra, Sax. asht, Dutch.]

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relics would be left of it, as when ashes remain of burned bodies. Digby.

I his late dissension, grown betwixt the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame. Shakespeare.

Ashes contain a very fertile salt, and are the best manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not wash away their salt. Mortimer.

2. The remains of the body; often used in poetry for the carcase, from the ancient practice of burning the dead,
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood! Shakespeare.

To great Laertes I bequeath
A task of grief, his ornaments of death;

Left, when the fates his royal ashes claim,
The Grecian matrons taint my spotless name. Page.

ASHWEDNESDAY. n. f. The first day of Lent, so called from the ancient custom of sprinkling ashes on the head.

ASHLAR. n. f. [with malons.] Free stones as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thickneses.

ASHLING. n. f. [with builders.] Quartering to tack in to garglets, about two foot and a half or three foot high, perpendicular to the floor, and reaching to the under side of the rafters. Builder's Diit.

ASTORE. adv. [from a and store.]

1. On shore; on the land.

The poor Englishman riding in the road, having all that he brought thither astore would have been undone. Raleigh.

Moore'd in a Chian creek, astore I went,
And all the following night in Chios spent. Addison.

2. To the shore; to the land.

We may as bootless spend our vain command,
As send our precepts to the leviathan
To come astore. Shakespeare.

May thy billows rowl astore

The beryl, and the golden ore. Milton.

ASHWEED. n. f. [from ash and weed.] An herb.

ASHY. adj. [from ash.] Ash coloured; pale; inclining to a whitish grey.

Or have I seen a timely parted ghost
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless. Shakespeare.

ASID. adv. [from a and side.]

1. To one side; out of the perpendicular direction.

The storm'd rush'd in, and Arcite flood aghast;
The flames were blown aside, yet those they bright,
Fann'd by the wind, and gave a ruffled light. Dryden.

2. To another part; out of the true direction.

He had no brother; which though it be a comfortable thing for kings to have, yet it draweth the subjects eyes a little aside. Bacon.

3. From the company; as, to speak aside.

He took him aside from the multitude. Mark, vii. 33.

ASINARY. adj. [asinarius, Lat.] Belonging to an ass. Diit.

ASININE. adj. [from asinus, Lat.] Belonging to an ass.

You shall have more ado to drive our duller youth, our flocks and flubs, from such nurture, than we have now to hale our choicest and foolerfull wits to that asinine feast of few thistles and brambles. Milton.

To ASK. v. a. [arcian, Saxon.]

1. To petition; to beg; sometimes with an accusative only;
sometimes with for.

When thou dost ask me Messing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee for grace. Shakespeare.

We have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already; yet will ask,
That, if we fail in our request, the blame

May hang upon your hardness. Shakespeare.

My son, hast thou sinned? do so no more, but ask pardon for thy former sins. Ecclesi. xxi. 1.

If he ask for bread, will he give him a stone? Matt. vii. 9.

In long journeys, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses. Swift.

2. To demand; to claim; as, to ask a price for goods.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife. Gen. xxiv. 12.

He saw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd of their quiet graves.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. To enquire; to question; with for before the thing, and sometimes of before the person.

Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. Jerem. vi. 16.

For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it. Deut. iv. 32.

O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way and ask, ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, what is done?
Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

4. To enquire; with after before the thing.

He said, wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name?
And he blessed him then. Gen. xxi. 29.

5. To require, as physically necessary.

A lump of ore in the bottom of a mine will be stirred by two men's strength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will ask six men to stir it. Bacon.

The admiralship passes into different hands at the end of two months, which contributes to dispatch; but any exigence of state asks a much longer time to conduct any design to its maturity. Addison.

ASK, ASH, AS, do all come from the Saxon æsc, an ash-tree.
Gibson's Camden.

ASKANCE. } adv. Sideways; obliquely.

Zelmae, keeping a countenance askance, as she understood him not, told him, it became her evil. Sidney.

His wannish eyes upon them bent askance.

And when he saw their labours well succeed,
He wept for rage, and threatened dire mischance. Fairfax.

Some say, he bids his angels turn askance

The poles of earth, twice ten degrees, and more,
From the sun's axle; they with labour push'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

ASKAUNT. adv. Obliquely; on one side.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king askaunt, and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden.

Since the space, that lies on either side
The solar orb, is without limits wide,
Grant that the sun had happened to prefer
A feat askaunt, but one diameter.

Loft to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had lain a frozen lunetone mass. Blackmore.

ASKER. n. f. [from ask.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and, now again
On him that did not ask, but mock, bellow
Your fu'd for tongues. Shakespeare.

The greatness of the asker, and the smallness of the thing asked, had been sufficient to enforce his request. South.

2. En-

2. Enquirer.

Every after being satisfied, we may conclude, that all their conceptions of being in a place are the same. Digby.

ASKER. n. f. A water newt.

ASKER. adv. [from a and skew.] Aside; with contempt; contemptuously; disdainfully.

For when ye mildly look with lovely hue,

Then is my soul with life and love inspir'd:

But when ye lower, or look on me askew,

Then do I die. Spenser.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ,

Not look askew at what it saith;

There's no petition in it.— Prior.

TO ASK. v. n. [from a and skak, or slack.] To remit; to mitigate; to slacken.

But this continual, cruel, civil war,

No skill can stint, nor reason can ask. Spenser.

Whilst seeking to ask thy raging fire,

Thou in me kindlest much more great desire. Spenser.

ASKANT. adv. [from a and fiant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows askant a brook,

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream. Shakspeare.

He fell; the shaft

Drove through his neck askant; he spurns the ground,

And the soul issues through the weapon's wound. Dryden.

Askant the dew-bright earth, and colour'd air,

He looks in boundless majesty abroad. Thomson.

ASLEEP. adv. [from a and sleep.]

1. Sleeping; at rest.

How many thousands of my poorest subjects

Are at this hour asleep? O gentle sleep,

Nature's soft nurse, how have I slighted thee! Shakspeare.

The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,

And luxury more late asleep were laid;

All was the night's, and, in her silent reign,

No found the rest of nature did invade. Dryden.

There is no difference between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbutnot.

2. To sleep.

If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep.

Bacon's Essays.

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,

By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep. Milton.

ASLOVE. adv. [from a and sleep.] With declivity; obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Set them not upright, but aslove, a reasonable depth under the ground.

Bacon.

The curse aslove

Glanc'd on the ground; with labour I must earn

My bread: what harm? Idleness had been worse:

My labour will sustain me. Milton.

The knight did stoop,

And sat on further side aslove. Hudibras.

ASOMATOUS. adj. [from a, priv. and σῶμα, a body.] Incorporal, or without a body.

ASP. n. f. [aspis, Lat.] A kind of serpent, whose poison.

ASPICK. n. f. [son is to dangerous and quick in its operation, that it kills without a possibility of applying any remedy. It is said to be very small, and peculiar to Egypt and Lybia. Those that are bitten by it, die within three hours; and the manner of their dying being by sleep and lethargy, without any pain, Cleopatra chose it, as the easiest way of dispatching herself. Cassius.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with stroke

Of asp's sting, herself did kill. Fairy Queen.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphibæna dire,

And diptæ. Milton.

ASP. n. f. A tree. See ASPEN.

ASPALATHUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A plant called the rose of Jerusalem, or our lady's rose.

2. The wood of a prickly tree, heavy, oleaginous, somewhat sharp and bitter to the taste, and anciently in much repute as an astringent, but now little used. There are four kinds of this wood: the first of the colour of box, hard, solid, heavy, and smelling like roses; which is therefore called rosewood. The second, red like yew, and of a very agreeable smell. The third, hard, twisted, knotty, of a rank smell, like that of a goat, and a disagreeable taste. The fourth has an ash coloured bark, and the wood is of a purple dye. Aspalathus affords an oil of admirable scent, reputed one of the best perfumes. Chambers.

I gave a sweet smell like cinnamon and aspalathus, and I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh. Eccles. xxiv. 15.

ASPARGUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of a plant. It has a roscaceous flower of six leaves, placed orbicularly, out of whose centre rises the pointal, which turns to a soft globular berry, full of hard seeds. The leaves are finely cut. The species are twelve, of which all but the two first are exotics. 1. Cardus asparagus. 2. Wild asparagus, with narrow leaves. The first sort is cultivated for the table, and propagated by the seeds, which should be sown in the beginning of February. The next year they should be planted out; the third spring, after planting, they may be begun to be cut, and, by proper management, a plot of asparagus may be continued ten or twelve years in cutting. The second sort grows wild in some parts, but, producing slender shoots, it is rarely cultivated. Müller.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; and therefore have been suspected by some physicians, as not friendly to the kidneys; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality; but then they are not so agreeable. Arbutnot.

ASPECT. n. f. [aspectus, Lat.] It appears anciently to have been pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, which is now placed on the first.

1. Look; air; appearance.

I have presented the tongue under a double aspect, such as may justify the definition, that it is the best and worst part. Government of the Tongue.

They are both, in my judgment, the image or picture of a great ruin, and have the true aspect of a world lying in its rubbish. Bunnet.

2. Countenance; look.

Fairer than fairiest, in his faining eye,

Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser.

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,

Sham'd their aspects with flore of childlike drops. Shakspeare.

I am fearful: wherefore frowns he thus?

'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. Shakspeare.

Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,

But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.

Then shall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)

On the east ore another Pollio shine;

With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

3. Gance; view; act of beholding.

When an envious or an amorous aspect doth infect the spiri-

tion of another, there is joined both affection and imagination. Bacon.

The setting sun

Slowly descended; and with tight aspect

Against the eastern gate of paradise,

Levell'd his ev'ning rays. Milton.

4. Direction towards any point; view; position.

I have built a strong wall, faced to the south aspect with brick.

Swift.

5. Disposition of any thing to something else; relation.

The light got from the opposite arguing of men of parts,

Shewing the different sides of things, and their various aspects and probabilities, would be quite lost, if every one were obliged to assent to, and say after the speaker. Locke.

6. Disposition of a planet to other planets.

There's some ill planet reigns,

I must be patient till the heavens look

With an aspect more favourable. Shakspeare.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Watson.

To the blank moon

Her office they prescribe: to th' other five

Their planetary motions, and aspects, Milton.

In textile, square, and trine, and opposite.

Why does not every single star shed a separate influence, and have aspects with other stars of their own constellation? Bentley's Sermons.

TO ASPECT. v. a. [aspicio, Lat.] To behold.

Happy in their mistake, those people whom

The northern pole aspects; whom fear of death

(The greatest of all human fears) ne'er moves. Tentley.

ASPECTABLE. adj. [aspectabilis, Lat.] Visible; being the object of sight.

He was the sole cause of this aspectable and perceivable universal. Raleigh.

To this use of informing us what is in this aspectable world, we shall find the eye well fitted. Roy.

ASPECTION. n. f. [from aspect.] Beholding; view.

A Moorish queen, upon aspection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Bacon.

ASPEN. or ASP. n. f. [aspe, Dutch; asp, Dan. aspe, trembling, Sax. Semner.] See POPLAR, of which it is a species. The leaves of this tree always tremble.

The aspen or asp tree hath leaves much the same with the poplar, only much smaller, and not so white. Martini.

The builder oak, fole king of forests all,

The aspen, good for statues, the cypress funeral. Spenser.

ASPEN. adj. [from asp or pen.]

1. Belonging to the asp tree.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands

Tremble like a pen leaves upon a lute. Shakspeare.

No gale disturbs the trees,

Nor aspen leaves contend the gentle breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aspen wood.

ASPER. adj. [Latin.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in the following passage.

All base notes, or very treble notes, give an asper sound, for that the base striketh more as than it can well strike equally. Bacon.

ASPERSATE. v. a. [aspero, Lat.] To roughen; to make rough or uneven.

Those corpulencies of colour, insinuating themselves into all the pores of the body to be dyed, may asperate its superficies, according to the bigness and texture of the corpulency. Dist.
ASPERATION. n. f. [from asperate.] A making rough. Dist.
ASPERIFOLIOUS. adj. [from asper, rough, and folium, a leaf, Lat.] One of the divisions of plants, so called from the roughness of their leaves.

ASPERITY. n. f. [aspiratus, Lat.]

1. Unevenness; roughness of surface.

Sometimes the pores and asperities of dry bodies are so incommensurate to the particles of the liquor, that they glide over the surface. Boyle.

2. Roughness of sound; harshness of pronunciation.

3. Roughness, or ruggedness of temper; moroseness; founess; crabbedness.

The charity of the one, like kindly exhalations, will descend in showers of blessings; but the rigour and asperity of the other, in a severe down upon ourselves. Govern. Tongue.
Avoid all unfeinings and asperity of carriage; do nothing that may argue a peevish or froward spirit. Rogers.

ASPERATION. n. f. [asperatus, Lat.] Neglect; disregard. D.

ASPEROUS. adj. [asper, Lat.] Rough; uneven.

Black and white are the most asperous and unequal of colours; so like, that it is hard to distinguish them: black is the most rough. Boyle.

TO ASPERSE. v. a. [aspergo, Lat.] To bespatter with censure or calumny.

In the business of Ireland, besides the opportunity to asperse the king, they were safe enough. Clarendon.

Curb that impetuous tongue, nor rashly vain,

And singly mad, asperse the foreign reign. Pope.

Unjustly poets we asperse,

Truth shines the brighter clad in verse. Swift.

ASPERION. n. f. [asperis, Lat.]

1. A sprinkling.

If thou dost break her virgin knot, before

All fanciful ceremonies,

No sweet asperions shall the heav'n's let fall,

To make this contract grow. Shakespeare.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the inauguration gives the new unmixed, otherwise than with some little asperion of the old, for taste's sake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; censure.

The same asperions of the king, and the same grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

ASPHALTICK. adj. [from asphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with asphaltic slime, broad as the gate,

Deep to the roots of hell, the gather'd beach

They fasten'd. Milton.

ASPHALTOS. n. f. [ἀσφαλτός, bitumen.] A solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance, resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the Lacus Asphaltites, or Dead sea, where anciently flood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is cast up from time to time, in the nature of liquid pitch, from the earth at the bottom of this sea; and, being thrown upon the water, swims like other fat bodies, and condenses gradually by the heat of the sun, and the salt that is in it. It burns with great vehemence. The Arabs use it for pitching their ships; and much of it was employed in the embalming of the ancients.

ASPHALTUM. n. f. [Lat.] A bituminous stone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neuchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; supposed to be the mortar so much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid. Chambers.

ASPHODEL. n. f. [his asphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily.

The characters are; It hath a root like kingpear; the flower consists of one leaf, which is deeply cut into six segments, and expands in form of a lily; the flower is succeeded by an oval fruit, which contains several roundish seeds. The species are, 1. The yellow asphodel. 2. The red asphodel. These two sorts are very common in most of the English gardens; the first is often called by the gardeners the yellow tuberose, from its having a very agreeable scent; but the other is called the day-lily, or the tuberose orange-lily, in most places. They are both hardy plants, and multiply exceedingly, if suffered to remain two or three years undisturbed; especially the red sort, which sends forth offsets. The best time to transplant their roots is in September or October. They will grow in any soil or situation; the yellow produces its flowers in May and June; the red a month later. Miller.

Asphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to supply the manes of the dead with nourishment.

By those happy souls who dwell

In yellow meads of asphodel. Pope.

ASPICK. n. f. [See ASP.] The name of a serpent.

Why did I 'scape thy 'invincible' asp's rage,

And all the fiery monsters of the desert,

To face this day? Addison.

TO ASPIRATE. v. a. [aspiro, Lat.] To pronounce with aspiration, or full breath; as we aspirate berse, busse, and bug.

TO ASPIRATE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.] To be pronounced with full breath.

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a consonant, or what is its equivalent; for our t and b aspirate. Dryden.

ASPIRATE. adj. [aspiratus, Lat.] Pronounced with full breath.

For their being pensive, you may call them, if you please, perpirate; but yet they are not aspirate, i. e. with such an aspiration as b. Holder.

ASPIRATION. n. f. [aspiratus, Lat.]

1. A breathing after; an ardent wish; used generally of a wish for spiritual blessings.

A soul inspired with the warmest aspirations after celestial beatitude, keeps its powers attentive. Watts.

2. The act of aspiring, or desiring something high and great.

'Tis he; I ken the manner of his gait;

He rises on his toe; that spirit of his

In aspiration lifts him from the earth. Shakespeare.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.

It is only a guttural aspiration, i. e. a more forcible impulse of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

TO ASPIRE. v. n. [aspire, Lat.]

1. To desire with eagerness; to pant after something higher; sometimes with the particle in.

Most excellent lady, no expectation in others, nor hope in himself, could aspire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praised by you. Sidney.

Hence springs that universal strong desire,

Which all men have of immortality;

Not some few spirits unto this thought aspire,

But all mens minds in this united be. Sir J. Davies.

Horace did ne'er aspire to epic days:

Nor lofty Maro stoop to lyric lays. Rescramen.

Till then a helpless, hopeless, homely swain;

I fought not freedom, nor aspir'd to gain. Dryden.

Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,

Aspiring to be angels, men rebel. Pope.

2. Sometimes with after.

Those are raised above sense, and aspire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their souls. Tillotson.

There is none of us but who would be thought, throughout the whole course of his life, to aspire after immortality.

Atterbury's Sermon; Pref.

3. To rise higher.

There is betwixt that smile we would aspire to,

That sweet aspect of princes and our ruin,

More pangs and fears than war or women have. Shaksp.

My own breath still foment the fire,

Which flames as high as fancy can aspire. Waller.

ASPORTATION. n. f. [asportatus, Lat.] A carrying away. D.

ACQUINT. adv. [from a and quaint.] Obliquely; not in the straight line of vision.

who have contrary views, or look acquint, or flut their eyes.

Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

ASS. n. f. [asinus, Lat.]

1. An animal of burden, remarkable for sluggishness, patience, hardness, coarseness of food, and long life.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,

Which, like your ass, and your dogs and mules,

You use in abject and in slavish part,

Because you bought them. Shakespeare.

2. A stupid, heavy, dull fellow; a dolt.

I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

That such a crafty mother

Should yield the world to this ass!—a woman that

Bears all down with her brain; and her son

Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,

And leave eighteen. Shakespeare.

TO ASSAIL. v. a. [assailor, Fr.]

1. To attack in a hostile manner; to assault; to fall upon; to invade.

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fail,

With greedy force he 'gan the fort assail. Spenser.

2. To attack with argument; censure; or motives applied to the passions.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assail the family of York. Shakespeare.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,

Nor bide th' encounter of assailing eyes. Shakespeare.

How have I fear'd your late! but fear'd it most,

When love assail'd you on the Libyan coast. Dryden.

All books he reads, and all he reads assails,

From Dryden's Fable down to D—y's Tales. Pope.

In vain Thalesius with reproach assails;

For who can move when fair Belinda fails? Pope.

ASSAILABLE. adj. [from assail.] That which may be attacked.

Cowell.

ASSAULT, v. a. [assault, Fr.] To commit an assault. See ASSAULT.

ASSAULT, n. f. [assault, Fr.] A word brought originally from Assa, where, about the time of the holy war, there was a set of men called assaults, as is supposed for Assidei, who killed any man, without regard to danger, at the command of their chief. A murderer; one that kills by treachery, or sudden violence.

In the very moment as the knight withdrew from the duke, this assault gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side.

Hutton.

The Syrian king, who, to surprise
One man, assault like, had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd.

Milton.

Here hir'd assaults for their gain invade,
And reach'tous pois'ners urge their fatal trade.
When the hears of a murder, she enlarges more on the guilt
Of the suffering person, than of the assault.

Adison.

Orelles brandish'd the revenging sword,
Slew the due pair, and gave to fun'ral flame
The vile assault, and adul'rous dame.

Pope.

Useful, we grant, it serves what life requires,
But dreadful now, the dark assault hires.

Pope.

ASSAULT, n. f. [from assault] The crime of an assassin; murder.

Were not all assaults and popular insurrections wrongfully chafed, if the meannests of the offenders indemnified them from punishment?

Pope.

ASSAULT, v. a. [from assault.]

1. To murder by violence.
Help, neighbours, my house is broken open by force, and I am ravished, and like to be assaulted.

Dryden.

What could provoke thy madness
To assault to great, to brave a man!

A. Philips.

2. To way-lay; to take by treachery. This meaning is perhaps peculiar to Milton.

Such usage as your honourable lords
Afford me, assaulted and betray'd,
Who durst not, with your whole united pow'rs,
In fight withstand one single and unarm'd.

Milton.

ASSAULT, n. f. [from assault.] The act of assailing; murder by violence.

If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well
It were done quickly: if th' assault
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With its surcease, success.

Shakspeare.

The duke finish'd his course by a wicked assault. Clar.

ASSAULT, n. f. [from assault.] Murderer; mankiller; the person that kills another by violence.

ASSAULT, n. f. [assault, roasted, Lat.] Roasting.

Esth. viii. 11.

Before the gates the cries of babes new born,
Whom fate had from their tender mothers torn,
Assail'd his ears.

Dryden.

Curs'd steel, and more accur'd gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold:
And double death d'wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd.

Dryden.

ASSAULT, n. f. [from assault.] One who violently assaults another.

Neither liking their eloquence, nor fearing their might, we esteemed few words in a just defence, able to resist many unjust assaults.

Sidney.

ASSAULT, n. f. [assault, Fr. from which the ancient writers borrowed assay, according to the found, and the latter, essay, according to the writing; but the senses now differing, they may be considered as two words.]

1. Examination.

This cannot be

By no assay of reason. 'Tis a pageant,

'To keep us in false gaze.

Shakspeare.

2. In law. The examination of measures and weights used by the clerks of the market.

Cowell.

3. The first entrance upon any thing; a taste.

For well he weened, that to glorious bait

Would tempt his guest to take thereof assay.

Fairy Queen.

4. Attack; trouble.

She heard with patience all unto the end,

And strove to master sorrowful assay.

Fairy Queen.

The men he prest from Tours and Blois but late,

To hard assays unfit, unsure at need,

Yet aim'd to point in well attempted plate.

Fairfax.

Be sure to find,

What I foretell thee, many a hard assay

Of dangers, and adversities, and pains,

Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fair hold.

Milton.

ASSAY, v. a. [assay, Fr.]

1. To make trial of; to make experiment of.

Gray and Bryan obtained leave of the general a little to assay them; and to with some horsemen charged them home.

Sir J. Hayward.

What unweighed behaviour hath this drunkard picked out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me!

Shakspeare.

2. To apply to, as the touchstone in assaying metals.

Whom thus assayed, when sad Eve beheld,

Desolate where she sat, approaching night,

Sole words to his fierce passion the assay'd.

Milton.

With innocence and meditation join'd
In soft assidues, listen to my song. Thomson.
To ASSEMBLE. v. a. [assembler, Fr.] To bring together into one place. It is used both of persons and things.
And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah. Job.

He wonders for what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him. Shakespeare.
To ASSEMBLE. v. n. To meet together.
These men assembled, and found Daniel praying. 1.aniel.
ASSEMBLY. n. f. [assembly, Fr.] A company met together.
Having heard, by fame,

Of this so noble, and to fair assembly,
This night to meet here, they could do no less,
Out of the great respect they bear to beauty. Shakespeare.
ASSENT. n. f. [assensus, Lat.]

1. The act of agreeing to any thing.
All the arguments on both sides must be laid in balance, and,
upon the whole, the understanding determine its assent. Locke.
2. Consent; agreement.

To urge any thing upon the church, requiring thereunto that religious assent of christian belief, wherewith the words of holy prophets are received, and not to shew it in scripture; this do the Fathers evermore think unlawful, impious, and execrable. Hooker.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same. Hooker.

Without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate. Shakespeare.
Faith, on the other side, is the assent to any proposition, not thus made out by the deduction of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer. Locke.

To ASSENT. v. n. [assentire, Lat.] To concede; to yield to,
or agree to.
And the Jews also assented, saying, that these things were so.

ASSENTATION. n. f. [assentatio, Lat.] Compliance with the opinion of another out of flattery or dissimulation. Dicit.

ASSENTMENT. n. f. [from assent.] Consent.
We may shrink at their bare testimonies, whose arguments are but precarious, and subsid upon the charity of our assent-ment. Bacon's Vulgar Errata.

To ASSENT. v. a. [assens, Lat.]

1. To maintain; to defend either by words or actions.
Your forefathers have asserted the party which they chose till death, and died for its defence. Dryden.
2. To affirm.

3. To claim; to vindicate a title to:
In the dark dungeon of the limbs confin'd,
As if the native skies, or own its heav'nly kind. Dryden.
ASSENTION. n. f. [from assent.] The act of assenting.

If any affirm the earth doth move, and will not believe with us it standeth still; because he hath probable reasons for it, and,
I no infallible sense or reason against it, I will not quarrel with his assention. Vulgar Errata.

ASSERTIVE. adj. [from assert.] Positive; dogmatical; peremptory.
Hewas not fond of the principle; he undertook to illustrate, as to boost their certainty; proposing them not in a confident and assertive form, but as probabilities and hypotheses. Glan.
ASSERTOR. n. f. [from assert.] Maintainer; vindicator; supporter; affirmer.

Among th' assertors of free reason's claim,
Our nation's not the least in worth or fame. Dryden.
Faithful assertor of thy country's cause,
Britain with tears shall bathe thy glorious wound. Prior.

It is an usual piece of art to undermine the authority of fundamental truths, by pretending to shew how weak the proofs are, which their assertors employ in defence of them. Atterbury.
To ASSEVER. v. a. [asseverare, Lat.] To serve, help, or second. Dicit.

To ASSESS. v. a. [from assessare, Ital.] To make an equi-brum, or balance. To charge with any certain sum.

by the assidavit from the time of the inquisition found. Bacon.

ASSESSOR. n. f. [assessor, Lat.] A sitting down by one; a giving assistance or advice. Dicit.

ASSESSMENT. n. f. [from assess.]

1. The sum levied on certain property.
2. The act of assessing.
What greater immunity and happiness can there be to a people, than to be liable to no laws, but what they make themselves? To be subject to no contribution, assessment, or any pecuniary levies whatsoever, but what they vote, and voluntarily yield unto themselves? Hooker.

ASS'essor. n. f. [a. e. r., Lat.]

1. The persons that sit by another; generally used of those who assist the judge.
Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
And lives and crimes, with his assessor, hears.

A S S

Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.
2. He that sits by another as next in dignity.

To his Son,
Th' assessor of his throne, he thus began. Milton.
Twice stronger than his fire, who sat above,
Assessor to the throne of thund'ring Jove. Dryden.

3. He that lays taxes; derived from assessor.
ASS'essor. n. f. [without the singular.] [assessor, Fr.] Good; sufficient to discharge that burden, which is cast upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the testators or ancestors debts or legacies.
Whoever pleads assessor, sayeth nothing; but that the person against whom he pleads, hath enough come to his hands, to discharge what is in demand. Cruet.

To ASSEVERATE. v. a. [asseverare, Lat.] To affirm with great solemnity, as upon oath.
ASSEVERATION. n. f. [from asseverate.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.

That which you are persuaded of, ye have it no otherwise than by your own only visible collection; and therefore such bold assertions, as in him were admirable, should, in your mouths, but argue rashness. Hooker.

Another abuse of the tongue I might add; vehement asse-rations upon slight and trivial occasions. Ray.
The repetition gives a greater emphasis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the speaker in making his assertation. Bacon.

ASSEAD. n. f. [from ass and head.] One flow of appreciation; a blockhead.

Will you help an ass head, and a coxcomb, and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull. Shakespeare.

ASSIDU'ITY. n. f. [assiduitas, Fr. assiduitas, Lat.] Diligence; closeness of application.

Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the necessity of his utmost vigour and assiduity to acquire himself of it? Rogers.

We observe the address and assiduity they will use to corrupt us. Rogers.

I have, with much pains and assiduity, qualified myself for the nomenclator. Adisson.

ASSIDUOUS. adj. [assiduus, Lat.] Constant in application.
And if by pray'r

Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries. Milton.

The most assiduous talebearers, and bitterest revilers, are often half-witted people. Groomerment of the Tongue.
In summer, you fee the hen giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the season would chill the principles of life, and destroy the young one, the grows more assiduous in her attendance, and sits away but half the time. Adisson.

Each still renews her little labour,
Nor jollies her assiduous neighbour. Prior.

ASSIDUOUSLY. adv. [from assiduus.] Diligently; continually.
The trade, that obliges artificers to be assiduously conversant with their materials, is that of glass-men. Boyle.

The habitable earth may have been perpetually the duet, seeing it is assiduously drained and exhausted by the seas. Bent.
To ASSIEGE. v. a. [assieger, Fr.] To besiege. Dicit.

AS-LENTO. n. f. [In Spanish a contract or bargain.] A contract or convention between the king of Spain and other powers, for furnishing the Spanish dominions in America with negro slaves. This contract was transferred from the French to the English South Sea company, by the treaty of 1713, for thirty years; who were likewise permitted to send a register ship, of 500 tons, yearly to the Spanish settlements, with European goods. Chambers.

To ASSIGN. v. a. [assigner, Fr. assigne, Lat.]

1. To mark out; to appoint.
He assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were. 2 Samuel.

Both joining,
As join'd in injuries, one enemy
Against a foe by doom express assign'd us,
That cruel serpent. Milton.

True quality is neglected, virtue is oppressed, and vice triumphant. The last day will assign to every one a station suitable to his character. Adisson.

2. To fix with regard to quantity or value.
There is no such intricate, natural, settled value in any things, as to make any assigned quantity of it constantly worth any assigned quantity of another. Locke.

3. In law. In general, to appoint a deputy, or make over a right to another; in particular, to appoint or set forth, as to assign error, is to shew in what part of the process error is committed:
to assign false judgments, is to declare how and where the judgment is unjust; to assign the cessor, is to shew how the plaintiff had cessor, or given over: to assign waite, is to shew wherein especially the waite is committed. Cruet.

ASSIGNABLE. adj. [from assign.] That which may be marked out, or fixed. Arbuthot.

Aristotle held that it flowed by connatural result and emanation from God; so that there was no instant affignable of God's eternal existence, in which the world did not also co-exist. South.

ASSIGNATION. n. f. [affignation, Fr.]

1. An appointment to act; used generally of love appointments.

The lovers expected the return of this stated hour with as much impatience as if it had been a real affignation. Spektator.

Or when a whore, in her vocation,

Keeps punctual to an affignation. Swift.

2. A making over a thing to another.

ASSIGNER. n. f. [affign, Fr.] He that is appointed or deputed by another, to do any act, or perform any business, or enjoy any commodity. And an assigner may be either in deed or in law; assigner in deed, is he that is appointed by a person; assigner in law, is he whom the law maketh so, without any appointment of the person. Cowell.

ASSIGNER. n. f. [affign, Fr.] He that appoints.

The Gospel is at once the assigner of our talks, and the magazine of our strength. Deay of Piety.

ASSIGNMENT. n. f. [affign, Fr.] Appointment of one thing with regard to another thing or person.

The only thing which maketh any place public, is the public assignment thereof unto such duties. Hesker.

This institution, which assigns it to a person, whom we have no rule to know, is just as good as an assignment to no body at all. Locke.

ASSIMILABLE. adj. [affimilable, Lat.] That which may be converted to the same nature with something else.

The spirits of many, long before that time, will find but natural liberations; and meeting no assimilables wherein to rectify their natures, must certainly participate such natural deflections. Bacon's Vnfor Errors.

TO ASSIMILATE. v. a. [affimile, Lat.]

1. To convert to the same nature with another thing.

Birds assimilate leas, and excrete more, than beasts; for their excrements are ever liquid, and their flesh generally more dry. Bacon.

Birds be commonly better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more finely, and feedeth more subtilly. Bacon.

Tasting concoct, digest, assimilate,

And corporal to incorporate turn. Milten.

Hence also animals and vegetables may assimilate their nourishment; most nourishment easily changing its texture, till it becomes like the dense earth. Newton.

2. To bring to a likeness, or resemblance.

A frigid and necessitous kind of life would easily assimilate at least the next generation to barbarism and ferocity. Hale's Origin of Montind.

They are not over patient of mixture; but such, whom they cannot assimilate, soon find it their interest to remove. Swift.

AN ASSIMILABLE. n. f. [affimilable, Lat.] Likeness. Dick.

ASSIMILATION. n. f. [affimilation, Lat.]

1. The act of converting any thing to the nature or substance of another.

It furthers the very act of assimilation of nourishment, by some outward emollients that make the parts more apt to assimilate. Bacon.

2. The state of being assimilated.

A nourishment in a large acceptance, but not in propriety, conferring the body, not repairing it by assimilation, but preserving it by ventilation. Brewer's Vulgar Errors.

3. The act of growing like some other being.

It is as well the instinct as duty of our nature, to aspire to an assimilation with God; even the most laudable and generous ambition. Decay of Piety.

TO ASSIMULATE. v. a. [affimulatio, Lat.] To feign; to counterfeit.

ASSIMULATION. n. f. [affimulatio, Lat.] A dissembling; a countenancing. Dick.

It is necessary and assisting to all our other intellectual faculties. Locke.

Acquaintance with method will assist one in ranging human affairs. Watts.

She no sooner yielded to adultery, but she agreed to assist in the murder of her husband. Brown.

AUSISTANT. n. f. [affistent, Fr.] Help; furtherance.

The council of Iren commends recourse, not only to the prayers of the saints, but to their aid and ausistence: What doth this aid and ausistence signify? Stillingfleet.

You have abundant ausistances for this knowledge, in excellent books. Wake.

Let us intreat this necessary ausistence, that by his grace he would lead us. Rogers.

ASSISTANT. adj. [affistent, Fr.] Helping; lending aid.

Some perbance did adhere to the duke, and were assistent to him openly, or at least under hand. Hale.

ASSISTANT. n. f. [from assist.]

1. A person engaged in an affair not as principal, but as auxiliary or ministerial.

Some young towards noblemen or gentlemen were usually sent as assistants or attendants, according to the quality of the persons. Bacon.

2. Sometimes it is only a softer word for an attendant.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,

With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd. Dryden.

ASSIZE. n. f. [assise, a sitting, Fr.]

1. An assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the bailiff or justice, in a certain place, and at a certain time.

2. A jury.

3. An ordinance or statute.

4. The court, place, or time, where and when the writs and processes of assize are taken. Cowell.

The law was never executed by any justices of assize, but the people left to their own laws. Davies.

At each assize and term we try

A thousand rascals of as deep a dye. Dryden.

5. Any court of justice.

The judging God shall close the book of fate,

And there the last assize keep,

For those who wake, and those who sleep. Dryden.

6. Assize of bread, ale, &c. Measure, or quantity. Thus it is said, women's heat is of such a price, the bread shall be of such assize.

7. Measure; rate; for which we now use fixe. See SIZE.

On high hill's top I saw a stately frame,

An hundred cubits high by just assize,

With hundred pillars. Spenser.

TO ASSIZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fix the rate of any thing by an assize or writ.

ASSIZER, or ASSISER. n. f. [from assist.] Is an officer that has the care and oversight of weights and measures. Chambers.

ASSOCIABLE. adj. [affociabilis, Lat.] That which may be joined to another.

TO ASSOciate. v. a. [affociare, Fr. affociis, Lat.]

Their defender, and his associates, have sithence propofed to the world a form such as themselves like. Hesker.

3. A companion; implying some kind of equality.

He was accompanied with a noble gentleman, no unsuitable associate. Wotton.

Sole Eve, associate sole, to me beyond

Compare, above all living creatures dear. Milten's Paradise Lost.

But my associates now my stay deplore,

Impatient. Pope.

ASSOCIATION. n. f. [from associate.]

1. Union; conjunction; society.

The church being a society, hath the self same original grounds, which other polittick societies have; the natural inclination which all men have unto sociable life, and consent to some certain bond of association; which bond is the law that appointeth what kind of order they shall be associated in. Hesker.

2. Confederacy; union for particular purposes.

This could not be done but with mighty opposition: against which, to strengthen themselves, they secretly entered into a league of association. Hesker.

3. Partnership.

Self-denial is a kind of holy association with God; and, by making you his partner, interests you in all his happiness. Boyle.

4. Connection.

Association of ideas is of great importance, and may be of excellent use. Watts.

5. Apposition; union of matter.

The changes of corporal things are to be placed only in the various separations, and new associations and motions of these permanent particles. Newton.

A'SONANCE. n. f. [assonance, Fr.] Reference of one found to another resembling it. DiD.
A'SONANT. adj. [assonant, Fr.] Sounding in a manner resembling another found. DiD.
TO ASSU'RT. v. a. [assurtir, Fr.] To range in classes, as one thing suits with another.
TO ASSU'T. v. a. [from fat; assister, Fr.] To infatuate; to be fat: a word out of use.

But whence they sprung, or how they were begot,
 Unearth is to assure, unearth to weene
 That monstrous error which doth some assit. Spenser.
TO ASSUA'GE. v. a. [The derivation of this word is uncertain; Assuagere deduces it from assuadere, or assuaviare; Juvenal, from pacis, pacis, from whence Skinner imagines assuagere might have been formed.]
 1. To mitigate; to soften; to allay.

Refreshing winds the summer's heats assuage,
 And kindly warmth disarms the winter's rage. Addison.
 2. To appease; to pacify.
 Yet is his hate, his rancour ne'er the less,
 Since nought assuageth malice when 'tis told. Fairfax.
 'Tis was necessary for the securing the people from their fears; which were capable of being assuaged by no other means. Clarendon.

Shall I, t' assuage
 Their brutal rage,
 The regal stem destroy? Dryden.
 3. To ease; as, the medicine assuages pain.
TO ASSUAGE. v. n. To abate.
 God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged. Genesis.

ASSUAGEMENT. n. f. [from assuage.] What mitigates or softens.

Tell me, when shall these weary woes have end,
 Or shall their ruthless torment never cease?
 But all my days in pining languor spend,
 Without hope of assuagement or release. Spenser.
ASSUA'GER. n. f. [from assuage.] One who pacifies or appeases.

ASSUA'GIVE. adj. [from assuage.] Softening; mitigating.
 If in the breast tumultuous joys arise,
 Muteless her soft assuasive voice applies. Pope.
TO ASSUBJUGATE. v. a. [assubjugo, Lat.] To submit to.

This valiant lord
 Must not so state his palm, nobly acquit;
 Nor by my will assubjugate his merit,
 By going to Achilles. Shakespeare.

ASSUEFACTION. n. f. [assuefactio, Lat.] The state of being accustomed to any thing.
 Right and left, as parts inferiour unto the motive faculty, are differenced by degrees from use and assuefaction, or according whereto the one grows stronger. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.
ASSUEFACED. n. f. [assuefactus, Lat.] Acquiescence; custom.

We see that assuefaction of things hurtful, doth make them lose the force to hurt. Bacon.
TO ASSU'NE. v. a. [assumere, Lat.]

1. To take.
 This when the various God had urg'd in vain,
 He straight assum'd his native form again. Pope.

2. To take upon one's self.
 With ravish'd ears,
 Affumes the God,
 Affects to nod,
 And seems to shake the spheres. Dryden.

3. To arrogate; to claim or seize unjustly.
 This makes him over forward in business, assuming in conversation, and peremptory in answers. Calder.

4. To suppose something granted without proof.
 In every hypothesis, assuming is allowed to be assumed. Boyle.

5. To apply to one's own use; to appropriate.
 His majesty might well assume the complaint and expression of king David. Clarendon.

ASSU'NER. n. f. [from assume.] An arrogant man; a man who claims more than his due.

Can man be wise in any course, in which he is not safe too?
 But can these high assumers and pretenders to reason, prove themselves so? South.

ASSU'NING. participial adj. [from assume.] Arrogant; haughty.
 His haughty looks, and his assuming air,
 The son of Isis could no longer bear. Dryden.

ASSU'NPISH. n. f. [assumpis, Lat.] A voluntary promise made by word, whereby a man taketh upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: It contains any verbal promise made upon consideration. Creswell.

ASSU'PTION. n. f. [assumptio, Lat.]
 1. The act of taking any thing to one's self.
 The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh in his virgin, more familiarly to infatuate his pleasure to us, was an enforcement beyond all methods of wisdom. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. The supposition, or act of supposing of any thing without farther proof.

These by way of assumption, under the two general propositions, are intrinsically and naturally good or bad. Norris.
 For the assumption, that Christ did such miraculous and supernatural works, to confirm what he said, we need only repeat the message sent him by John the Baptist. Saunders.

3. The thing supposed; a postulate.
 Hold, says the Stoick, your assumption's wrong:
 I grant, true freedom you have well defin'd. Dryden.

4. The taking up any person into heaven, which is supposed by the Romish church of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the assumption. Stillingfleet.

Upon the feast of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the assumption. Stillingfleet.
 Had Adam done this after a certain period of years, he would have been rewarded with an assumption to eternal felicity.

ASSU'PTIVE. adj. [assumptivus, Lat.] That may be assumed,
ASSU'ANCE. n. f. [assuance, Fr.]

1. Certain expectation.
 Though hope be, indeed, a lower and lesser thing than assu- ance, yet, as to all the purposes of a pious life, it may prove more useful. South.

What encouragement can be given to goodness, beyond the hopes of heaven, and the assuance of an endless felicity? Tillot.

2. Secure confidence; trust.
 What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
 And vain assuance of mortality,
 Which all so soon as it doth come to fight Against spiritual foes, yields by and by. Spenser.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge.
 I grant that proof from the authority of man's judgment, is not able to work that assuance, which doth grow by a stronger proof. Hobbes.

'Tis far off,
 And rather like a dream, than an assuance
 That my remembrance warrants. Shakespeare.

The obedient, and the man of practice, shall outgrow their doubts and ignorances, till certasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assuance. South.

Hath he found, in an evil cause, that comfortable assuance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him. Tillotson.

4. Firmness; undoubting steadiness.
 Men whose consideration will relieve our modesty, and give us courage and assuance in the duties of our profession. Rogers.

5. Confidence; a want of modesty; exemption from awe and fear.
 My behaviour ill governed, gave you the first comfort; my affection ill hid, hath given you this last assuance. Sidney.

Conversation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and assuance. Licet.

6. Ground of confidence; security given.
 The nature of desire itself is no easier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first shew of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assuance. Sidney.

As the conquest was but slight and superficial, so the pope's donation to the Irish submissions were but weak and feeble assu- ances. Davies.

None of woman born
 Shall harm Macbeth. ———

— Then live, Macduff, what need I fear of thee?
 But yet I'll make assuance double sure,
 And take a bond of fate; Thou shalt not live. Shakespeare.

I must confess your office is the best;
 And, let your father make her the assuance,
 She is your own, else you must pardon me,
 If you should die before him, where's her dower?
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

7. Spirit; intrepidity.
 With all th' assuance innocence can bring,
 Fearless without, because secure within;
 Aim'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see
 This pomp, a flame to you, a pride to me. Dryden.

8. Sanguinity; readiness to hope.
 This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assuance or confidence, which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not to be inclined to. Hammond.

9. Testimony of credit.
 I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
 And from some knowledge and assuance of you,
 Offer this office. Shakespeare.

We have as great assuance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, supposing that he wou'd. Tillotson.

10. Conviction.
 Such an assuance of things as will make men careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillot.

11. The name with assuance. See INSURANCE.
TO ASSU'NE. v. a. [assumere, Fr. from assuare, low Latin.]

1. To give confidence by a firm promise.
 So when he had assured them with many words, that he would restore them without hurt, according to the agreement, they let him go for the saving of their brethren. 2 Macc.

2. To secure to another.

And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that the furies nie,
In all my lands and leaves whatsoever.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

So irreducible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those whose piety assures its favour to them.

Regier.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.

And hereby we know, that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him.

John, iii. 19.

I revive

At this last fight; assur'd that men shall live

With all the creatures, and their iced preserve.

Parad. Lost.

4. To make secure.

But what on earth can long abide in state?

Or who can him assure of happy day? Spens. Muirpots.

5. To assure; to betroth.

This diviner laid claim to me, called me Dromio, swore I was assured to her.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

ASSUR'ED, participial adj. [from assure.]

1. Certain; indubitable.

It is an assured experience, that flint laid about the bottom of a tree makes it prosper.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. Certain; not doubting.

Young princes, close your hands,

—And your lips too; for, I am well assur'd
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.

Shak. King John.

As when by night the glads

Of Galileo, left assur'd, observes

Imagin'd lands, and regions, in the moon.

Paradise Lost.

3. Immodest; viciously confident.

ASSUR'EDLY, adv. [from assured.] Certainly; indubitably.

They promis'd me eternal happiness,

And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel

I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall assuredly.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

God is absolutely good, and, assuredly, the cause of all that is good; but, of any thing that is evil, he is no cause at all.

Religion's History of the World.

Assuredly he will stop our liberty, till we restore him his worship.

South.

ASSUR'EDNESS, n. f. [from assured.] The state of being assured;
certainty.

ASSUR'ER, n. f. [from assure.]

1. He that gives assurance.

2. He that gives security to make good any loss.

ASSUAGE. See ASSUAGE.

ASTERISK, n. f. [astrix, Gr.] A mark in printing or writing, in form of a little star, as *

He also published the translation of the Septuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

ASTERISM, n. f. [astrix, Gr., Lat.]

1. A constellation.

Poetry hath filled the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the feigned virtues and influences of each.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Dwell particularly on passages with an *asterism; for the observations which follow such a note, will give you a clear light.

Dryden's Duffresnoy.

ASTHMA, n. f. [asthma, Gr.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move.

Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax, but does not continue long.

Feyer on the Humours.

ASTHMATICAL, adj. [from asthma.] Troubled with an asthmatick; asthma.

In asthmatical persons, we often see, that though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years.

Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatick; and, for avoiding the watering of them, we wet their hay.

Feyer on the Humours.

ASTERN, adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,

While these astern descending down the steep,

Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep.

Dryden.

ASTERT, v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert;

But knew we fools what it us brings untill,

Die would we daily, once it to expert;

No danger there the shepherd can astert.

Spenser's Poet.

No X.

ASTONISHED, participial adj. A word used in the version of the bible for astonished.

Many were astounded at thee.

Isaiah, lii. 14.

TO ASTONISH, v. a. [astonder, Fr. from astennu, Lat.] To confound with some sudden passion, as with fear or wonder;
to amaze; to surprize.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble;

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

Astonish'd at the voice, he stood amaz'd.

And all around with inward horror gaz'd.

Addison's Ovid.

A genius universal as his theme,

Astonish'd as chaos.

Thomson's Summer.

ASTONISHINGNESS, n. f. [from astonish.] Of a nature to excite astonishment.

ASTONISHMENT, n. f. [astonnement, Fr.] Amazement; confusion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no less wonder to us, than astonishment to themselves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers.

Sidney.

She esteem'd this as much above his wisdom, as astonishment is beyond bare admiration.

South.

TO ASTOUND, v. a. [astomer, Fr.] To astonish; to confound with fear or wonder. This word is now somewhat obsolete.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound

The virtuous mind, that ever well's attend'd

By a strong siding champion, conscience.

Paradise Regain'd.

ASTRADDLE, adv. [from a and straddle.] With one's legs across any thing.

ASTRACAL, n. f. [astrix, Gr., the ankle, or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns.

Build. Dict.

We fix one of that ordinary confusion, which is the result of quarter rounds of the astracal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars.

Spenser.

ASTRAL, adj. [from astrum, Lat.] Starry; relating to the stars.

Some astral forms I must invoke by pray't,

Fram'd all of purest atoms of the air;

Not in their natures simply good or ill;

But most subservient to bad spirits will.

Dryden's Trojan Trov.

ASTRA'VE, adv. [from a and stray.] Out of the right way.

May seem the wain was very well led,

When such an one had guiding of the way,

That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray.

F. & G.

You run astray, for whilst we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland.

Spenser on Ireland.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way.

Milt. Il Perseris.

TO ASTRICT, v. a. [astrix, Lat.] To contract by applications, in opposition to relax: a word not so much used as constringe.

The solid parts were to be relaxed or astriated, as they let the humours pass either in too small or too great quantities.

Arctabst on Aliments.

ASTRICTI'ON, n. f. [astrix, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Astrix is in a substance that hath a virtul cold; and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth.

This virtue requirerth an astrix, but such an astrix as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astrix doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them: and therefore such astrix is found in things of a harsh taste.

Bacon's Nat. History.

Such lenitive substances are proper for dry strabularian constitutions, who are subject to astrix of the belly and the piles.

Arctabst on Diet.

ASTRICTIVE, adj. [from astrix.] Stiptick; of a binding nature.

Dict.

ASTRICTORY, adj. [astrix, Gr., Lat.] Astriking; apt to bind.

Dict.

ASTRI'VE, adv. [from a and stride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aside,

Their modesty, and ride astride.

Hudibras.

I saw a place where the Rh. ne is so fraitered between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once.

Boyle.

ASTRI'VEOUS, adj. [astrix, Lat.] Bearing, or having stars.

D. ASTRI'VEOUS, adj. [astrix, Lat.] Adorned with stars.

Dict.

TO ASTRI'NGE, v. a. [astrix, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astrix the moisture of the brain, and thereby fends tears into the eyes.

Feyer.

ASTRI'NGENCY, n. f. [from astrix.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxation.

*Astrix*ion prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, astrix- gents inhibit putrefaction: and, by *astrix*ency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying.

Bacon's Natural History.

Acid, actid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astrix- gency, create horour, that is, stimulate the fibres.

Arctabst.

ASTRI'NGENT, adj. [astrix, Gr., Lat.] Binding; contracting; opposed to laxative.

21 Astringent

Astringent medicines are binding, which act by the asperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up closer.

The juice is very astringent, and therefore of slow motion.

What diminisheth sensible perspiration, encreaseth the insensible; for that reason a strengthening and astringent diet often condueth to this purpose.

ASTROGRAPHY. n. f. [from ἀστρογῆρα, Lat. astrographia, to take.] The science of describing the stars.

ASTROLABE. n. f. [ἀστρολάβιον, of ἀστρον, and λαβιον, to take.]

1. An instrument chiefly used for taking the altitude of the pole, the sun or stars, at sea.
2. A stereographic projection of the circles of the sphere upon the plain of some great circle.

ASTROLOGER. n. f. [ἀστρολόγος, Lat. astrologus and ἀστρολογία.] One that, supposing the influences of the stars to have a causal power, professes to foretell or discover events depending on those influences.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the stars, say the astrologers; on the organs of the body, say the naturalists; it is the particular gift of heaven, say the divines, both Christians and Heathens.

I never heard a finer satire against lawyers, than that of astrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a suit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant.

2. It was antiently used for one that understood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy astrologer now living, who, by the help of perspective glasses, hath found in the stars many things unknown to the ancients, affirms much to have been discovered in Venus.

ASTROLOGIAN. n. f. [from astrology.] The same with astrologer.

The twelve houses of heaven, in the form which astrologians use.

The stars, they say, cannot dispose, No more than can the astrologian.

ASTROLOGICAL. adj. [from astrology.] Relating to astrology.

ASTROLOGICK. adj. predessing astrology.

Some seem a little astrologick, as when they warn us from places of malign influence.

No astrologick wizard honour gains, Who has not oft been banish'd, or in chains.

Astrological prayers seem to me to be built on as good reason as the predictions.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the astrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great.

ASTROLOGICALLY. adv. [from astrology.] In an astrological manner.

To ASTROLOGIZE. v. n. [from astrology.] To practise astrology.

ASTROLOGY. n. f. [ἀστρολογία, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the stars; an art now generally exploded, as without reason.

I know it hath been the opinion of the learned, who think of the art of astrology, that the stars do not force the actions or wills of men.

ASTRONOMER. n. f. [from ἀστρον, a star, and νόμος, a rule or law.] He that studies the celestial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of fictions under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the astronomers speak in the inferior orbs.

The old and new astronomers in vain Attempt the heavenly motions to explain.

Since astronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the sun, it is fit to proceed upon that hypothesis.

ASTRONOMICAL. adj. [from astronomy.] Belonging to astronomy.

ASTRONOMICK. adj. nomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the sun's progress through the zodiack, they registrate and set them down in their astronomical canons.

Can he not pass an astronomick line, Or does he tread th' imaginary sign?

That he should ne'er advance to either pole.

ASTRONOMICALLY. adv. [from astronomical.] In an astronomical manner.

ASTRONOMY. n. f. [ἀστρονομία, from ἀστρον, a star, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematical science, teaching the knowledge of the celestial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, distances, periods, eclipses, and order. The origin of astronomy is uncertain; but from Egypt it travelled into Greece, where Pythagoras was the first European who taught that the earth and planets turn round the sun, which stands immovable in the center; as he himself had been instructed by the Egyptian priests. From the time of Pythagoras, astronomy sunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens, after their conquest of that country, having acquired some knowledge of it, brought it from Africa to Spain, and again restored this science to Europe, where it has since received very considerable improvements.

To this must be added the understanding of the globe, and the principles of geometry and astronomy.

ASTROSCOPY. n. f. [ἀστροσκοπία, a star, and σκοπία, to view.] Observation of the stars.

ASTRO-THOLOGY. n. f. [from astron, a star, and theologia, divinity.] Divinity founded on the observation of the celestial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, and not of the sun, I shew in the preface of my Astro-theology.

ASUNDER. adv. [ajundran, Sax.] Apart; separately; not together.

I two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go asunder.

Sense thinks the planets spheres not much asunder; What tells us then their distance is so far? Sir J. Davis.

His with, and best advantage, asunder.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state, Seeks hid advantage to betray us worse;

Which, when asunder, will not prove too hard, For both together are each other's guard.

Like adamant and steel they meet again.

All this metallic matter, both that which continued asunder, and in single corpuscles, and that which was amass'd and concreted into nodules, subside.

ASYLUM. n. f. [Lat. asylum, from as, not, and ylum, to pilage.] A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a sanctuary; a refuge.

So sacred was the church to some, that it had the right of an asylum, or sanctuary.

ASYMMETRY. n. f. [from as, without, and symmetria, symmetry.]

1. Contrariety to symmetry; disproportion.

The asymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time.

2. This term is sometimes used in mathematics, for what is more usually called incommensurability; when between two quantities there is no common measure.

ASYMPTOTE. n. f. [from as, priv. eu, with, and ptote, to fall; which never meet; coincident.] Asymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to some curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived at tangents to their curves at an infinite distance.

Asymptote lines, though they may approach still nearer together, till they are nearer than the least assignable distance, yet, being still produced infinitely, will never meet.

ASYMPTOTICAL. adj. [from asymptote.] Curves are said to be asymptotical, when they continually approach, without a possibility of meeting.

Thy interpreter, full of despatch, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Shakespeare.

11. To be bent upon any object.

Their hunger thus appears, their care attends
The doubtful fortune of their absent friends. Dryden.

12. To stay for.

I died whilst in the womb he slaid,
Attending nature's law. Shakespeare.

I hasten to our own; nor will relate
Great Mithridates, and rich Cæsar's fate;
Whom Solon wisely counsel'd to attend
The name of happy, till he knew his end. Dryden.

TO ATTEND. v. n.

1. To yield attention.

But, thy relation now! for I attend,
Pleas'd with thy words. Milton.

Since man cannot at the same time attend to two objects, if you employ your spirit upon a book or a bodily labour, you have no room left for sensual temptation. Taylor.

2. To stay; to delay.

This first true cause, and last good end,
She cannot here so well, and truly see;
For this perfection she must yet attend,
Till to her Maker she espoused be. Sir J. Davies.

Plant anemones after the first rains, if you will have flowers very forward; but it is surer to attend till October, or the month after. Everin.

ATTENDANCE. n. f. [attendere, Fr.]

1. The act of waiting on another; or of serving.

I dance attendance here,
I think the duke will not be spoke withal. Shakespeare.

For he, of whom these things are spoken, pertains to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. Hab. vii. 13.

The other, after many years attendance upon the duke, was now one of the bedchamber to the prince. Clarendon.

Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. 1 Tim. iv. 13.

5. Expectation; a sense now out of use.

That which causeth bitterness in death, is the languishing attendance and expectation thereof ere it come. Holier.

ATTENDANT. adj. [attendens, Fr.] Accompanying as subordinate.

Other sins, perhaps,
With their attendant moons, thou wilt defecy,
Communicating male and female light. Milton.

ATTENDANT. n. f.

1. One that attends.

I will be returned forthwith; dismiss your attendant there;
look it be done. Shakespeare.

2. One that belongs to the train.

When foudacious monarch dies,
Soft whispers first and mournful murmurs rise
Among the sad attendants. Dryden.

3. One that waits the pleasure of another, as a suitor or agent.

I endeavour that my reader may not wait long for my meaning; to give an attendant quick dispatch is a civility. Burnet's Theory.

4. One that is present at any thing.

He was a constant attendant at all meetings relating to charity, without contributing. Saunders.

5. In law. One that oweth a duty or service to another; or, after a sort, dependeth upon another. Cowd.

sequent.

Beware,
And govern well thy appetite, lest sin
Surprize thee, and her black attendant, death. Mil.

They secure themselves first from doing nothing, and then from doing ill; the one being to close an attendant on the other, that it is scarce possible to sever them. Deacy of Fifty.

He had an unlimited sense of fame, the attendant of noble spirits, which prompted him to engage in travels. Pope.

It is hard to take into view all the attendants or consequences that will be concerned in the determination of a question.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

ATTENDER. n. f. [from attend.] Companion; associate.

The gypsies were there,
Like leeches to appear,
With such their attenders,
As you thought offenders. Ben Jonson.

ATTENT. adj. [attentus, Lat.] Intent; attentive; heedful; regardful.

Now mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attend unto the prayer that is made in this place. 2 Chron.

What can then be less in me than desire,
To see thee, and approach thee, whom I know,
Declar'd the Son of God, to hear attend
Thy wisdom, and behold thy godlike deeds. Milton.

Read your chapter in your prayers; little interruptions will make your prayers less tedious, and yourself more attent upon them. Taylor.

To want of judging abilities, we may add their want of leisure to apply their minds to such a serious and attent consideration. South.

Being denied communication by their ear, their eyes are more vigilant, attent, and heedful. Holier.

ATTENTATIVE. n. f. [attentatus, Lat.] Proceedings in a court of judicature, pending suit, and after an inhibition is decreed and gone out; those things which are done after an extrajudicial appeal, may likewise be filed attentatives. Arg.

ATTENTION. n. f. [attention, Fr.] The act of attending or heeding; the act of bending the mind upon any thing.

They lay the tongues of dying men
Inforce attention like deep harmony. Shakespeare.

what he would further say. Bacon.

But him the gentle angel by the hand
Soon rais'd, and his attention thus recall'd. Milton.

By attendi in the ideas, that offer themselves, are taken notice of, and, as it were, registered in the memory. Locke.

Attention is a very necessary thing; truth doth not always strike the soul at first sight. Hobbes.

ATTENTIVE. adj. [from attent.] Heedful; regardful; full of attention.

Being moved with these and the like your effectual discourses, whereunto we gave most attentive ear, till they entered even unto our souls. Holier.

For

I'm never merry when I hear sweet musick.

— The reason is, your spirits are attentive. Shakespeare.
I saw most of them attentive to three Sirens, distinguished by the names of Sloth, Ignorance, and Pleasure. Tatler.
A crick is a man who, on all occasions, is more attentive to what is wanting than what is present. Addison.

Musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar refrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested main,
Attentive to the song. Prior.

ATTENTIVELY, adv. [from attentive.] Heedfully; carefully.
If a man look sharply and attentively, he shall see Fortune;
for though she be blind, she is not invisible. Bacon.

The cause of cold is a quick spirit in a cold body; as will appear to any that shall attentively consider of nature. Bacon.
ATTENTIVENESS, n. f. [from attentive.] The state of being attentive; heedfulness; attention.

At the relation of the queen's death, bravely confessed and Proud Daphne. Spenser.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies;
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspeare.
With the linen mitre shall he be attired. Leviticus.

Now the sappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms. Philips.

ATTIRE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; dress; habit.
It is no more disgrace to Scripture to have left things free to be ordered by the church, than for nature to have left it to the wit of man to devise his own attire. Hosier.

After that the Roman attire grew to be in account, and the gown to be in use among them. Davies.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Hath cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

And in this coarse attire, which I now wear,
With God and with the Muses I confer. Dennis.

When lavish nature, with her best attire,
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller.

I pass their form, and ev'ry charming grace,
But their attire, like liveries of a kind,
All rich and rare, is fresh within my mind. Dryden.

2. In hunting. The horns of a buck or stag.

3. In botany. The flower of a plant is divided into three parts, the empalement, the foliation, and the attire, which is either florid or semiflorid. Florid attire, called thrums or fuits, as in the flowers of marigold and tansey, confists sometimes of two, but commonly of three parts. The outer part is the floret, the body of which is divided at the top, like the cowslip flower, into five distinct parts. Semiflorid attire confists of two parts, the chieftes and apices; one upon each attire. Dist.

attitude of a figure. Prior.

They were famous originals that gave rise to statues, with the same air, posture, and attitude. Addison.

ATTOLLENT, adj. [attollens, Lat.] That which raises or lifts up.
I shall farther take notice of the exquisite libration of the attollent and deprement muscles. Derham.

ATTORNEY, n. f. [attornatus, low Lat. from tor, Fr. Celui qui vient à tour d'autrui; qui alterius vices substit.

1. Such a person as by consent, commandment, or request, takes heeds, fees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's business, in their absence. Attorney is either general or special:
Attorney general is he that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or suits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the same with Procurator Cæsarii in the Roman empire. Attorneys general are made either by the king's letters patent, or by our appointment before justices in eyre, in open court. Attorney special or particular, is he that is employed in one or more causes particularly specified. There are also, in respect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys spe- cial, belonging to this or that court only. Covent.

Attorneys in common law, are nearly the same with proctors in the civil law, and solicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys sue out writs or process, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other persons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act without having served a clerkship for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c. and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.

I am a subject,

And challenge law: attorneys are deny'd me,
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To mine inheritance. Shakspeare.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,
Of divers witnesses. Shakspeare.

Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an useless race. Pope.

2. It was anciently used for those who did any business for another; now only in law.

I will attend my husband; it is my office,
And will have no attorney but myself,
And therefore let me have him home. Shakspeare.

— Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airs succeders of intestine joys. Shakspeare.

ATTORNEY, v. a. [from the noun; the verb is now not in use.]

1. To perform by proxy.

Their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attorned with interchange of gifts. Shakspeare.

2. To employ as a proxy.

As I was then
Advertising, and holy to your business;
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorned to your service. Shakspeare.

ATTORNEYSHIP, n. f. [from attorney.] The office of an attorney.

But marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship. Shakspeare.

ATTORNNMENT, n. f. [attournement, Fr.] Any yielding of the tenant to a new lord, or acknowledgment of him to be his lord; for, otherwise, he that buyeth or obtaineth any lands or tenements of another, which are in the occupation of a third, cannot get possession. Cowell.

ATTRACT, v. a. [attraho, attrahum, Lat.]

1. To draw to something.
A man should scarce persuade the affections of the loathsome, or that jet and amber attrahet thrives and light bodies.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The single atoms each to other tend,
Attract, attracted to, the next in place,
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace. Pope.

2. To allure; to invite. Adorn'd
She was induc'd, and lovely, to attract
Thy love; not thy subjection. Milton.
Shew the care of approving all actions so, as may most effectively attract all to this perfection. Hammond.

Deign to be lov'd, and ev'ry heart subdue!
What nymph could e'er attract such crowds as you! Pope.

ATTRACT, n. f. [from attract.] Attraction; the power of drawing.

Feel darts and charms, attracts and flames, Hudibras.
And woe and contract in their names.

ATTRACTICAL, adj. [from attract.] Having the power to draw to it.

Some stones are endued with an electrical or attractical virtue. Ray on the Creation.

ATTRACTION, n. f. [from attract.]
1. The power of drawing any thing.

The drawing of amber and jet, and other electric bodies, and the attraction in gold of the spirit of quicksilver at distance; and the attraction of heat at distance; and that of fire to naphtha; and that of some herbs to water, though at distance; and divers others, we shall handle. Bacon.

Loadstones and touched needles, laid long in quicksilver, have not admitted their attraction. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Attraction may be performed by impulse, or some other means; I use that word, to signify any force by which bodies tend towards one another. Newton.

2. The power of alluring or enticing.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakespeare.

ATTRACTIVE, adj. [from attract.]
1. Having the power to draw any thing.

What is the sun
Be centric to the world; and other stars,
By his attractive virtue, and their own,
Incited, dance about him various rounds. Milton.

Some the round earth's cohesion to secure,
For that hard task employ magnetic power;
Remark, say they, the globe, with wonder own
Its nature, like the fam'd attractive stone. Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetism, and electricity; and these influences make it not improbable but there may be more attractive powers than these. Newton.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, whoso'er she lies;
For the hath blest and attractive eye. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,
The most averse, from thee chiefly. Milton.

ATTRACTIVE, n. f. [from attract.] That which draws or incites allurements; except that attractive is of a good or indifferent sense, and allurement generally bad.

The condition of a servant flaves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but attractive and invitation. South.

ATTRACTIVELY, adv. [from attractive.] With the power of attracting or drawing.

ATTRACTIVENESS, n. f. [from attractive.] The quality of being attractive.

ATTRACTOR, n. f. [from attract.] The agent that attracts; a drawer.

If the flames be in oil, amber draweth them not; oil makes the flames to adhere so, that they cannot rise unto the attractor. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ATTRAHENT, n. f. [from attract.] That which draws.

Our eyes will inform us of the motion of their attrahent. Glennville.

ATTRACTAION, n. f. [from attractio.] Frequent handling. D.

TO ATTRIBUTE, v. a. [from attribu.] To ascribe; to give; to yield.

To their very bare judgment somewhat a reasonable man would attribute, notwithstanding the common imbecillities which are incident unto our nature. Hosker.

We attribute nothing to God that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it. Power and wisdom have no repugnancy in them. Tillotson.

2. To impute, as to a cause.

I have observed a campaign determine contrary to appearances, by the cautious and conduct of a general, which were attributed to his infirmities. Temple.

The imperfection of telescopes is attributed to spherical glasses; and mathematicians have propounded to figure them by the conical sections. Newton.

ATTRIBUTE, n. f. [from to attribute.]

1. The thing attributed to another, as perfection to the Supreme Being.

Power, light, virtue, wisdom, and goodness, being all but attributes of one simple essence, and of one God, we in all admire, and in part discern. Raleigh.

Your vain poets after did mistake,
Who ev'ry attribute a god did make. Dryden.

All the perfections of God are called his attributes; for he cannot be without them. Watts.

2. Quality; adherent.

They must have these three attributes; they must be men of courage, fearing God, and hating covetousness. Bacon.

3. A thing belonging to another; an appendant.

His sceptre shews the force of temporal pow'r,
The attribute to awe and majesty;
But mercy is above this scepter'd sway,
It is an attribute to God himself. Shakespeare.

The sculptor, to distinguish him, gave him, what the medals call his proper attributes, a spear and a shield. Addison.

4. Reputation; honour.

It takes
From our achievements, though perform'd at height,
The path and marrow of our attribute. Shakespeare.

ATTRIBUTION, n. f. [from to attribute.] Commendation.

If speaking truth,
In this fine age, were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

ATTRITE, adj. [from atruere, Lat.] Ground; worn by rubbing.

Or by collision of two bodies, grind
The air atruite to fire. Milton.

ATTRITNESS, n. f. [from atruere.] The being much worn.

ATTRITION, n. f. [from atruere, Lat.]

1. The act of wearing things, by rubbing one against another.

This vapour, ascending incessantly out of the abyss, and pervading the strata of gravel, and the rest, decays the bones and vegetables lodged in those strata; this fluid, by its continual attrition, fretting the solid bodies. Woodward.

The change of the aliment is effected by attrition of the inward stomach, and dissolvent liquor assisted with heat. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

2. [With divines.] Grief for sin, arising only from the fear of punishment; the lowest degree of repentance.

TO ATTUNE, v. a. [from tune.]

1. To make any thing musical.

Airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves. Milton.

2. To tune one thing to another; as, he attunes his voice to his harp.

ATTURNEY, n. f. See ATTORNEY.

ATWEN, adv. or prep. [See BETWEEN.] Betwixt; between; in the midst of two things.

Her look long yellow locks, like golden wire,
Sprinkled with pearl, and peeling flowers atween,
Do, like a golden mantle, her attire. Spenser.

ATWXT, prep. [See BETWEEN.] In the middle of two things.

But with outrageous strokes did him restrain,
And with his body barr'd the way atwixt them twain. Fairy Queen.

TO AVAIL, v. a. [from valere, Fr. to avail being nearly the same thing with faire valoir.]

1. To profit; to turn to profit; with of before the thing used.

Then shall they seek t' avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles; and with these to join Secular pow'r. Milton.

Both of them avail themselves of those licences, which Apollo has equally bestowed on them. Dryden.

2. To promote; to prosper; to assist.

Meanwhile he vorag'd to explore the will
Of Jove on high Dodona's holy hill,
What means might best his fate return avail. Pope.

TO AVAIL, v. a. To be of use; to be of advantage.

Not can my strength avail, unless by thee
Endu'd with love, I gain the victory. Dryden.

When real merit is wanting, it avails nothing to have been encouraged by the great. Pope.

AVAIL, n. f. [from to avail.] Profit; advantage; benefit.

For all that else did come, were sure to fail;
Yet would he further none but for avail. Spenser's Husband's Tale.

I charge thee,
As heav'n shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly. Shakespeare.

Truth, light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than error.

AVAILABLE, adj. [from avail.]

1. Profitable; advantageous.

All things subject to action, the will does so far incline us, as 21 reason judges them more available to our bliss. Hooker.

2. Powerful; in force. Hooker.

Laws human are available by consent. Hooker.

Mighty is the efficacy of such intercessions to avert judgments; how much more available then may they be to secure the continuance of blessings? Atterbury.

AVAILABILITY, n. f. [from available.] Power of promoting the end for which it is used.

We differ from this supposition of the efficacy or availability, or suitableness of these to the end. Hale.

AVAILABILITY, adv. [from available.] Powerfully; profitably; advantageously.

Huge heaps of mud he leaves. Spenser.

AVANT. See VAN.

AVANT-GUARD, n. f. [avantgarde, Fr.] The van; the first body of an army.

The horsemen might issue forth without disturbance of the feet, and the avant-guard without flustering with the dust of the stir.

AVARICE, n. f. [avarice, Fr. avaritia, Lat.] Covetousness; insatiable desire. Sir J. Haywood.

There grows

In my most ill compos'd affection, such
A stanchless avarice, that were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakespeare.

This avarice of praise in times to come,
Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb.

Nor love his peace of mind deltoys,
Nor wicked avarice of wealth. Dryden.

Avarice is insatiable; and so he went still pushing on for more. L'Estrange.

AVARICIOUS, adj. [avaritieux, Fr.] Covetous; insatiably delirious.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakespeare.

AUDIENCY, adv. A court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, of equal authority with the arches court, though inferior both in dignity and antiquity. The original of this court was, because the archbishop of Canterbury heard several causes extrajudicially at home in his own place; in which, before he would finally determine any thing, he usually committed them to be discussed by men learned in the civil and canon laws, whom thereupon he called his auditors; and so in time it became the power of the man, who is called causarum negotiorumque audientia Canterbury's auditor, few officials. Cotel.

AUDIT, n. f. [from audit, he hears, Lat.] A final account.

If they, which are accustomed to weigh all things, shall here sit down to receive our audit, the sum, which truth a-mounteth to, will appear to be but this. Hooker.

He took my father graciously, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;

And how his audit hands, who knows have heav'n it? H. Mil.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,

And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare.

TO AUDIT, v. a. [from audit.] To take an account finally.

Averse alike to flatter, or offend,
Not free from faults, nor yet to vain to mend. Pope.

3. It has most properly from before the object of aversion.
Laws politick are never framed as they should be, unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature. Hobbes.

They believed all who objected against their undertaking to be averse from peace. Clarendon.

These cares alone her virgin breast employ,
Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy. Pope.

4. Very frequently, but improperly, to.
He had, from the beginning of the war, been very averse to any advice of the privy council. Clarendon.

Diodorus tells us of one Charondos, who was averse to all innovation, especially when it was to proceed from particular persons. Swift.

A'VE'R'S'E'LY. adv. [from averse.]

AUTHOR. n. f. [auctor, Lat.]

1. The first beginner or mover of any thing; he to whom any thing owes its original.

That law, the author and observer whereof is one only God, to be belied for ever. Hooker.

The author of that which causeth another thing to be, is author of that thing also which thereby is caused. Hooker.

I'll never

Be such a gossling to obey unjust; but stand
 As if a man was author of himself, Shakespeare.
 And knew no other kin.

'Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
 My being gav'st me; whom should I obey,
 But thee? Milton.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
 His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
 'Thus king Latinus, in the third degree, Dryden.
 Had Saturn author of his family.

If the worship of false Gods had not blinded the heathen, instead of teaching to worship the sun, and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worship our true Author and benefactor, as their ancestors did under the government of Noah and his sons, before they corrupted themselves. Newton.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Shakespeare.

Now while the tortur'd savage turns around,
 And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound;
 The wound's great author close at hand provokes
 His rage. Dryden.

From his loins

New authors of dissension spring; from him
 Two branches, that in hoiling long contend
 For sov'reign sway. Philips.

3. The first writer of any thing; distinct from the translator or compiler.

'To stand upon every point in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. 2 Macc. ii. 30.

An author has the choice of his own thoughts and words, which a translator has not. Dryden.

4. A writer in general.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
 That the land Salike lies in Germany. Shakespeare.

AUTHORITATIVE. adj. [from authority.]

1. Having due authority

2. Having an air of authority.

I dare not give them the authoritative title of aphorisms, which yet may make a reasonable moral prognostick. H. Allen.

The two authorities have done mischief, the mock authorita- tive manner of the one, and the insipid mirth of the other.
Swift's Examiner, N° 15.

AUTHORITATIVELY. adv. [from authoritative.]

1. In an authoritative manner; with a show of authority.

2. With due authority.

No law that is foreign binds here in England, till it be received, and authoritatively engrafted into the law of England.
Hale's History of Law.

AUTHORITATIVENESS. n. f. [from authoritative.] An acting by authority; authoritative appearance. Dicit.

AUTHORITY. n. f. [auctoritas, Lat.]

1. Legal power.

Idle old man,

That still would manage those authorities, Shakespeare.
 That he hath given away!

I know, my lord,

If law, authority, and pow'r duty neet,

It will go hard with poor Antonio. Shakespeare.

Power arising from strength, is always in those that are governed, who are many; but authority arising from opinion, is in those that govern, who are few. Temple.

Adam's sovereignty, that by virtue of being proprietor of the whole world, he had any authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children. Locke.

2. Influence; credit.

The woods are fitter to give rules than cities, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way, by the authority of example. Locke.

3. Power; rule.

But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim. ii. 12.

4. Support; justification; countenance.

Do it thou expect 'th' authority of their voices, Whose silent wills condemn thee? Ben. Jonson.

5. Testimony.

Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so true an authority confirmed. Shakespeare.

We urge authorities in things that need not, and introduce the testimony of ancient writers, to confirm things evidently believed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Having been too hardy as to undertake a charge against the philosophy of the schools, I was liable to have been overborn by a torrent of authorities. Glauville.

6. Weight of testimony; credibility.

They consider the main content of all the churches in the whole world, witnessing the sacred authorities of scriptures, ever since the first publication thereof, even till this present day and hour. Hobbes.

AUTHORIZATION. n. f. [from authorize.] Establishment by authority.

The obligation of laws arises not from their matter, but from their admission and reception, and authorization in this kingdom. Hale.

TO AUTHORIZE. v. a. [auctore, Fr.]

1. To give authority to any person.

Making herself an impudent suitor, authorizing herself very much, with making us see that all favour and power depended upon her. Sidney.

Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,

Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. To make any thing legal.

Yourself first made that title which I claim,

First bid me love, and authorize'd my flame. Dryden.

My prayers are heard,

And I have nothing farther to desire,

But Sancho's leave to authorize our marriage. Dryden.

To have countenance in him irregularity and disobedience to that light which he had, would have been, to have authorized disorder, confusion, and wickedness in his creatures. Locke.

3. To establish any thing by authority.

Lawful it is to devise any ceremony, and to authorize any kind of regiment, no special commandment being thereby violated. Hooker.

Those forms are best which have been longest received and authorized in a nation by custom and use. Temple.

4. To justify; to prove a thing to be right.

All virtue lies in a power of denying our own desires, where reason does not authorize them. Locke.

5. To give credit to any person or thing.

Although their intention be sincere, yet doth it notoriously strengthen vulgar error, and authorize opinions injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Be a person in vogue with the multitude, he shall authorize any nonsense, and make incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for rhetoric. South.

AUTOCRACY. n. f. [αὐτοκρατία, from αὐτός, self, and κρα- τος, power.] Independent power; supremacy. Dicit.

AUTOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from autography.] Of one's own writing. Dicit.

AUTOGRAPHY. n. f. [αὐτογραφία, from αὐτός, and γράφω, self. Dicit.

AUTOMATICAL. adj. [from automaton.] Belonging to an automaton; having the power of moving themselves.

AUTOMATON. n. f. [αὐτόματον.] In the plural, automata.]
 A machine that hath the power of motion within itself, and which stands in need of no foreign assistance. Quincy.

For it is greater to understand the art, whereby the Almighty governs the motions of the great automata, than to have learned the intrigues of policy. Glauville.

The particular circumstances for which the automata of this kind are most eminent, may be reduced to four.

William's Mathematical Magick:

AUTOMATOUS. adj. [from automaton.] Having in itself the power of motion.

Clocks, or automatous organs, whereby we distinguish of time, have no mention in ancient writers. Brown's Vul. Err.

 it hath this use. Ray.

AUTOPTICAL. adj. [from autopsy.] Perceived by one's own eyes.

AUTOPTICALLY. adv. [from autoptical.] By means of one's own eyes.

Were this true, it would autoptically silence that dispute, out of which Eve was framed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That the galaxy is a meteor, was the account of Aristotle;
 but the telescope hath autoptically confuted it: and he, who is not Pyrrhonian enough to the disbelief of his senses, may see that it is no exhalation. Glauville.

AUTOTHEIST. n. f. [from αὐτός and θεός, God.] One who believes God's self-subsistence. Dicit.

AUTUMN. n. f. [autumnus, Lat.] The season of the year between summer and winter, beginning astronomically at the equiequinox, and ending at the solstice; popularly, autumn comprises August, September, and October.

For I will board her, though the chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack. Shakspeare
I would not be over confident, till he hath passed a spring or autumn. Wifeman

The starving brood,
Void of sufficient fulness, will yield
A slender autumn. Philips

While autumn nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on; the Dorick reed once more Well pleas'd I tune. Thomson

AUTUMNAL, adj. [from autumn.] Belonging to autumn; produced in autumn.

No spring, or summer's beauty, hath such grace
As I have seen in one autumnal face. Denne

Thou shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or light'ning, thou shalt fall. Milton

Bind now up your autumnal flowers, to prevent sudden egds, which will prostrate all. Evelyn

Nut the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal fun bestows. Pope

AUTO LYON, n. f. [autis, Lat.] The act of pulling one thing from another.

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow
Redundant; but the thronging clusters thin
By kind autolysis. Philips

The pressure of any ambient fluid can be no intelligible cause of the cohesion of matter; though such a pressure may hinder the autolysis of two polished superficies one from another, in a line perpendicular to them. Locke

AUTESIS, n. f. [Latin.] An exorcising; an exhortation, when, for amplification, a more grave and magnificent word is put instead of the proper word. Smith

AUXILIAR. } n. f. [from auxilium, Lat.] Helper; assistant;
AUXILIARY. } confederate.

In the strength of that power, he might, without the auxi- liaries of any further influence, have determined his will to a fall choice of God. South

There are, indeed, a sort of underling auxiliaries to the difficulty of a work, called commentators and critics. Pope

AUXILIAR. } adj. [from auxilium, Lat.] Assistant; help-AUXILIARY. } ing; confederate.

The giant brood,
That fought at Thebes and Ilium on each side,
Mie'd with auxiliar gods. Milton

Their traitates are little auxiliary unto ours, nor afford us any light to denigrate this truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors

There is not the smallest capillary vein but it is pregnant with and auxiliary to it, according to its use. Hale

Nor from his patrimonial heav'n alone
Is Jove content to pour his vengeance down;
Aid from his brother of the seas he craves,
To help him with auxiliary waves. Dryden

AUXILIARY Verb. A verb that helps to conjugate other verbs.

In almost all languages, some of the commonest nouns and verbs have many irregularities; such are the common auxi- liary verbs, to be and to have, to do and to be done, &c. Watts

AUXILIAT. OS, n. f. [from auxiliatus, Lat.] Help; aid; succours. Diets

TO AWAIT, v. a. [from a and wait. See WAIT.]
1. To expect; to wait for.

Even as the wretch condemn'd to lose his life,
Awaits the falling of the murder's knife. Fairfax

Between the rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of th' angelic guards, awaiting night. Par. Lost

2. To attend; to be in store for.

To shew thee what reward Awaits the good; the rest, what punishment. Par. Lost

Unless his wrath be appeased, an eternity of torments awaits the objects of his displeasure. Rassers

AWAIT, n. f. [from the verb.] Ambush. See WAIT.

And least misapp the most blis's alter may?
For thousand perils lie in close await

About us daily, to work our decay. Spenser

TO AWAKE, v. a. [preccan, Sax. To awake has the preterite awake, or, as we now more commonly speak, awaked.]
1. To rouse out of sleep.

How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakspeare

Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep. John, xi. 11.

2. To rouse from any state resembling sleep.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has rais'd up his head:
As awak'd from the dead,
And amaz'd he stares round. Dryden

3. To put into new action.

The fair
Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face. Pope

TO AWAKE, v. n. To break from sleep; to cease to sleep.

Alack, I am afraid they have awak'd. South

And 'tis not done. South

I awak'd up last of all, as one thing gather'd after the grape-garberers. Shakspeare

AWAK'G, adj. [from the verb.] Without sleep; not sleeping.
Imagination is like to work bear up in sleeping men, than men awak'g. Locke

Cares shall not keep him on the throne awak'd.
Nor break the golden slumbers he would take. Dryden

TO AWAKEN, v. a. and v. n. See AWAKE.

TO AWARD, v. a. [derived by Scinner, somewhat improbably, from award, Sax. toward.]

1. To adjudge; to give any thing by a judicial sentence.

A pound of that faine merchant's flesh is thine;
The court awards it, and the law doth give it. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure

A church which allows falshood to none without it, nor awards damnation to almost any within it. South

It advances that grand business, and according to which their eternity hereafter will be awarded. Ducy of Flory

Satisfaction for every affront cannot be awarded by stated laws. Gellier on Duelling

2. To judge; to determine.

The unwile award to lodge it in the tow'rs,
An offering sacred. Pope

AWARD, n. f. [from the verb.] Judgment; sentence; determination.

Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove
To her, and him, who best deserves her love. Dryden

Affection bribes the judgment, and we cannot expect an equitable award, where the judge is made a party. Glanville

To urge the ice,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' award of providence. Addison

AWARE, adv. [from a, and ware, an old word for caution; it is, however, perhaps an adjective; gespann, Sax.] Vigilant;
in a state of alarm; attentive.

Ere I was aware, I had left myself nothing but the name of a king. Shakspeare

Ere forrow was aware, they made his thoughts bear away something else besides his own forrow. Shakspeare

Temperations of prosperity insinuate themselves; so that we are but little aware of them, and less able to withstand them.

TO AWARE, v. n. To beware; to be cautious.

So warn'd he them aware themselves; and Instant, without dubitat, they took alarm. Par. Lost

AWAY, adv. [apag, Saxon.]

1. Absent.

They could make
Love to your dress, although your face were away. Ben. Jonson's Catiline

It is impossible to know properties that are so annexed to it, that any of them being away, that essence is not there. Locke

2. From any place or person.

I have a pain upon my forehead here —
—Why that's with watching; 'twill away again. Shakspeare's Othello

When the fowls came down upon the carcasses, — Abraham drove them away again. Gen, xv. 11.

Would you youth and beauty stay,
Love hath wings, and will away. Waller

3. Let us go.

Away, old man; give me thy hand; away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter taken;
Give me thy hand. Come on. Shakspeare

4. Begone.

Away, and glides like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field. Shakspeare

I'll to the woods among the happier brutes:
Come, let's away; hark, the fill horn rejoiceth. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolitus

Away, you flatterer!

Nor charge his generous meaning. Rever

5. Out of one's own hands; into the power of something else.

It concerns every man, who will not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, to enquire into these matters. Tillotson

6. It is often used with a verb; as, to drink away an estate; to idle away a manor; that is, to drink or idle till an estate or manor is gone.

He play'd his life away. Pope

7. On the way; on the road: perhaps this is the original import of the following phrase.

Sir Valentine, whether away to fast? Shakspeare

Perhaps the phrase, he cannot away with, may mean he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company.

She never could away with me. — Never, never! she would always say; she could not abide master Shallow.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

If you dare think of deferring our charms,
Away with your sheephooks, and take to your arms. Dryd.
AWE. n. f. [eye, oze, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.
They all be brought up idly, without awe of parents, without precepts of masters, and without fear of offence.

Spenser's State of Ireland.
It fixed upon him who is only to be feared, God; and yet with a filial fear, which at the same time both fears and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without distraction.

What is the proper awe and fear, which is due from man to God?
Rogers.
To AWE. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with reverence, or fear.

If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and to lead him; or his ends, and to persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and to awe him; or those that have interest in him, and to govern him.

Why then was this forbid? why, but to awe?

Why, but to keep you low, and ignorant,

His worshippers? Milton.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,

To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

The rods and axes of princes, and their deputies, may awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodness, justice, and other virtues, will work on more. Atterbury.

AWEAND. n. f. [from awe and band.] A check. Dick.

AWFUL. adj. [from awe and full.]

1. That which strikes with awe, or fills with reverence.

So awful, that with honour thou may'st love

Thy mate; who sees, when thou art seen least wife.

Milton's Paradi. Lost.

I approach thee thus, and gaze

Infatiate; I thus fungle; nor have fear'd

'Thy awful form, more awful thus retir'd,

Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair!

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Worshipful; in authority; invested with dignity. This sense is obsolete.

Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,

Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth

Thrust from the company of awful men.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AWFULLY. adv. [from awful.] In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man, to treat this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. Saunders.

AWFULNESS. n. f. [from awful.]

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

'These objects naturally raise seriousness; and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernatural horrors upon every thing.

Addison.

2. The state of being struck with awe.

An help to prayer, producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God. Taylor.

To AWWARE. v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonic language had anciently awpen, to strike, or some such word, from which awopen, or offensive arms, took their denomination.] To strike; to confound.

Ah! my dear gossip, answered then the ape,

Deeply do your sad words my wits awopen,

Both for because your grief doth great appear,

And eke because myself am touched near. Hubbard's Tale.

AWHILE. adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say;

And if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear awhile. Shakespeare.

Into this wild abyss the wary find

Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile,

Pond'ring his voyage. Milton.

AWK. adj. [a barbarous contraction of the word awkward.]

Odd; out of order.

We have heard as arrant jangling in the pulpits, as the steeples;

and professors ringing as awk as the bells to give notice of the conflagration. L'Estrange.

AWKWARD. adj. [æwəb, Saxon; that is, backward, untoward.]

1. Inelegant; unpolite; untaught; ungentled.

Proud Italy,

Whose manners still our tardy apish nation

Limps after in base awkward imitation. Shakespeare.

Their own language is worthy their care; and they are judged of by their handsome or awkward way of expressing themselves in it. Locke.

An awkward shame, or fear of ill usage, has a share in this conduct. Swift.

2. Unready; unhandy; not dexterous; clumsy.

Slow to refuse, but in performance quick:

So true, that he was awkward at a trick. Dryden.

3. Perverse; untoward.

A kind and constant friend

To all that regularly offend;

But was implacable, and awkward,

To all that interlop'd and hawk'd. Hudibras.

AWKWARDLY. adv. [from awkward.] Clumsily; unready; inelegantly; ungaily.

Dametas nodding from the waste upwards, and sweating

he never knew man go more awkwardly to work. Sidney.

If any pretty creature is void of genius, and would perform her part but awkwardly, I must nevertheless insist upon her working.

Addison.

And when any thing is done awkwardly, the common saying will pass upon them, that it is suitable to their breeding.

Locke.

She still renews the ancient scene;

Forgets the forty years between;

Awardly gay, and oddly merry;

Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry. Prior.

If a man be taught to hold his pen awkwardly, yet writes sufficiently well, it is not worth while to teach him the accurate methods of handling that instrument. Watts.

AWKWARDNESS. n. f. [from awkward.] Inelegance; want of gentility; oddness; unfitness.

One may observe awkwardness in the Italians, which easily discovers their aims not to be natural. Addison.

All his airs of behaviour have a certain awkwardness in them;

but these awkward airs are worn away by degrees in company. Watts.

AWL. n. f. [ale, ale, Sax.] A pointed instrument to bore holes with.

He which was minded to make himself a perpetual servant, should, for a visible token thereof, have also his ear bored through with an awl. Hosier.

You may likewise prick many holes with an awl, about a joint that will lie in the earth. Mortimer.

AWLESS. adj. [from awe, and the negative ly.]

1. Without reverence.

Against whose fury, and th' unmatched force,

The awless lion could not wage the fight. Shakespeare.

He claims the bull with awless insolence,

And having seiz'd his horns, accolls the prince. Dryden.

2. Without the power of causing reverence.

Ah me! I see the ruin of my house;

The tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind:

Insulting tyranny begins to jut

Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakespeare.

AWME, or AUME. n. f. A Dutch measure of capacity for liquids, containing eight fleckans, or twenty verges or vertels;

answering to what in England is called a tierce, or one sixth of a ton of France, or one seventh of an English ton. Arbuth.

AWN. n. f. [arista, Lat.] The beard growing out of the corn or grass. Chambers.

AWNING. n. f. A cover spread over a boat or vessel, to keep off the weather.

Of these boards I made an awning over me. Robin Crusoe.

AWOKE. The preterite from awake.

And the said, the Philistines be up'n thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep. Judges, xvi. 10.

AWORK. adv. [from a and work.] On work; into a state of labour.

So after Pyrrhus' pause,

Arouled vengeance sets him new awork. Shakespeare.

By prescribing the condition, it sets us awork to the performances of it, and that by living well. Hammond.

AWORKING. adj. [from awork.] In the state of working.

Long they thus travell'd, yet never met

Adventure which might them aworking set. Spenser.

AWRY. adv. [from a and wry.]

1. Not in a straight direction; obliquely.

But her sad eyes still fasten'd on the ground,

Are govern'd with goodly modesty;

That suffers not one look to glance awry,

Which may let in a little thought unbound. Spenser.

Like perspectives which rightly gaz'd upon,

Shew nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,

Distinguish form. Shakespeare.

When lo!

A violent cross wind, from either coast,

Blows them transverse; ten thousand leagues awry.

Into the devious air. Milton.

2. Afright; with oblique vision.

You know the king

With jealous eyes has look'd awry

On his son's actions. Denham.

3. Not level; unevenly.

I hap to step avy, where I see no path, and can discern but few steps afore me. Breerwood.

4. Not equally between two points.

Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinna'd avy,
Ere left such rage. Pope.

5. Not in a right state; perversely.

All avy, and which wried it to the most vry course of all, wit abused, rather to feign reason why it should be amis, than how it should be amended. Sidney.

Much of the foul they talk, but all avy,
And in themselves seek virtue, and to themselves
All glory arrogate, to God give none. Milton.

AXE. n. f. [ax, acy, Sax. axia, Lat.] An instrument consisting of a metal head, with a sharp edge, fixed in a helve or handle, to cut with.

No metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakespeare.

There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No founding axe preium'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight. Dryden.

AXILLARY. n. f. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit. Quincy.

AXILLARY. adj. [from axilla, Lat.] Belonging to the arm-pit.

In the same manner is the axillary artery distributed unto the hand; below the cubit, it divideth unto two parts.

AXIOM. n. f. [axioma, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιόω.] A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plain-er by demonstration.

Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser. Hooker.

2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.

The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral. Hooker.

Their affirmations are unto us no axioms; we esteem thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing.

AXIS. n. f. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.

But since they say our earth, from morn to morn,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;

That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.

It might annually have compass'd the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley.

On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;

So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope's Essay on Man.

A'LE. n. f. [axis, Lat.] The pin which passes through the middle of the wheel, on which the circum-solutions of the wheel are performed.

Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axe-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecians ears
To his experience's tongue. Shakespeare.

The fly fate upon the axe-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said what a dult do I raise? Bacon.

And the gilded can of day,
His glowing axe dath allay
In the sleep Atlantick stream. Milton.

He saw a greater sun appear,
Than his bright throne or burning axe-tree could bear. Milton's Christ's Nativity.

AY. adv. [perhaps from ais, Lat.]

1. Yes; an advers of answering affirmatively.

Return you thither? —
— ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.

What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our ay?
Say ay; and be the captain of us all. Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even; yet, certainly; and more than that.

Remember it, and let it make thee crest fall'n;
ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakespeare.

AYE. adv. [aya, Saxon.] Always; to eternity; forever.

And now in darksome dungeon, wretched thrall,
Remedyless for aye he doth him hold. Fairy Queen.

Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerly and single life. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

The soul, though made in time, survives for aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sees no end. Sir John Davies.

And hears the mules, in a ring,
Aye round about Jove's altars sing. Milton.

Th' altomish'd mariners aye ply the pump;
No stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd. Philips.

A'YGREEN. n. f. The fume with hazyl; which see. Dict.

A'YRY. n. f. [See AIRY.]

I should discourse on the brancher, the haggard, and then treat of their several ayries. Walter's Angler.

A'ZIMUTH. n. f. [Arab.]

1. The azimuth of the sun, or of a star, is an arch between the meridian of the place, and any given vertical line.

2. Magnetical azimuth, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun's azimuth circle and the magnetical meridian; or it is the apparent distance of the sun from the north or south point of the compass.

3. Azimuth Compass, is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetical azimuth.

4. Azimuth Dial, is a dial whose style or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.

5. Azimuths, called also vertical circles, are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles, in all the points thereof. Chambers.

AZURE. adj. [azar, Fr. azur, Span. azur, Arab. from lazz, a blue stone.] Blue; faint blue.

The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substance; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

B, The second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters, and is considered by the Germans with P, and by the Galkons with V; from which an epigrammatic remark, that bibere and vivere are in Galkony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use B or V indifferently.

- BAA, n. f. [See the verb.] The cry of a sheep.
To BAA, v. n. [bala, Lat.] To cry like a sheep.
 Or like a lamb, whose dam away is set,
 He treble baas, for help, but none can get.
To BABBLE, v. n. [babbler, Germ. babblen, Fr.]
 1. To prattle like a child; to prate imperfectly.
 My babbling praises I repeat no more,
 But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore.
 2. To talk idly, or irrationally.
 John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; these he used to babble indifferently in all companies.
 Let the silent sanctuary show,
 What from the babbling schools we may not know.
 3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.
 There is more danger in a reserved and silent friend, than in a noisy babbling enemy.
 4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
 Replying thrilly to the well tun'd horns,
 As if a double hunt were heard at once,
 And had I pow'r to give that knowledge birth,
 In all the speeches of the babbling earth.
 The babbling echo had decry'd his face;
 She, who in others words her silence breaks.
BABBLE, n. f. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; senseless prattle.
 This babble shall not henceforth trouble me;
 Here is a coil with profection!

Come, no more,
 This is mere moral babble.
 With volleys of eternal babble,
 And clamour more unanswerable.
 The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in disputes.

BABBLEMENT, n. f. [from babble.] Senseless prate.
 Deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements, while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge.
BABBLER, n. f. [from babble.] Idle talker; an irrational prattler.

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.
 We hold our time too precious to be spent
 With such a babbler.
 Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for trust.
 The apottle of my text had no sooner propoed it to the greater masters at Athens, but he himself was ridiculed as a babbler.

2. A teller of secrets.
 Utters of secrets he from thence debar'd;
 Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime.
BABE, n. f. [babens, Welch; babbard, Dutch.] An infant; a child of either sex.

Those that do teach your babes,
 Do it with gentle means, and easy talks;
 He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
 I am a child to chiding.

Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
 Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe.
 The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
 And early knew his mother in her smiles.

BABERY, n. f. [from babe.] Finery to please a babe or child.
 So have I seen trim books in velvet dight,
 With golden leaves and painted babery
 Of feely boys, please anaquainted sight.

BABISH, adj. [from babe.] Childish.
 If he be bathful, and will soon blush, they call him a babish and ill brought up thing.

BABOON, n. f. [baboon, Fr.] It is supposed by Skinner to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe. A monkey of the largest kind.

You had looked through the grate like a geminy of baboons.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a baboon.

BABBY, n. f. [See BABE.]
 1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
 Goes all decorum.
 The child must have fugar plums, rather than make the poor baby cry.

He must marry, and propagate: the father cannot stay for the portion, nor the mother for babies to play with.

2. A small image in imitation of a child, which girls play with.
 The archduke saw that Perkin would prove a runagate;
 and that it was the part of children to fall out about babies.

Bacon's Henry VIII.
 Since no image can represent the great Creator, never think to honour him by your foolish puppets, and babies of dirt and clay.

BACCATED, adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Bcfet with pearls; having many berries.

BACCHANALIAN, n. f. [from bacchanalis, Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard.

BACCCHANALS, n. f. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Has, my brave emperor, shall we dance now the Egyptian and celebrate our drink?

What wild fury was there in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not seen equalled?

Both extremes were banish'd from their walls,
 Carthufian falls, and fullonic bacchanals.

BACCCHUS ROSE, n. f. A flower not tall, but very full and broad-leaved; of a fad light purple, and a proper whet; having the three outmost leaves edged with a crimson colour, bluish bottom, and dark purple.

BACCI'FEROUS, adj. [from bacca, a berry, and fero, to bear,
 Lat.] Berry-bearing.

Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such as bear a calculate or naked berry; the flower and cal-ix both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare; as the salsifras trees.

2. Such as have a naked monospermous fruit, that is, containing in it only one feed; as the arbutus.

3. Such as have but poly-spermous fruit, that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it; as the jafminum, ligustrum.

4. Such as have their fruit compoed of many acini, or roundist balls fte clofe together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva ma- rina.

BACCI'VOROUS, adj. [from bacca, a berry, and voro, to devour, Lat.] Devouring berries.

BACHELOR, n. f. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology, it not being well known what was its original fenfe. Juvans derives it from baccus, foolish; Menage, from bacchevalier, a knight of the loweft rank; Spelman, from baculus, a staff; Ca- jay, from baccella, an allowance of provifion. The moft probable derivation fems to be from bacca leuvis, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. In Latin, baccinaureus.]

1. A man unmarried.
 Such feparation
 Becomes a virtuous bachelor and maid.

The haunting of thofe difolute places, or resort to coun-teans, are no more punished in married men than in bachelors.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty which be-belongs to the bachelor's elate.

Let finful bachelors their woes deplore,
 Full well they merit all they feel, and more.

2. A man who takes his firft degrees at the univerfity in any pro-feffion.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to fpeak againft the pope.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scrible-rus, bachelor of phyfic.

3. A knight of the loweft order. This is a fenfe now little ufed.

BACHELORS BUTTER, [See CAMPION, of which it is a fpecies.]

All the forts of this plant are hardy; they grow about two feet, and produce their flower in June and July.

BACHELORSHIP, n. f. [from bachelor.] The condition of a bachelor.

Her mother, living yet, can teftify,
 She was the firft fruit of my bachelorship.

BACK, n. f. [bac, bree; Sax. bach, Germ.]

1. The hinder part of the body, from the neck to the thighs.

As the voice goeth round, as well towards the back as towards the front of him that fpeaketh, fo likewise doth the echo:
 for you have many back echos to the place where you ftand.

Part following enter, part remain without,
 With envy hear their fellows conqu'ring ftow;

And mount on others backs, in hopes to fhare.

2. The outer part of the hand when it is ftut; oppoed to the palm.

Methought love pitying ire, when he faw this,
 Gave me your hands, the backs and palms to kifs.

3. The outward part of the body; that which requires clothes; opposed to the belly.

1. A wife who, by their ancestors, have been set free from a constant drudgery to their backs and their bellies, should bestow some time on their heads. Lucie.

4. The rear; opposed to the wen.

He might conclude, that Walter would be upon the king's back, as his majesty was upon his. Clarendon.

5. The place behind.

Antheus, Sergeffus grave, Cleanthus strong,
And at their backs a mighty Trojan throng. Dryden.

6. The part of any thing out of sight.

Trees set upon the backs of chimneys do ripen fruit sooner. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

7. The thick part of any tool, opposed to the edge; as the back of a knife or sword; whence backsword, or sword with a back; as,

Ball dreaded not old Lewis either at backsword, single fault-chion, or cudgel-play. Aschmole.

8. To turn the back on one, is to forsake him, or neglect him.

At the hour of death, all the friendships of the world shall bid him adieu, and the whole creation turn its back upon him. South.

9. To turn the back, is to go away; to be not within the reach of taking cognizance.

His back was no sooner turned, but they returned to their former rebellion. Sir J. Davies.

BACK, adv. [from the noun.]

1. To the place from which one came.

Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me. Shakespeare.

He sent many to seek the ship Argo, threatening that if they brought not back Medea, they should suffer in her stead.

But where they are, and why they came not back,
Is now the labour of my thoughts. Milton.

Back to thy native island might'st thou fail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

2. Backward; from the present station.

I've been surpris'd in an unguarded hour,
But must not now go back; the love that lay
Half smother'd in my breast, has broke through all In weak restraints. Addison.

3. Behind; not coming forward.

I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but lo the Lord hath kept thee back from honour. Numb. xxiv. 11.

things, and to view in my mind the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet.

5. Again; in return.

The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs, and their dispatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

6. Again; a second time.

This Caesar found, and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage. Waller.

The epistles being written from ladies forsaken by their lovers, many thoughts came back upon us in divers letters. Dryden.

7. BACK, v. a. [from the noun back.]

1. To mount on the back of a horse.

That roan shall be my throne.
Well I will back him strait. O Esperance!
Did Butler lend him forth into the park. Shakespeare.

2. To break a horse; to train him to bear upon his back.

Direct us how to back the winged horrie;
Favour his flight, and moderate his courie. Reformers.

3. To place upon the back.

As I slept, methought.
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back'd, Appear'd to me. Shakespeare.

4. To maintain; to strengthen.

Belike, he means,
Back'd by the pow'r of Warwick, that false peer,
Th' aspice unto the crown. Shakespeare.

You are strait enough in the shoulders, you care not who knew your back; call you that backing of your friends? a plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Shakespeare.

These were seconded by certain demulcences, and both backed with men at arms. Sir J. Hayward.

Did they not swear, in express words,
To prop and back the house of lords?
And after turn'd out the whole houseful. Hudibras.

A great malice, backed with a great interest, can have no advantage of a man, but from his expectations of something without himself. South.

How shall we treat this bold aspiring man?
Success still follows him, and back his crimes, Addison.

5. To justify; to support.

The patrons of the ternary number of principles, and those that would have five elements, endeavour to back their experiments with a specious reason. Boyle.

We have I know not how many adages to back the reason of this moral. L'Estrange.

6. To second.

Factions, and favouring this or t'other side,
Their wagers back their wiles. Dryden.

7. BACKBITE, v. a. [from back and bite.] To censure or reproach the absent.

Most untruly and maliciously do these evil tongues backbite and slander the sacred ashes of that most just and honourable personage. Shakespeare.

I will use him well; a friend i' th' court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy, for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite. Shakespeare.

BACKBITER, n. f. [from backbite.] A privy calumniator; a censurer of the absent.

No body is bound to look upon his backbiter, or his under-miner, his betrayer, or his oppressor, as his friend. South.

convenient to make backrooms the larger. Max. Adm. Exerc.

BACKSIDE, n. f. [from back and side.]

1. The hinder part of any thing.

If the quicksilver were rubbed from the backside of the specu-lum, the glass would cause the same rings of colours, but more faint; the phenomena depends not upon the quicksilver, unless so far as it encreases the reflection of the backside of the glass. Newton.

2. The hind part of an animal.

A poor ant carries a grain of corn, climbing up a wall with her head downwards and her backside upwards. Addison.

3. The yard or ground behind a house.

The wath of pastures, fields, commons, roads, streets, or backside, are of great advantage to all sorts of land. Mortimer.

7. BACKSLIDE, v. n. [from back and slide.] To fall off; to apostatize: a word only used by divines.

Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? She

BA'CKWARDLY. adv. [from backward.]

1. Unwillingly; averely; with the back forward.

.. Like Numid lions by the hunters chas'd,
Though they do fly, yet backwardly do go
With proud aspect, disdain'd greater haile. Sidney.

2. Perversely.

.. I was the first man
That e'er receiv'd gift from him;
And does he think to backwardly of me,
That I'll requite it last? Shakespeare.

BA'CKWARDNESS. n. f. [from backward.] Dulness; unwilling-ness; sluggishness.

.. The thing by which we are apt to excuse our backwardness to good works, is the ill success that hath been observed to attend well designed charities. Atterbury.

BA'CON. n. f. [probably from bacon, that is, dried flesh.]

1. The flesh of a hog salted and dried.

.. High o'er the hearth a chine of bacon hung,
Good old Philémon seiz'd it with a prong,
Then cut a slice. Dryden.

2. To fave the bacon, is a phrase for preserving one's self from being unhurt; borrowed from the care of housewives in the country, where they have seldom any other provision in the house than dried bacon; to secure it from the marching soldiers.

.. What frightens you thus? my good son! says the priest;
You murder'd, are sorry, and have been confest.

O father! my sorrow will scarce save my bacon;

For 'twas not that I murder'd, but that I was taken. Prior.

BACULOF'G'RY. n. f. [from baculus, Lat. and grayer.] The art of measuring distances by one or more faves.

BAD. adj. [good, Dutch; compar. worse; superl. worst.]

1. Ill; not good: a general word used in regard to physical or moral faults, either of men or things.

He bad me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawder. Shakespeare.

BADGER. n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology; derived by Junius from bade or bad, a messenger; and supposed to be corrupted from badger, the credential of a messenger: but taken by Stinner and Mishaw from baghe, Dut. a jewel, or baghe, a ring, Fr.]

1. A mark or cognizance worn to shew the relation of the wearer to any person or thing.

.. But on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear resemblance of his dying lord;

For whose sweet fake that glorious badger he wore. Spenser.

.. The outward splendour of his office, is the badger and token of that glorious and sacred character which he inwardly bears.
Atterbury's Sermon.

2. A token by which one is known.

.. A savage tygres on her helmet lies;
The famous badger Clarinda us'd to bear. Paisley.

3. The mark of any thing.

.. There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not then itself modest enough, without a badger of bitterness. Shakespeare.

.. Sweet mercy is nobility's true badger.
Let him not bear the badger of a wreck,
Nor beg with a blue table on his back. Dryden.

TO BADGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark as with a badger.

.. Your royal father's murder'd. —
— Oh, by whom? —
Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had don't;
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers. Shakespeare.

BADGER. n. f. [bodur, Fr.] An animal that earths in the ground, used to be hunted.

.. That a brock, or badger, hath legs of one side shorter than the other, is very generally received not only by theorists and unexperienced believers, but most who behold them daily.
Brewer's Vulgar Errors.

BA'DGER LEGGED. adj. [from badger and legged.] Having legs of an unequal length, as the badger is supposed to have.

.. His body crooked all over, big-bellied, badger legged, and his complexion swarthy. L'Estrange.

BA'DGER. n. f. [perhaps from the Latin bagulus, a carrier; but, by Juvius, derived from the badger, a creature who flows up his provision.] One that buys corn and victuals in one place, and carries it unto another.

BA'DLY. adv. [from bad.] In a bad manner; not well.

.. How goes the day with us? Oh tell me, Hubert. —
.. Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty? Shakespeare.

BA'DNESS. n. f. [from bad.] Want of good qualities, either natural or moral.

.. It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a work by a reprovable badness in himself. Shakespeare.

.. There is one convenience in this city, which makes some amends for the badness of the pavement. Addison on Italy.

.. I did not see how the badness of the weather could be the king's fault. Addison.

TO BA'FFLE. v. a. [beffery, Fr.]

1. To elude.

.. They made a shift to think themselves guiltless, in spite of all their sins; to break the precept, and at the same time to baffle the curse. South.

.. He hath deserved to have the grace withdrawn, which he hath so long baffled and defied. Atterbury.

2. To confound; to delect with some confusion, as by perplexing or amusing; to baffle is sometimes less than to conquer.

Etruria

Eturia lost.

He brings to Taurus' aid his bagged host. Dryden.
When the mind has brought itself to close thinking, it may go on roundly. Every abstruse problem, every intricate question will not baggle, discourage, or break it. Lake.

To crush; to bring to nothing.
3. A foreign potentate trembles at a war with the English nation, ready to employ against him such revenues as shall baggle his disgust upon their country. Addison.

BAGGLE, n. f. [from the verb.] A defeat.
It is the skill of the disputant that keeps off a baggle. South.
The authors having missed of their aims, are fain to retreat with frustration and a baggle. South.

BAGGELER, n. f. [from baggle.] He that puts to confusion, or defeats.

Experience, that great bagger of speculation, assures us the thing is too possible, and brings, in all ages, matter of fact to confute our suppositions. Government of the Tongue.

BAG, n. f. [belge, Sax. from whence perhaps by drooping, as is usual, the harsh consonant, came bege, bage, bag.]
1. A sack, or pouch, to put any thing in, as money, corn.

Cousin, away for England; balle before,
And, ere our coming, lee thro' shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their impud'nt angels
See thou at liberty. Shakespeare.

What is it that opens thy mouth in praises? Is it that thy bags and thy barns are full?
Those waters were inclosed within the earth as in a bag.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke. Pope.

2. That part of animals in which some particular juices are contained, as the poison of vipers.

The swelling poison of the several fests,
Which, wanting vent, the nation's health infects,
Shall burst its bag. Dryden.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd;
So may thy cows their burden'd bags dislend. Dryden.

3. An ornamental purse of silk tied to men's hair.

We saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob wig and black silken bag tied to it. Addison.

4. A term used to signify different quantities of certain commodities; as a bag of pepper; a bag of hops.

BAG, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put into a bag.

Accordingly he drain'd those marshy grounds,
And bagg'd them in a blue cloud. Dryden.
Hops ought not to be bagged up hot. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Like a bee bagg'd with his honey'd venom,
He brings it to your hive. Dryden's Dem Sebastian.

BAG, v. n. To swell like a full bag.

The skin seemed much contracted, yet it bagged, and had a pointring full of matter in it. Wiceman's Surgery.

Two kids that in the valley stray'd,
I found by chance, and to my fold convey'd:
They drain two bagging udders every day. Dryden's Virgil.

BAGATELLE, n. f. [bagatelle, Fr.] A trifle; a thing of no importance.

Heaps of hair rings and cypher'd seals;
Rich trifles, serious bagatelles. Prior.

BAGGAGE, n. f. [from bag; baggage, Fr.]

1. The furniture and utensils of an army.

The army was an hundred and seventy thousand footmen, and twelve thousand horsemen, beside the baggage. Judith.

Riches are the baggage of virtue; they cannot be spared, nor left behind, but they hinder the march. Bacon.

They were probably always in readiness, and carried among the baggage of the army. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

2. The goods that are to be carried away, as bag and baggage.

Delabella designed, when his affairs grew desperate in Egypt, to pack up bag and baggage, and sail for Italy. Aruthon on Coins.

3. A worthless woman; in French bagasse; so called, because such women follow camps.

A spark of indignation did rise in her, not to suffer such a bagasse to win away any thing of hers. Sidney.

When this bagasse meets with a man who has vanity to credit relations, she turns him to account. Spectator.

BAGNO, n. f. [bagno, Ital. a bath.] A house for bathing, sweating, and otherwise cleansing the body.

I have known two instances of malignant fevers produced by the hot air of a bagno. Arbutnot on Air.

BAGPIPE, n. f. [from bag and pipe; the wind being received in a bag.] A musical instrument, consisting of a leathern bag, which blows up like a foot-ball, by means of a port vent or little tube fixed to it, and stopped by a valve; and three pipes or flutes, the first called the great pipe or drone, and the second the little one; which pass the wind out only at the bottom;
the third has a reed, and is played on by compressing the bag under the arm, when full; and opening or stopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. The bagpipe takes in the cornals of three o'claves. Chambers.

No banners but shirts; with some bad bagpipes instead of drum and fife. Sidney.

He heard a bagpipe, and saw a general animated with the found. Addison, Frecholder.

BAGPIPER, n. f. [from bagpipe.] One that plays on a bagpipe.

Some that will evermore peep thro' their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bagpiper. Shak. M. of Venice.

BAGUETTE, n. f. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.

TO BAIGNE, v. a. [baigner, Fr.] To drench; to soak: a word out of use.

The women forswore not to baigner them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Cervus's Survey of Cornwall.

BAIL, n. f. [of this word the etymologists give many derivations;
it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand;
to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]

Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken:
whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or apparent speciality, special bail or surety must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprize; for he that is mainprized, is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will. Cassell.

Worry'd with debts, and paid all hopes of bail,
Th' unquy'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Reformem.

And bribe with presents, or when presents fail,
They fend their prostituted wives for bail. Dryden.

TO BAIL, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail—
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion—
I'hou shalt not bail them. Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the Tower, the house of commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately again to be recommitted to the Tower.

BAILABLE, adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties. Clarendon.

BAILIFF, n. f. [a word of doubtful etymology in itself, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, and governed by a baillif sent them every three years from the senate of Berne.

Addison on Italy:

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrears.

It many times happeneth, that, by the under-sheriffs and their bailliffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. Bacon.

A bailliff, by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. Swift.

Swift as a hard the bailliff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under steward of a manor.

BAILLIWICK, n. f. [of baillie, Fr. and wic, Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of a baillif within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. It is that liberty which is exempted from the sherrif of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a baillif. Cassell.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailliwick.
Spenser on Ireland.

There issued writs to the sheriffs, to return the names of the several land owners in their several bailliwicks.

Hale's Origin of Maritime.

TO BAIT, v. a. [batran, Sax. baizen, Germ.]

1. To put meat upon a hook, in some place, to tempt fish or other animals.

Oh, cunning enemy, that to catch a faine,
With saints dost bait thy hook! most dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a false baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine host of the garter. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Many fogs of fishes feed upon insects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the sex improv'd in am'rous arts!
What new-found snares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's self, or horses, on the road.

What for strong,
But wanting rest, will also want of might?
The sun, that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his steeds the ocean waves among. F. & G.

TO BAIT, v. a. [from battere, Fr. to beat.] To attack with violence; to set dogs upon.

Who seeming lovely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did vain them to withstand. Fairy Queen.

I will not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet;
And so be baited with the rabble's curse. Shak. Macbeth.

TO BAIT, v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment; perhaps this word is more properly bate ; to take speed.

But our desires, tyrannical extortion
Doth force us there to let our chief delightfulness, Sidney.
Where but a baiting place is all our portion.

Tho' bent on speed : so here th' archangel paus'd. Par. Lost.
In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addison, Spectator.

TO BAIT, v. n. [as an bait.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like effridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold, Thinks true love acted simple modestly. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keepers call;
That is, to watch her as we watch their kites,
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

BAIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanics, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.
A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden'd balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir John Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weighed,
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer;
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shaksp. Henry IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.
Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Adv. to Sir G. Villiers.

Carrer's Survey of Cornwall.
BALL. n. f. [bal, Dan. bol, Dut.]
Bel, diminutively Bolin, the sun, or Apollo of the Celts, was called by the ancient Gauls Bellos. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bil, or Bel, and likewise Bil and Bilil. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Belle. Pálos is the head or poll, and pelav, is to turn. Bálos likewise signifies a round ball, whence brud, and bel, and ball, which the Welch term bél. By the Scotch also the head is named bél; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thurians, by βαλλων understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βαλλ, βαλ, and likewise βαλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, HA and HA, whence lao, and HA, Fálos, and Balos, and also in the Celtick diminutive way of expressions, Ελαρος, Ελινος, and Βίλος, signified the sun; and Ελινος, Ελινος, and Βίλος, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, bal and bell have the same meaning; whence the adjective balig, or bellig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into f, the Romans form their bal. Baxter.
1. Any thing made in a round form.
The worms with many feet, which round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber. Bacon.
Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,
But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead. Dryden.
Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed. Hewell.
Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling war shines,
That through the chrysal darts. Addison.
Such of those corpuses as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find. Woodward.
2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.
Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain. Sidney.
Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.
3. A

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.
For ev'ry number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest, all white, are safe.
Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rows;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.

Dryden.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.

Julius and Antony, those lords of all,
Low at her feet present the conquer'd ball.
Ye gods, what justice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall.

Dryden.

Graville.

Pope.

5. A globe borne as an ensign of sovereignty.
Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom; but, by fortune, is made himself a ball, toiled from misery to misery, and from place to place.

Bacon's Henry VII.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; as the lower and swelling part of the thumb, the apple of the eye.

Be subject to no fight but mine; invisible
To every eye ball eie.

- BALL. n. f. [bal, Fr. from ballare, low Lat. from ballāre, to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of some particular person.

If golden sconces hang not on the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls,
He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can allure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man.

Dryden.

Swift.

- BA'LLAD. n. f. [ballade, Fr.] A song.

Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse.

Watts.

An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison.

Shakespeare.

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay

Gay.

- To BA'LLAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.

Saucy liçors
Will catch at us like fire trumpets, and scall'd rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune.

Shakespeare.

- BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. f. [from ballad and sing.] One whole employment is to sing ballads in the streets.

No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet and loud.

Gay.

- BA'LLAST. n. f. [ballast, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ship to keep it steady to the center of gravity.

There must be some middle counsellors to keep things steady; for, without that ballast, the ship will roll too much.

Bacon's Essays.

As for the ascent of it, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast; which, by some cord within, may be loosened from it.

Wilkins.

As when empty barks or billows float,
With fandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poising weight
Steers through the whistling winds their steady flight.

Dryden.

2. That which is used to make any thing steady.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less.

Swift.

- To BA'LLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.

If this ark be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. To keep any thing steady.

Whilst thus to ballast love, I thought,
And so more steadily t' have gone,
I saw, I had love's pinnace overfraught.

Dennis.

- BALM. } n. f. [melissa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

- BALM MINT. } n. f. [melissa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It is a verticillate plant, with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is roundish, upright, and divided into two; but the under lip, into three parts: out of the flower-cup rises the point, attended, as it were, with four embryos; these afterwards turn to so many feds, which are roundish, and included in the flower-cup: to these notes may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves, but are not whorled round the stalks. The species are, 1. Garden balm.

2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves. The first of these sorts is cultivated in gardens for medicinal and culinary use: it is propagated by parting the roots either in spring or autumn.

When they are first planted, if the season proves dry, you must carefully water them until they have taken root.

Müller.

- BALM OF GILEAD.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incisions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green; but when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants, is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine.

Calent.

It seems most likely to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our English bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases.

Prideaux's Conjectures.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamic scent, which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant.

Müller.

implies it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day.

Gibson.

BANIAN, n. f. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has feveral shoots, much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. They are fast by some, but by mistake, to contain sugar; the hom-ing being much larger than the sugar-cane. The leaves grow out of each knot, and are prickly. They are four or five inches long, and an inch in breadth, somewhat pointed, and ribbed through the whole length with green and sharp fibres. Its shoots grow in ears, like those of wheat.

BANNOCK, z. l. v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writing.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.

What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers. Ben. Jonson's Discovery.

2. [from bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees.

BARKY, adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.

Ivy so enrings the barky fingers of the elm.

Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

BARLEY, n. f. [derived by Jussieu from Bar.]
It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are,

1. Common long eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called bar. 3. Sprat barley, or bottle-necked barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time.

In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley or bar, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is harder than the other sorts. Where barley is sown upon new broken up land, the usual method is to plough up the land in March, and let it lie fallow until June; at which time it is ploughed again, and sown with turneps, which are eaten by the sheep in winter, by whose dung the land is greatly improved; and then, in March following, the ground is ploughed again, and sown with barley. Aitken.

Barley is ennuellent, moistening, and expellicating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as proper food in inflammatory distempers. Arctian on Aliment.

BARLEYBRAKE, n. f. A kind of rural play.

By neighbours prau'd she went almost thereby,
At barleybrake betwixt sweet test to try. Sidney.

BARLEY BROT, n. f. [from barley and broth.] A low word, sometimes used for strong beer.

Can fadden water,
A drench for furreyn'd jades, their barley brath,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shakspeare.

BARLEY CORN, n. f. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beginning of our measure of leigh; the third part of an inch.

A long, long journey, cloak'd with breaks and thorns,
Ill measur'd by ten thousand barley corns. Tickell.

BARLEY MOW, n. f. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.

Whenever by you barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lads. Gey.

BARM, n. f. [barm, Welch; bearm, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work, and into bread, to lighten and swell it.

Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink bare no barm, Mistaken light wand'ers, laughing at their harm? Shakspeare.

You may try the force of imagination, upon playing the working of beer when the barm is put into it. Bacon's Natural History.

BARMY, adj. [from barm.] Containing barm.

Their jovial nights in trolicks and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goldsters cheer,
Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden.

BARN, n. f. [barn, Sax.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw, &c.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Not barn at home, nor recks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.

I took notice of the make of several farms here: after having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners of it, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Audjain on Italy.

BARNACLE, n. f. [probably of bearn, Sax a child, and aac, Sax. an oak]

1. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees. Surely it is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about larnacles; or perhaps might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley's Sermons.

As from the most refined of saints,
As naturally grow mikreants,
As larnacles turn solan geese
In th' islands of the Oracles. Hudibras.

2. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when any incision is made. Farrier's Dict.

BAROMETER. n. f. [from βαρ, weight, and μετρον, measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643; which is a glass tube filled with mercury, horizontally sealed at one end; the other open and immersed in a basin of flagrant mercury; so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and, as it increases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube, being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere. Many attempts have been made to render the changes in the barometer more sensible, in order to measure the atmosphere more accurately; and hence arose a great number of barometers, of different structures. Dr. Halley observes, in the Philosophical Transactions, that in calm weather, when the air is inclined to rain, the mercury is commonly low; in serene good settled weather, high. On great winds, though unaccompanied with rain, the mercury is lowest of all, with regard to the point of the compass the wind blows on. The greatest heights of the mercury are on easterly and north-easterly winds, ceteris paribus. After great storms of wind, when the mercury has been low, it rises again very fast. In calm frosty weather, it stands high. The more northerly places find greater alterations than the more southern; and within the tropics, and near them, there is little or no variation of the height of the mercury. The rising of the mercury forebodes fair weather after foul, and an easterly or north-easterly wind; its falling pretends foully or westerly winds, or both. In a storm, the mercury beginning to rise, is a pretty sure sign that it begins to abate. But there are frequently great changes in the air, without any perceptible alteration in the barometer. The alterations of the weight of the air, are generally allowed to be the cause of those in the barometer; but philosophers cannot easily determine whence those alterations rise in the atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby increased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Again, the air is condensed or expanded, in proportion to the weight or force that presses it. Hence it is, that the higher from the sea, in the midland countries, the mercury descends the lower; because the air becomes more rarified and lighter, and it falls lowest upon the tops of the highest mountains. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one tenth, which are its utmost limits; so that the exact specific gravity of the air cannot be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Ambroise on Air.

BAROMETRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical inferences. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BARON. n. f. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warrior, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Ménage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it originally to signify only a man; in which sense baron, or baronia, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and seigneur, husband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from the Hebrew בַּר, of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par baronne, or peer, which seems least probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viscount. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such dignities as we now call court barons. And it is said, that, after the conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come, but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran habeas tuum. After that, men, seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male; and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation; whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles; the barons by writing being those, that to the title of lord have their own surnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent, are named by their baronies. These barons which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons, in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.

2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice, belonging to the exchequer.
3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Romney, Hoth, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament. Cic. d.

They that bear

The cloth of state above, are four barons

Of the cinque ports, Shakspeare.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife. Co. d.
5. A baron of beef is when the two sirloins are not cut asunder, but joined together by the end of the back one. Ditt.

BARONAGE. n. f. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.
- His charters of the liberties of England, and of the forest, were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Staines, A. D. 1215. Hob.

2. The land which gives title to a baron.

BARONESS. n. f. [baronessa, Ital. baronessa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BARONET. n. f. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary; it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedence of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Coxe. But it appears by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense.

King Edward III. being bearded and crossed by the clergy, they being too strong for him, so as he could not order and reform things, was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name. Speile.

BARONY. n. f. [baronia, Fr. barony, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the first of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Ciculi.

BAROSCOPE. n. f. [βαρος and σκοπεω.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Ambroise.

BARBACAN. n. f. [barbacan, or barbacan, Fr.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

BARRACK. n. f. [baracca, Span.]

1. Little cabins made by the Spanish fishermen on the sea shores; or little lodges for soldiers in a camp.

2. It is generally taken among us for buildings to lodge soldiers.

BARRATOR. n. f. [from bar, old Fr. from which is still retained barater, a cheat.] A wrangler, and encourager of law suits.

Will it not reflect as much on thy character, Nic, to turn barrator in thy old days, a flatterer up of quarrels amongst thy neighbours? Ambroise's History of J. B.

BARBATORY. n. f. [from barrator.] The practice or crime of a barrator; foul practice in law.

'Tisarrant barbatory, that bears

Point blank an action 'gainst our laws. Hudibras.

BARREL. n. f. [baril, Welch.]

1. A round wooden vessel to be stopp'd close.

It hath been observed by one of the ancients, that an empty barrel knocked upon with the finger, giveth a diapason to the sound of the like barrel full. Bacon.

Trembling to approach

The little barrel, which he fears to broach. Dryden.

2. A particular measure in liquids. A barrel of wine is thirty one gallons and a half; of ale, thirty two gallons; of beer, thirty six gallons, and of beer vinegar, thirty four gallons.

3. In dry measure. A barrel of Exeter butter contains one hundred and and six pounds; of Suffolk butter, two hundred and fifty six: A barrel of herrings should contain thirty-two gallons wine measure, holding usually a thousand herrings.

Several colleges, instead of limiting their rents to a certain sum, prevailed with their tenants to pay the price of so many barrels of corn, as the market went.

4. Any thing hollow; as, the barrel of a gun; that part which holds the shot.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, set it upright with the breech upon the ground, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel ever so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will wound the striking out your teeth.

5. A cylinder; frequently that cylinder about which any thing is wound.

Your firing and bow must be accommodated to your drill; if too weak, it will not carry about the barrel.

Alexan's Mechanical Exercises.

6. Barrel of the ear, is a cavity behind the tympanum, covered with a fine membrane.

Dict.

7. BARREL, v. a. [from the noun.] To put any thing in a barrel for preservation.

I would have their beef beforehand barrelled, which may be used as is needed.

Spenser on Ireland.

Barrel up earth, and sow some seed in it, and put in the bottom of a pond.

Bacon.

8. BARREL-BELLIED, adj. [from barrel and belly.] Having a large belly.

Dauntless at empty nois; a lofty neck'd, Sharp headed, barrel-bellied, broadly back'd.

Dryden.

BARREN, adj. [bare, Sax. naked; properly applied to trees at ground unfruitful.]

1. Without the quality of producing its kind; not prolific; applied to animals.

They hail'd him father to a line of kings, Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown, And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,

Shakespeare.

No son of mine succeeding.

There shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle.

Deuter. vii. 14.

2. Unfruitful; not fertile; sterile.

The situation of this city is pleasant, but the water is naught, and the ground barren.

2 Kings.

Telemachus is far from exalting the nature of his country; he confesses it to be barren.

Pope.

From his far excursion thro' the wilds Of barren ether, faithful to his time, They feel the blazing wonder rise anew.

Thomson.

3. Not copious, scanty.

Some schemes will appear barren of hints and matter, but prove to be fruitful.

Swift.

4. Concerning; uninvective; dull.

There be of them that will make themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too.

Shakespeare.

BARRENLY, adv. [from barren.] Unfruitfully.

BARRENNESS, n. f. [from barren.] Want of procreation.

1. Want of offspring; want of the power of procreation.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness In wellock a reproach.

Milton.

No more be mention'd then of violence Against ourselves, and mutual barrenness,

Milton.

2. Unfruitfulness; sterility; infertility.

Within the self same hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value, through the diversity of their fertility or barrenness.

Bacon on Attentions.

3. Want of invention; want of the power of producing any thing new.

The adventures of Ulysses are imitated in the Æneis; tho' accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a total barrenness of invention.

Dryden.

4. Want of matter.

The impotency of our adventures hath constrained us longer to dwell than the barrenness of so poor a cause could have seem'd either to require or to admit.

Hester.

5. In theology; aridity; want of emotion or sensibility.

The great faints sometimes are fervent, and sometimes feel a barrenness of devotion.

Taylor.

BARREN WORT, n. f. [Spicardum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The stalks are divided into three branches, each sustaining three leaves, shaped like ivy; the calyx consists of four leaves; the flower, of four petals, hollow, and expanded in form of a cross, the point of the flower becomes a pod with one cell, having two valves, in which are contained round flat seeds.

Miller.

BARRELL, adj. [from bar and fall.] Full of obstructions.

A barrell strike!

Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife.

Shakespeare.

BARRELY, n. f. [barried, Fr.]

1. A fortification made in huff, of trees, earth, waggon, or any thing else, to keep off an attack.

2. A bar; bar; obstruction.

No XII.

There must be such a barriere, as would greatly annoy, or rather absolutely stop, the currents of the atmosphere.

Darham's Physics-Theology.

7. To BARRICADE, v. a. [barriader, Fr.] To stop up a passage.

A new volcano continually discharging that matter, which being till then barricaded up, and imprisoned in the bowels of the earth, was the occasion of very great and frequent calamities.

Woodward.

Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet, And the mixt hurry barricades the street,

Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team.

Gay;

BARRICA'DO, n. f. [barriada, Span.] A fortification; a bar; any thing fixed to hinder entrance.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land, between the sea on the one part, and the harbour water, or inner sea on the other; fortified clean over with a strong rampier and barriado.

Bacon.

8. To BARRICADO, v. a. [from the noun] To fortify; to bar; to stop up.

Fall we found, fast shut The dismal gates, and barricad'd strong!

Milton.

He had not time to barricade the doors; so that the enemy entered.

Clarendon.

The truth of causes we find so obliterated, that it seems almost barricaded from any intellectual approach.

Harvey on Consumptions.

BARRIER, n. f. [barriere, Fr.] It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, but it is placed more properly on the first.

1. A barricade; an entrenchment.

Sate in the love of heav'n an ocean frowns Around our realm, a barrier from the foe.

Pope.

2. A fortification, or strong place, as on the frontiers of a country.

The queen is under the obligation of being guarantee of the Dutch having possession of the said barrier, and the revenues thereof, before a peace.

Swift.

3. A stop; an obstruction.

If you value yourself as a man of learning, you are building a most unpalatable barrier against all improvement.

Watts's Improvements of the Mind.

4. A bar to mark the limits of any place.

For justs, and tournaments, and barrie's, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariot, whereas the triumphs make their entries.

Bacon.

5. A boundary.

But wave whatever to Cadmus may belong, And fix, O mule, the barrier of thy long, At Octidius.

Dryden.

How insinuat varies in the growling swine, Compar'd, half tract and elephant! with thine:

Pope's Statius;

'Twixt that and reason, what a nice barrier!

For ever keprate, yet for ever near.

Pope;

BARRETER, n. f. [from bar.] A person qualified to plead the causes of clients in the courts of justice, called an advocate or licentiate in other countries and courts.

Barretters, now usually denominated counsellors at law, were formerly obliged to study eight years before they were called, now only seven, and sometimes fewer.

Outer barretters are pleaders without the bar, to distinguish them from inner barretters; such are the benchers, or those who have been readers, the council of the king, queen, and princes, who are admitted to plead within the bar.

Blount Chambers.

BARROW, n. f. [beere, Sax. supposed by Strabo to come from bear.] Any kind of carriage moved by the hand, as a hand-barrow; a frame of boards, with handles at each end, carried between two men; a wheelbarrow, that which one man pushes forward, by raising it upon one wheel.

Have I lived to be carried in a hasket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown into the Thames?

Shakespeare.

No barrow's wheel Shall mark thy flocking with a miry trace.

Gay.

BARROW, n. f. [beerg, Saxon.] A hog; whence barrowe grease, or hog's lard.

BARROW, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a grove; from bearge, which the Saxons used in the same sense.

Gibson.

BARROW is likewise used in Cornwall for a hillock, under which, in old times, bodies have been buried.

To BARTER, v. n. [baratter, Fr. to trick in traffick; from barat, craft, fraud.] To traffick by exchanging one commodity for another, in opposition to purchasing with money.

As if they scorn'd to trade and barter, By giving or by taking quarter.

Hodibrat.

A man has not every thing growing upon his soil, and therefore is willing to barter with his neighbour.

Culter.

To BARTER, v. a.

1. To give any thing in exchange for something else.

2 R

Foe

For him was I exchange'd and ransom'd;
 But with a baser man of arms by far,
 Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me. Shakespeare.

Then as thou wilt dispose the rest,
 To those who, at the market rate,
 Can barter honour for estate. Prior.
 I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

2. Sometimes it is used with the particle away before the thing given.

If they will barter away their time, methinks they should at least have some ease in exchange. Deity of Poetry.
 He also bartered away plums that would have rotted in a week; for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year. Lucke.

BARTER. n. f. [from barter.] The act or practice of trafficking by exchange of commodities; sometimes the thing given in exchange.

From England they may be furnished with such things as they may want, and, in exchange or barter, send other things, with which they may abound. Bacon.

He who corrupteth English with foreign words, is as wise as ladies that change plate for china; for which, I think, the laudable traffick of old cloaths is much the fairest barter. Felton on the Cl. fluk.

BARTERER. n. f. [from barter.] He that trafficks by exchange of commodities.

BARTRERY. n. f. [from barter.] Exchange of commodities. It is a received opinion, that, in most ancient ages, there was only bartery or change of commodities amongst most nations. Camden's Remains.

BARTRAM. n. f. A plant; the same with relitury, which see.

BARTRON. n. f. The demesne lands of a manour; the manour-house itself; and sometimes the out-houses. Blount.

BASE. adj. [bas, Fr. bas, Ital. baso, Span. baso, low Latin; basus.]

1. Mean; vile; worthless.

The harvest white plumb is a base plumb, and the white date plumb are no very good plumbs. Bacon.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things, as earthen pitchers, a kullery; whereupon he was furnished Rupographus. Peacham.

2. Of mean spirit; diffingenuous; illiberal; ungenerous; low; without dignity of sentiment. Since the perfections are such in the party I love, as the feeling of them cannot come unto any unbleed heart; shall that heart, lifted up to such a height, be counted base? Sidney.

It is base in his adversities thus to dwell upon the excesses of a passion. Asterbury.

I might be base enough to suspect, that you acted like some philosopher, who writ much better upon virtue than he practiced it.

3. Of low station; of mean account; without dignity of rank; without honour.

If the lords and chief men degenerate, what shall be hoped of the peasants and base people? Spenser on Ireland.

If that rebellion Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
 You reverend father, and these noble lords,
 Had not been here. Shakespeare.

It could not else be, I should prove so base,
 To sue and be denied such common grace. Shakespeare.

And I will yet be more vile than this, and will be base in mine own fight. Sam.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon.

He whose mind Is virtuous, is alone of noble kind;
 Though poor in fortune, of celestial race,
 And he commits the crime who calls him base. Dryden.

4. Base-born; born out of wedlock; and by consequence of no honourable birth.

Why *base*ard? wherefore base?
 When my dimensions are as well compact
 As honest madam's illue. Shakespeare.

'I his young lord lost his life with his father in the field, and with them a base son. Camden's Remains.

5. Applied to metals: without value; it is used in this sense of all metal except gold and silver.

A guinea is pure gold, if it has nothing but gold in it, without any alloy or base metal. Watts.

6. Applied to sounds; deep; grave. It is more frequently written base, though the comparative baser seems to require base.

In pipes, the lower the note holes be, and the further from the mouth of the pipe, the more base sound they yield. Bacon.

BASE-BORN. adj. Born out of wedlock.

But fee thy base-born child, thy babe of shame,
 Who, left by thee, upon our parish came. Gay.

BASE-COURT. n. f. Lower court; not the chief court that leads to the house.

My lord, in the base-court he doth attend,
 To speak with you. Shakespeare.

BASE-MINDED. adj. Mean-spirited; worthless.

It signifies, as it seemeth, no more than abjectment, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden's Remains.

BASE-VIOL. n. f. [usually written base viol.] An instrument which is used in concerts for the base sound.

At the very first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance; at the second, he became the head of a base-viol. Addison.

BASE. n. f. [bas, Fr. bas, Lat.]

1. The bottom of any thing; commonly used for the lower part of a building, or column.

What if it tempt thee tow'rd the flood, my lord?
 Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
 That beetles o'er his base into the sea. Shakespeare.

Firm Dorick pillars found your solid base;
 The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space. Dryden.

Columns of polished marble firmly set
 On golden bases, are his legs and feet. Prior.

2. The pedestal of a statue.

Men of weak abilities in great place, are like little statues set on great bases, made the less by their advancement. Bacon.

Mercury was patron of flocks, and the antients placed a ram at the base of his images. Brome.

3. That part of any ornament which hangs down, as bouffants. Phalastus was all in white, having his bases and caparion embroidered. Sidney.

4. The broad part of any body; as the bottom of a cone.

5. Stockings, or perhaps the armour for the legs, from bas, Fr. or shall it e'er be said that night,
 With gauntlet blue and base white,
 And round blunt truncheon by his side,
 So great a man at arms defy'd. Hudibras.

6. The place from which racers or tilers run; the bottom of the field.

He said; to their appointed base they went;
 With bearing heart th'expelling sign receive,
 And, starting all at once, the barrier leave. Dryden.

7. The fluting that gives a base sound.

At thy well tharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,
 The tibles quack for fear, the base roar. Dryden.

8. An old ruffick play, written by Sinners, says.
 He with two striplings (lads, more like to run
 The country base, than to commit such slaughter)
 Make good the passage. Shakespeare.

BASE. v. a. [bas, Fr.] To embase; to make less valuable by admixture of meaner metals.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals, which we cannot base: as, whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height. Bacon.

BASELY. adv. [from base.]

1. In a base manner; meanly; dishonourably.

The king is not himself, but basely led By flatterers. Shakespeare.

A lieutenant basely gave it up, as soon as Essex in his passage demanded it. Clarendon.

With broken vows his fame he will not stain,
 With conquest basely bought, and with inglorious gain. Dryden.

2. In *base*ardy.

These two Mitylene brethren, *base*ly born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Knellet's History of the Turks.

BASENESS. n. f. [from base.]

1. Meanness; vileness; badness.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
 That it all sordid baseness doth expel. Spenser.

When a man's folly must be spread open before the angels, and all his baseness ript up before those pure spirits, this will be a double hell. South.

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust:
 Nothing but love could make you so unjust. Dryden.

BASTARD. n. f. [bastard, Welch, of low birth; bastard, Fr.]

1. Bastard, according to the civil and canon-law, is a person born of a woman out of wedlock, or not married; so that, according to order of law, his father is not known.

Ayliffe.

Him to the Lydian king Lycimnia bare,
And sent her boasted bastard to the war.

Dryden.

2. Any thing spurious or false.

It lies on you to speak to 'the people;
Not by your own instruction, but with words

But rooted in your tongue; bastards and fables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.

Shakespeare.

BA'STARD. adj. [from the noun]

1. Begotten out of wedlock.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, insensible, a getter of more bastard children: their war's a destroyer of men.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Spurious; not genuine; supposititious; false; adulterate. In this sense, any thing which bears some relation or resemblance to another, is called spurious or bastard.

You may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter.—That were a kind of bastard hope indeed.

Shakespeare.

Men who, under the disguise of publick good, pursue their own designs of power, and such bastard honours as follow from them.

Temple.

BA'STARD Cedar Tree. [called guzanne in the West Indies.]

The characters are; It hath a regular flower, consisting of five leaves, hollowed like a spoon at their base; but, at their tips, divided into two parts, like a fork. The flower cup consists of three leaves, from whence arises the pintail, which afterwards becomes a roundish warted fruit, which has five cells, inclosing many seeds.

It grows plentifully in the low lands in Jamaica, where it rises to the height of forty or fifty feet, and has a large trunk.

The timber of this tree is cut into staves, for cases of all forts, and used for many other purposes. The fruit is eat by cattle, as it falls from the trees, and is esteemed very good to fatten them; so that the planters often leave these trees standing in their savannas, when they clear them from all other wood.

Miller.

To BA'STARDIZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To convict of being a bastard; to stigmatize with bastardy.

She lived to see her brother beheaded, and her two sons deplored from the crown, bastardized in their blood, and cruelly murdered.

Bacon.

To BA'STARDIZE. v. a. [from bastard.] To convict of being a bastard.

1. To convict of being a bastard.

Shakespeare.

BA'STARDLY. adj. [from bastard.] In the manner of a bastard; spuriously.

Good feed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle flays;

Let the mind's thoughts but be transplanted so
Into the body, and bastardly they grow.

Denne.

BA'STARDY. n. f. [from bastard.] An unlawful state of birth, which disables the bastard, both according to the laws of God and man, from succeeding to an inheritance.

Ayliffe.

Once she slander'd me with bastardy;

But whether I be true begot, or no,

That still I lay upon my mother's head.

Shakespeare.

In respect of the evil consequences, the wife's adultery is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family.

Taylor.

No more of bastardy in heirs of crowns.

Pope.

To BASTE. v. a. participle pass. basted, or bastin, [bastener, Fr. Bazata, in the Armorick dialect, signifies to strike with a stick; from which perhaps bastin a stick, and all its derivatives, or collaterals, may be deduced.]

1. To beat with a stick.

Quoth he, I grant it is vain
For one's that basted to feel pain.

Because the pangs his bones endure,
Contribute nothing to the cure.

Hudibras.

Tir'd with dispute, and speaking Latin,
As well as basting, and bear bating.

Hudibras.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulcets can produce;

While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all working.

Swift.

2. To drip butter, or any thing else, upon meat as it turns upon the spit.

Sir, I think the meat wants what I have, a basting.

Shakespeare.

3. To moulten meat on the spit by falling upon it.

Harris.

Toward; but how? ay there's the question;

Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion.

Prior.

BAT. v. a. [rare, Sax.] This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages; as, batter, Fr. to beat; baten, battle, beat, tatt, and others. It probably signified a weapon that cut execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence twisted and bat-cut.] A heavy stick or club.

A handsome bat he held,
On which he leaped, as one far in eld.

Synfer.

They were fixed in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bat.

Haircut.

BAT. n. f. [the etymology unknown.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a sort of skin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine.

Caines.

When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly.

Shakespeare.

But then grew reason dark; that fair star no more Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;

Bats they became who eagles were before;
And this they got by their desire to learn.

Devlin.

Some animals are placed in the middle between two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts.

Lucin.

Where swallows in the winter season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep.

Gay.

BAT-FOWLING. n. f. [from bat and fowl.] A particular manner of birdcatching in the night time, while they are at rest upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes; upon which the birds flying to the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.—We should be bat-fowling, and then go a bat-fowling.

Shakespeare.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre given them than by day; as sucking of cures, bat-fowling, &c.

Peacham on Drawing.

BA'TABLE. adj. [from bate.] Disputable.

He might on knees confess his guilty part. Sidney.

BATIMENT, n. f. [from abatement.] Diminution; a term only used among artificers.

To bate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

BATH, n. f. [bat, Saxon.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatly resorted to the natural bath; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning fire and copper blackish. The cold bath is the most convenient springs, or reservoirs, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem; and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.

Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Addison's Spectator.

2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.

In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in gentle Dutch stib, to be thrown into the Thames. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Sleep, the birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath, Shakspeare's Macbeth:

Balm of hurt minds.
3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. Belman Maria is a milk-lake, for balneum maris, a sea or water bath. A lead heat is sometimes called balneum fucum, or cinerum. Quincy.

We find that the water of things distilled in water, which they call the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire. Bacon's Natural History.

4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure for things liquid; and three pecks, and three pints, as a measure for things dry. Calmet.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the feed of an homer shall yield an ephah. Isaiah, v. 10.

TE BATH, v. a. [batan, Saxon.]

1. To wash in a bath.

Others, on silver lakes and rivers, bath'd
Their downy breast. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To wash any thing.

Phœnician Dido flood,
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood. Dryden.

Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
And Jove himself give way to Cimbria's wrath. Dryden.

TE BATH, v. n. To be in the water, or in any thing resembling a bath.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
I cannot tell. Marbeth.

The delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Sb. Meas. for Meas.

The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide. Waller.

But bath, and, in imperial robes array'd,
Pay due devotions. Pope's Odyssey.

BAT'ING, or ABA'T'ING, prop. [from bate, or abate.] This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition.]

Except.

The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
Whom I would sooner hear on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Rosa's R. Care.

If we consider children, we have little reason to think, that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst. Lect.

BAT'LET, n. f. [from bat.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.

I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked. Shakspeare's As you like it.

BAT'OGN, n. f. [battion, or battin, Fr. formerly spelt baton.]

1. A staff or club.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of the people with battions in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land. Bacon's New Atlantis.

A firm region, stretch'd
In battillions aspect, and nearer view
Brilliant with upright beams innumerable Of rigid spears and helmets throng'd. Paradise Lost.

BATTA'LIA, n. f. [battaglia, Ital.] The order of battle.

Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarend.

BATTA'LION, n. f. [battalion, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces. It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.

When forrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battillions. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

In this battalion there were two officers, called 1 heritors and Pandarus. Trotter.

The pier'd battalions disunited fall.
In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all. Pope.

2. An army. This sense is not now in use.
Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
—Why, our battalion troubles that account. Shakspeare's Tit. And.

TE BATTEN, v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology]

1. To fatten; or make fat; to feed plentifully.

We drove afield,
Batt'ning our flock with the fresh dews of night. Milton.

2. To fertilize.

The meadows here, with batt'ning ooze enrich'd,
Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
The jointed herbage shoots. Philips.

TE BATTEN, v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.

Burnish'd and batt'ning on their food, to show
The diligence of careful herds below. Dryden's H. and P.

The lazy glutton fast at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep. Dryden.

As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,
Batt'ning in ease, and slumbering life away. Garrick.

Tway mice, full blubbery and emaciate,
Batten beside erle Robert's table. Prior.

While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or batt'ning hogs roll in the sinking mire. Gay's Pastoral.

BAT'TEN, n. f. A word used only by workmen.

A batten is a scantling of wooden stuff, two, three or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

To BATTER. v. a. [battere, to beat, Fr.]

1. To beat; to beat down; frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mound, and to build a fort. Ezekiel, xxi. 22.

These haughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon thot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees. Shakspeare. H. VI.

Britannia there, the fort in vain
Had batter'd been with golden rain:
Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Batt'ring the pavement with their couriers' feet. Dryden.
If you have a silver faucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will then constant good housekeeping. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

3. Applied to persons; to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran frumpeers here,
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southey.
I am a poor old battered fellow, and I would willingly end my days in peace. Ascham's History of John Bull.

As the same dame, experienc'd in her trade,
By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

To BATTER. v. n. A word used only by workmen.

The side of a wall, or any timber, that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter. Mason's Mech. Exercises.

BAT'TER. n. f. [from to batter.] A mixture of several ingredients beaten together with some liquor; so called from its being so much beaten.

One would have all things little, hence has try'd
Turkey poultis fresh from th' egg in batter try'd. King's Art of Cookery.

BAT'TERER. n. f. [from batter.] He that batters.

BAT'TERY. n. f. [from batter, or batterie, Fr.]

1. The act of battering.

Strong wars they make, and cruel battery bend,
'Gaint fort of reason, it to overthrow. Fairy Queen.
Earthly mind, like mud walls, resist the strongest batteries. Locke.

2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action.

Where is best place to make our batt'ry next?—
—I think at the north gate. Shakspeare's Henry VI.
It plans this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obdurate inclosed truth. Southey.

See, and revere th' artillery of heav'n,
Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driv'n:
A dreadful fire the floating batt'ry make,
O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake. Blackmore.

3. The frame, or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.

4. In law, a violent striking of any man. In trespass for assault and battery, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault. Chambers.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action and battery? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Sir, quo' the lawyer, not to flatter ye,
You have as good and fair a battery,
As heart can wish, and need not shame
The proudest man alive to claim. Hudibras.

BAT'TLE. n. f. [bataille, Fr.]

1. A fight; an encounter between opposite armies. We generally say a battle of many, and a combat of two.

The English army that divided was Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;
And means to give you battle presently. Shakspeare. H. n. VI.

The battle done, and they within our power,
She'll never fee his pardon. Shakspeare's King Lear.
'The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong.

Ecclesiastes, ix. 11.
So they join'd batt'ls, and the heathen being discomfited fled into the plain. Maccabees, iv. 14.

2. A body of forces, or division of an army.

The king divided his army into three battles; whereof the vanguard only, well strengthened with wings, came to fight.
Bacon's Henry VII.

3. The main body, as distinct from the van and rear.

The earl of Angus led the avant-guard, himself followed with the battle a good distance behind, and after came the arrier.
Hayward.

4. We say to join battle; to give battle.

To BAT'TLE. v. n. [batailler, Fr.] To join battle; to contend in fight.

'Tis outs by craft and by surprize to gain:
'Tis yours to meet in arms, and battle in the plain. Prior.
We daily receive accounts of ladies battling it on both sides.
2. Addison's Freeholder

B A W

I own, he hates an action base,

His virtues batt'ling with his place. Saunders.

BAT'TLE-ARRAY. n. f. [See BATTLE and ARRAY.] Array, or order of battle.

Two parties of fine women, placed in the opposite side boxes, seem'd drawn up in battle-array one against another. Addison.

BAT'TLE-AXE. n. f. A weapon used anciently, probably the same with a bill.
Certain tinnars, as they were working, found spear heads, battle-axes, and swords of copper, wrapped in linen cloths.
Carrut's Survey of Cornwall.

BAT'TLEDOOR. n. f. [so called from door, taken for a flat board, and battle, or striking.] An instrument with a handle and a flat board, used in play to strike a ball, or shuttlecock.

Play-things, which are above their skill, as tops, gigs, battle- doors, and the like, which ate to be used with labour, should indeed be procured them. Locke.

BAT'TLEMENT. n. f. [generally supposed to be formed from battle, as the parts from whence a building is defended against assaults; perhaps only corrupted from batiment, Fr.] A wall raised round the top of a building, with embrasures, or interfices, to look through, to annoy an enemy.

He fixed his head upon our batiment. Shak. Macbeth.
Thou shalt make a batiment for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall from thence.

Deuteronomy, xxii. 8.

Through this we pass
Up to the highest batiment, from whence

The Trojans threw their darts. Danbarn.

Their standard planted on the batiment,
Despair and death among the soldiers sent. Dryd. Aeneas.

No, I than't envy him, whoe'er he be,
That stands upon the batiments of state;

I'd rather be secure than great. Norrit.

The weighty mallet deals rebounding blows,
Till the proud batiments her tow'rs incline. Gay's Trivia.

BAT'TY. adj. [from batt.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep.

Shakspeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

BAYAROV. n. f. A kind of cloke, or surcoat.

Let the loop'd bayarov the o'er embrace,
Or his deep cloke be spatter'd o'er with lace. Gay's Trivia.

BAY'UREE. n. f. A word used in Scotland, and the northern counties, for a halpenny.

Tho' in the draw'n of my japan bureau,
To lady Grippell I the Cæsar show,

'Tis equal to her ladyship or me,
A copper Otho, or a Scotch bayure. Bramst. Man of Taste.

BAY'IN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] A stick like those bound up in faggots; a piece of waste wood.

He rambl'd up and down
With shallow jeflers and rash bovin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

For moulded to the line in clouts,
Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,

He's mounted on a hazel bovin,
A crop'd malignant baker gave him. Hudibras.

The smaller truncheons make billet, bovin, and coats.
Hertner's Art of Husbandry.

To BAUK. See BALE.

BA'WBLE. n. f. [Baudelium, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia baubula sua dedit Oskani. Horace. Probably from bava, Fr.] A gew-gaw; a trifling piece of finery; a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt.

She haunts me in every place. I was on the sea bank with some Venetians, and thither comes the baubles, and falls me thus about my neck. Shakspeare's Othello.

It is a pauntry cap,
A cushion coffin, a baubles, a silken pie. Shak. Tem. Stevo.

If, in our contest, we do not interchange useful notions, we shall traffick toys and baubles. Government of the Tongue.

'His shall be writ to fright the fry away,
Who draw their little baubles, when they play. Dryden.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;
'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with baubles and seals. Prior.

Our author then, to please you in your way,
Presents you now a baub's of a play,

In ginsling rhyme. Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,
Inherits every virtue round,

As emblems of the foreign pow'r;
Like ether baubles of the Tow'r. Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from bauble.] Trifling; contemptible; a word not now in use, except in conversation.

A baubling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprized;

With which such fearful grapple did he make,
With the most noble bottom of our fleet.

Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

BA'WOCK. n. f. [perhaps from bow, or bawd, and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.
Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Shakspeare. Twelfth Night.

BAWD. n. f. [baude, old Fr.] A procurer, or procureress; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. Shakspeare.

This commodity,

This bawd, this broker, this all changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid. Shak.
Our author calls colouring lana feroris, the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, the painter her, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden.

To BAWD. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court. Addison.

And in four months a batter'd harriard;

Now nothing's left but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

BA'WILLY. adv. [from bawdy.] Obscenely.

BA'WINESS. n. f. [from bawdy.] Obscenity.

BA'WDICK. n. f. [See BALDRICK.] A belt.

Fresh garlands too, the virgin's temples crown'd;

The youth's gilt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bawdicks bound. Chapman's Iliad.

BA'WDY. n. f. [contracted from bawdery, the practice of a bawd.]

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together. Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdy go together in the world. L'Estrange.

2. Obscenity; unchaste language.

Pytheas, say on; he's for a jig, or a tale of bawdy, or he sleeps. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

I have no salt: no bawdery he doth mean:

For witty, in his language, is obscene. B. Johnson.

It is most certain, that barefaced bawdery is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BA'WDY. adj. [from bawd.] Obscene; unchaste; generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets,

Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not heart. Shakspeare. Othello.

Only they,

That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare.

Not one poor bawdy jest shall dare appear;

For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southey.

BA'WY-HOUSE. n. f. A house where traffick is made by wickedness and debauchery.

Has the hope lately shut up the bawdy-houses, or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin? Dennis.

To BAWL. v. n. [baia, Lat.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always used in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,

And still revolt, when truth would set them free. Milton.

To cry the cause up heretofore,

And bawl the bishops out of door. Hudibras.

Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler bawls,

And shakes the statues on their pedestals. Dryden.

From his lov'd home no lucre him can draw;

The senate's mad decrees he never saw;
Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law. Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace,

And bawling infamy, in language base,
Till sense was lost in found, and silence fled the place. Dryden's Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue

The list'ning nymphs, and ravish'd heroes hung;
But cries and sops the heav'n-born mulick blame,
And bawl, and hiss, and damn her into fame. Smith on J. Phillips.

I have a race of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and an old woman chiding it. L'Estrange's Fables.

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peevishness, contend for mastery. Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise. Archbishop's History of J. Ball.

To BAWL. v. n. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me, when I saw labours which had cost so much,
Bawled about by common hawkers. Swift.

BA'WREL. n. f. A kind of hawk. Ditt.

B A Y

BA'WAIN. n. f. A badger.

BAY. adj. [baia, Lat.]

Ditt.

A bay horse is what is inclining to a chestnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people.

All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes.

There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chestnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chestnut. Farrin's Dict.

I remember, my lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it. Shakspeare. Timon.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges. Shakspeare.

His colour'd grey,
For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay. Dryden.

BAY. n. f. [baie, Dutch.]

A reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay Shakspeare.

We have also bay waters in the middle of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some waters, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea. Bacon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,
When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep. Dryden.

Some of you have already been driven to this bay. Dryden's Epistle to the Whigs.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay

I view the world's tempestuous sea. Refcommen.

2. A pond hark raised to keep in flow of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. f. [abbai, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abbais. Boileau. Innocence is in the utmost distress. It is taken from abbai, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signified the condition of a flag when the bounds were almost upon him.) The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship for fifteen hours, fate like a flag among bounds at the bays, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships. Bacon's War with Spain.

Fair liberty pursue'd, and meant a prey
To lawless power, here turn'd, and flood at bay. Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Emboiden'd by despair, he stood at bay;

Revolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,
And bounds aloft against the pointed spears. Dryden.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;
And, with a storm of darts, to distance drive

The Trojan chief; who held at bay, from far
On his Vulcanian orb, sustain'd the war.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at bay. Swift.

He stands at bay,

And puts his last weak refuge in despair. Thomson.

BAY. n. f. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays.

These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors, from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay. Shakspeare.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

BAY TREE. [laureis, Lat.] This tree hath a flower of one leaf, shaped like a funnel, and divided into four or five segments.

The male flowers, which are produced on separate trees from the female, have eight stamina, which are branched into arms; the ovary of the female flowers becomes a berry, inclosing a single seed within an horny shell, which is covered with a skin.

The species are, 1. The common bay with male flowers. 2. The common fruit-bearing bay tree. 3. The gold striped bay tree, &c. The first and second sorts are old inhabitants of the English gardens; and as there are varieties obtained from the same seeds, they are promiscuously cultivated, and are not to be distinguished asunder until they have produced flowers. These plants are propagated either from seeds, or by laying down the tender branches, which will take root in one year's time. Mill.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Psalms.

BAY. n. f. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

Beneath his reign hath Euseben wear the bay. Pope.

Other times, to see

The beachy girdle of the ocean

Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shakspeare.

BE'ACON. n. f. [beacon, Sax. from becn, a signal, and becan, whence becon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and (parked) living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields,
Send forth their flames. Fairy Queen.

Moleit doubt is called

The beacon of the wife. Shakspeare.

The king seemed to accord to the designs of Peikin as a may-gane; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they flood too thin.

Bacon's Henry VII.

No flaming beacons call their blaze afar,

The dreadful signal of invasive war. Gop.

With ev'ry bead I drop too soon a tear. Pope.

2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.

With scarfs and fans, and double charge of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knavery. Shakspeare. Taming of a Shrew.

3. Any globular bodies.

Thy spirit within these hath been so at war,

That beads of sweat have flood upon thy brow. Shakspeare.

Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom. Bryl.

BEAD Tree. [Asarabach.]

It hath pennated leaves like those of the ash; the flowers consist of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; in the centre of the flower is a long fibriated tube, containing the style; the fruit is roundish and fleshy, containing a hard furrowed nut, divided into five cells, each containing one oblong broadish seed. The outside pulp of the fruit in some countries is eaten; but the nut is, by religious persons, bored through, and strung as beads; whence it takes its name. It produces ripe fruits in Italy and Spain. Miller.

BE'ADLE. n. f. [byedel, Sax. a messenger; bedau, Fr. bede, Sp. bedelle, Dutch.]

1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court. C. d. d.

2. A petty-officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.

A dog's obey'd in office.

Thou rash beadle, hold thy bloody hand! : Shakspeare.

Why dost thou thus that where?

They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. Spenser.

I hear common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

BE'ADROLL. n. f. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers.

The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them curled by name amongst the bead-roll of the king's enemies. Bacon's Henry VII.

BE'ADSMAN. n. f. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying, generally in praying for another.

An holy hospital,

In which seven beadsmen, that had vowed all

Their life to service of high heaven's king. Fairy Queen.

In thy danger,

Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy headman, Valentine. Sh. T. Gent. of Ver.
BE'AGLE. n. f. [bigle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

The rest were various huntings.

The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen.
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen.
Dryden's Fables.

To plains with well bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare.

BEAK. n. f. [be, Fr. fig, Welch.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.

Prunes the immortal wings, and cloy's his beak,
As when his gale is pleas'd. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

He saw the ravens with their horny beak,
Food to Enjath bringing. Milton's Par. Regained.

The magpyr, lighting on the flock,
Swood cha't'ning with incessant din,

And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient galleys, with which they pierced their enemies.

With boiling pitch another, near at hand,

From friendly Sweden brought, the beams inlopp;

Which well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withland,

And shakes them from the rifting beak in drops. Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the forepart of the hoof. Farrier's D.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.

Cuddenbeak, from a well advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river. Garrul's Survey.

BE'AKED. adj. [from beak.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.

And question'd every gulf of rugged winds,

That blows from off each beaked promontory. Milton.

BE'AKER. n. f. [from beak.] A cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak.

And into pikes and musqueteers

Stamp beakers, cups and portingers. Hudibras.

With dulcet be'-age this the beaker crown'd;

Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around. Pope's Odyssey.

BEAL. n. f. [beila, Ital.] A wheek or pimple.

BEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather mature, or come to a head, as a fore does.

BEAM. n. f. [beam, Sax. a tree; funnebeam, a ray of the sun.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and if the building be of timber, the trestle-tenons of the polls are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on each side its height, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionate to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon's N. Hist.

He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,

And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryd.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,

Spring to the walls and leaves his loes behind,
And hatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden's Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Pose the cause in justice's equal scales,
Whole beam stands sure, whole rightful cause prevails.

Shaksp. Henry VI.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends be both equal, the beam will be in horizontal situation; but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilk. Mathem. Mag.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenges, and his appalling beam. Dryden.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Justina heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Fanc'd from the beam her brother's chariot. Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The Haff of his spce was like a weaver's beam. 1688. xi. 23.

N. XIII.

7. The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye.

Let them prevent me death upon the wheel,
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-draweth
Below the beam of light. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Pleasant, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam. Dryden.

As heav'n's blit beam turns vingar to love.

BEAM of an anchor. The straight part or flank of an anchor, to which the hooks are fastened.

BEAM Campanula. A wooden or brass instrument, with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials. Harris.

To BEAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To emit rays or beams.

Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires. Pope.

BEAM Tier. See WILDSERVICE, of which it is a species.

BE'AMY. adj. [from beam.]

1. Radiant; shining; emitting beams.

His double-biting axe, and beams spear;

Each asking a gigantic force to rear. Dryden's Fables.

All-seeing fun!

Hide, hide in shameful night, thy beamy head. Smith.

2. Having horns or antlers.

Rouze from their desert dens the bristled rage
Of boars, and beamy stags in toils engage. Dryden's Virgil.

BEAN. n. f. [fava, Lat.]

It hath a pappilionaceous flower, succeeded by a long pod, filled with large flat kidney-shaped seeds; the stalks are firm and hollow; the leaves grow by pairs, and are fastened to a midrib. The species are, 1. The common garden bean. 2. The hoise bean. There are several varieties of the garden bean, differing either in colour or size. The principal sorts which are cultivated in England, are the Mazagan, the small ribon, the Spanish, the Tokay, the Sandwich, and Windsor bean.
The Mazagan bean is brought from a settlement of the same name on the coast of Africa, of the same name; and is regarded the best sort to plant for an early crop, a great bearer, and also an excellent table bean. The broad Spanish, Tokay, Sand- wich, and Windsor bean are for the latter crops. Windsor
His allowance of oats and beans for his horse was great on his journey required. Scott.

BEAN Caper. [falapa.]

The leaves of this plant are produced by pairs upon the same footstalk, and the footstalks grow opposite at the joints of the stalks; the cup of the flower consists of five leaves; and the flowers have also five leaves, expanded like a rose, with flamina surrounding the style, in the center of the flower cup.
This style becomes a cylindrical fruit, five cornered, divided into five cells, each containing many flat seeds. Miller.

BEAN Trifol. An herb.

To BEAR. v. a. pret. bore, or bore; part. pass. bore, or bore.
[beapan, bepan, Sax. saaran, Gothic. It is founded as bore, as the are in care and dare.]

1. This is a word used with such latitude, that it is not easily plained.

We say to bear a burden, to bear sorrow or reproach, to bear a name, to bear a grudge, to bear fruit, or to bear children. The word bear is used in very different senses.

Watts's Logic.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the shoulder; they carry him and set him in his place. Jobab, xlv. 7.

And Solomon had therefore and ten thousand that bore burdens. 1 Kings, v. 15.

As an eagle stretch up her nest, flattereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, *bear*eth them on her wings. Deuteronomy, xxxii. 11.

We see some, who, we think, have bore less of the burden, rewarded above ourselves. Deacy of Pitt.

3. To convey or carry.

My message to the ghost of Priam bears,

Tell him a new Achilles sent thee there. Dryden's Æneid.

A youth like him, a Trojan guest before,

In show of friendship, fought the Spartan shore,

And ravish'd Helen from her husband bore. }

4. To carry as a mark of authority.

I do commit into your hand

Th' unflin'd sword that you have us'd to bear. Shaksp. Henry IV.

5. To carry as a mark of distinction.

He may not bear so fair and so noble an image of the divine glory, as the universe in its full system. Hale's Orig. of Intel.

His pious brother, here the beil

Who ever bore that name. Dryden.

The sad spectators stiffen'd with their fears,

She sees, and sudden every climb the fears;

T'ien each of savage beasts the figure bears. Garth.

His supreme spirit or mind will bear its best resemblance, when it represents the supreme infinite. Cleane's Phil. Prin.

So we say, to bear arms in a coat.

Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under't. Shakspeare. King Lear.
7. To carry as in trust.
He was a thief, and had the bag, and bore what was put therein. John, xii. 6.
8. To support; to keep from falling.
Under colour of rooting out popery, the most effectual means to bear up the state of religion may be removed, and so a way be made either for paganism, or for extreme barbarism to enter.
Hobbes.
And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the house stood, and on which it was born up. Judges, xvi. 29.
A religious hope does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them. Addison, Spectator.
Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wonted greatness. Addison's Cato.

14. To permit; to suffer without resentment.
Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryden's Enkid.
15. To be capable of; to admit.
To reject all orders of the church which men have establish'd, is to think worse of the laws of men in this respect, than either the judgment of wife men alloweth, or the law of God itself will bear. Hobbes.
Being the son of one earl of Pembroke, and younger brother to another, who liberally supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.
Give his thought either the same turn, if our tongue will bear it, or, if not, vary but the dress. Dryden.
Do not charge your coins with more uses than they can bear.
It is the method of such as love any science, to discover all others in it. Addison on Medals.
Had he not been eager to find mistakes, he would not have frained my works to such a sense as they will not bear. Aster.
In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon words that they possibly can bear. Swift.
16. To produce, as fruit.
There be some plants that bear no flower, and yet bear fruit:
there be some that bear flowers, and no fruit: there be some that bear neither flowers nor fruit. Bacon.
They wing'd their flight aloft; then swooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree that bears the golden bough.
Dryden's Enkid.
Say, shepherd, say, in what glad soil appears
A wondrous tree that sacred monarchs bears. Pope's Past.
17. To bring forth, as a child.
The queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day the liv'd. Shakspeare.
Ye know that my wife bore two sons. Genesis, xlv. 27;
What could that could that have done?
The music herself, for her enchanting bore,
The same Aeneas, whom fair Venus bore
To fam'd Anchises on th' Ilean shore. Dryden.
18. To give birth to.
Here dwelt the man divine whom Samos bore,
But now self-banish'd from his native shore. Dryden.
19. To possess, as power or honour.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison's Cato.
20. To gain; to win.

- As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace. Shakspeare.
Because the Greek and Latin have ever bore away the prerogative from all other tongues, they shall serve as touchstones to make our trials by. Camden.
Some think to bear it by speaking a great word, and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance that which they cannot make good. Bacon.
21. To maintain; to keep up.
He finds the pleasure and credit of bearing a part in the conversation, and of hearing his reasons approved. Lacks.
22. To support any thing good or bad.

ently fight or fly, and not only juttled and bore down one another, but in their confused tumbling back, brake a part of the avant-garde. Sir J. Hayward.
- Contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him. Shakspeare. Henry IV.
Their broken oars, and floating planks, withstand
Their passage, while they labour to the land;
And ebbing tides bear back upon th' uncertain sand.
Dryden's Enkid.
- Now with a noiseless gentle course
It keeps within the middle bed;
Anon it lifts aloft the head,
And bears down all before it with impetuous force. Dryden.
Truth is bore down, attestations neglected, the testimony of sober persons despised. Swift.
The hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would soon bear down all considerations, and be an effectual incitement to their perversion. Swift.
30. To conduct; to manage.
My hope is
So to bear through, and out, the consulsip,
As spite shall ne'er wound you, though it may me.
Bacon. J. J. on's Catoine.
31. To press.
Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus.
Shakspeare. Julius Cæsar.
Though he bear me hard,
I yet must do him right. Bacon. Johnson's Catoine.
These men bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her windings. Addison, Spectator.
32. To incite; to animate.
But confidence then bore thee on; secure Either to meet no danger, or to find Matter of glorious trial. Milton's Par. Lyl.
33. To bear a body. A colour is said to bear a body in painting, when it is capable of being ground so fine, and mixing with the oil so entirely, as to seem only a very thick oil of the same colour.

71. BEAR. v. n.

1. To suffer pain.

Stranger, cease thy care;

Wife is the soul; but man is born to bear;

Jove weighs affairs of earth in dubious scales,

And the good suffers while the bad prevails.

Pope.

2. To be patient.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son.

Dryden.

3. To be fruitful or prolific.

A fruit tree hath been blown up almost by the roots, and set up again, and the next year bear exceedingly.

Bacon.

How I may formally in person bear,

Like a true friar.

Shakespeare.

6. To tend; to be directed to any point.

The oily drops swimming on the spirit of wine, moved reflexly to and fro, sometimes bearing up to one another, as if all were to unite into one body, and then falling off, and continuing to shift places.

Boyle.

Never did men more joyfully obey,

Or sooner understood the sign to fly:

With such alacrity they bore away.

Dryden.

Whole navy like a stiff-stretch'd cord did shew,

Till he bore in, and bent them into flight.

Dryden.

On this the hero fix'd an oak in flight,

The mark to guide the mariners aright:

To bear with this, the seamen stretch their oars,

Then round the rock they steer and seek the former shores.

Dryden's Æneid.

In a convex mirror, we view the figures and all other things, which bear out with more life and strength than nature itself.

Dryden.

7. To act as an impellent, or as a reciprocal power; generally with the particles upon or against.

We were encounter'd by a mighty rock,

Which being violently born upon,

Our helpless ship was plumed in the midst.

are reverend grave men; yet they lie dead, that tell you, you have good faces.

Shakespeare.

Tell him his pranks have been broad to bear with.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask.

Shakespeare. Hamlet.

BEAR. n. f. [bea, Saxon.]

Milton.

1. A rough savage animal.

Every part of the body of these animals is covered with thick shaggy hair, of a dark brown colour, and their claws are hooked, which they use in climbing trees. They feed upon fruits, honey, bees, and flesh. Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet, for it is certain they eat nothing, and, at the end of it, the males are very fat. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be,

it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the found of a trumpet. The flesh of bears was much esteemed by the ancients. They abound in Ireland, Muscovy, Lithuania, and the great forest in Germany; and also in the remote northern countries where the species is white.

Gmelin.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,

Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.—

—Are these thy bears? I will bait thy bears to death,

And manacle thee backward in their chains.

Shakespeare.

Thou'dst thou a bear;

But if thy sight lay tow'rd the roaring sea,

Thou'dst meet the bear i' th' mouth.

Shakespeare.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater and lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole star.

1. A place in which bears are kept for sport.

Hurrying me from the playhouse, and the scenes there, to the bear-garden, to the apes, and allies, and tigers.

I could not forbear going to a place of renown for the gallantry of Britons, namely to the bear-garden.

Swift.

2. Any place of tumult or mischief.

BEAR-GARDEN. adj. A word used in familiar or low phrase for rude or turbulent; as, a bear-garden fellow; that is a man rude enough to be a proper frequenter of the bear-garden. Bear-garden sports, is used for gross indecent entertainment.

BEAR-BREECH. n. f. [acanthus.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like those of the thistle; the flowers labiate;

the under lip of the flower is divided into three segments, which,

in the beginning, is curled up in the form of a tube; in the place of the under lip are produced the stamina, which support the pointals; the cup of the flowers is composed of pucky leaves, the upper part which is bent over like an arch, and supplies the defect of the upper lip of the flower; the fruit is of an oval form, divided in the middle into two cells, each containing one smooth seed. The species are, 1. The smooth-leaved garden bear's-breech, 2. The prickly bear's-breech, 3. The middle bear's-breech, with thorn (sines, &c.). The first is used in medicine, and is supposed to be the acanthus of Virgil.

The leaves of this plant are cut up in the capitals of the Con-stantian pillars, and were formerly in great esteem with the Romans. They are easily propagated by putting the roots in February or March, or by the seed sown at the same time.

M...

BEAR'S-EAR, or Auricula. [auricula urfi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a perennial root; the leaves are thicker and smoother than those of the primrose; the cup of the flower is shorter, so that the tube appears naked; the flower is shaped like a funnel; the upper part is expanded, and divided into five segments; this is succeeded by a globular seed-vessel, containing many small seeds; every year it produces vast quantities of new flowers, differing in shape, size, or colour; and there is likewise a great variety in the leaves of these plants. They flower in April, and ripen their seeds in June. Miller.

BEAR'S-EAR, or Saxifrage. [saxifraga, Lat.]

This plant hath a perennial root; the leaves are roundish, rough, and crenated on the edges, like those of ground ivy; the cup of the flower is small, and divided into six parts; the flowers are shaped like a funnel, cut at the top into many segments, and disposed in an umbel; the fruit is roundish, terminating in a point, and is closely fixt in the cup, in which are contained many small angular seeds. We have but one species of this plant, which is nearly allied to the auricula urfi; but the flowers are not quite so large and fair. It loses its leaves in winter, but puts out new ones early in the spring; and, in April, it produces flowers, which are sometimes succeeded by seed pods; but it is very rare that they perfect their seeds with us. Miller.

BEAR'S-FOOT. n. f. See HELLEBORE, of which it is a species.

BEAR'S-WORT. n. f. An herb.

BEARD. n. f. [beard, Sax.]

1. The hair that grows on the lips and chin.

Ere on thy chin the springing beard began

To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.

2. Beard is used for the face; as, to do any thing to a man's beard, is to do it in defiance, or to his face.

They'd at their covenant, and jee'd

Their rev'rend parsons to my beard. Hudibras.

3. Beard is used to mark age or virility; as, he has a long beard, means he is old.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spared at suit of his grey beard. Shakespeare.

Some thin remains of chastity appear'd,

Even under Jove, but Jove without a beard. Dryden.

Would it not be an insufferable thing, for a professor to have his authority, of forty years standing, confirmed by general tradition, and a reverend beard, overturned by an upstart novelist? Lect.

4. Sharp prickles growing upon the ears of corn.

The ploughman loth his sweat, and the green corn

Hath rotted ere its youth attain'd a beard. Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

A certain farmer complained, that the beards of his corn cut the reapers and threshers fingers. L'Estrange.

5. A barb on an arrow.

6. The beard or chuck of a horse, is that part which bears the curb of the bridle. Farrier's Lect.

TO BEARD. v. a. [from beard.]

1. To take or pluck by the beard, in contempt or anger.

No man so potent breathes upon the ground,

But I will beard him. Shakespeare.

2. To oppose to the face; to set at open defiance.

He, who whenever he should swear to duty, may be able to beard him. Spenser.

The design of utterly extirpating monarchy and episcopacy, the presbyterians alone begun, continued, and would have ended, if they had not been bearded by that new party, with whom they could not agree about dividing the spoil. Swift.

BE'ARDED. adj. [from beard.]

1. Having a beard.

I think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,

May draw with you. Shakespeare.

Old prophecies foretell our fall at hand,

When bearded men in floating castles land. Dryden.

2. Having sharp prickles, as corn.

As when a field

Of Ceres, ripe for harvest, waving bends

Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind

Sways them. Milton.

The fierce virago

Flew o'er the fields, nor hurt the bearded grain. Dryden.

3. Barbed or jagged.

Thou shouldst have pull'd the secret from my breast,

Turn out the bearded steel to give me rest. Dryden.

BE'ARDESS. adj. [from beard.]

1. Without a beard.

There are extant some coins of Cunobelin, king of Essex and Middlesex, with a beardless image, inscribed Cunobelin.

Camden's Remains.

2. Youthful.

And, as young striplings whip the top for sport,

On the smooth pavement of an empty court,

The wooden engine flies and whirls about,

Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

BEARER. n. f. [from to bear.]

1. A carrier of any thing, who conveys any thing from one place or person to another.

He should the bearers put to sudden death,

Not flitting time allow'd. Shakespeare.

Forgive the bearer of unhappy news;

Your altar'd father openly pursues

Your ruin. Dryden.

No gentleman sends a servant with a message, without endeavouring to put it into terms brought down to the capacity of the bearer. Swift.

2. One employed in carrying burthens.

And he set three-score and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens. 2 Chronicles.

3. One who wears any thing.

O majesty!

When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost fit

Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,

That scalds with safety. Shakespeare.

4. One who carries the body to the grave.

5. A tree that yields its produce.

This way of procuring autumnal roses, in some that are good bearers, will succeed. Begle.

Reprune apricots and peaches, saving as much of the young likeliest shoots as are well placed; for the raa bearers commonly perish the ones succeeding. Evelyn.

6. In architecture. A post or brick wall raised up between the ends of a piece of timber, to shorten its bearing; or to prevent its bearing with the whole weight at the ends only.

7. In heraldry. See SUPPORTER.

BE'ARHERD. n. f. [from bear and herd; as, shepherd, from sheep.]

A man that tends bears.

He that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him; therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bearder, and lead his ape into hell.

Shakspeare. Much ado about Nothing.

BEARING. n. f. [from bear.]

1. The site or place of any thing with respect to something else.

But of this frame, the bearing and the ties,

The strong connections, nice dependencies,

Gradations just, has thy pervading soul

Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole? Pope.

2. Gesture; mien; behaviour.

That is Claudio; I know him by his bearing.

Shakspeare. Much ado about Nothing.

3. In architecture. Bearing of a piece of timber, with carpenters, is the space either between the two fixt extremes thereof, or between one extreme and a post, brick-wall, &c. trimmed up between the ends, to shorten its bearing. Builder's Dict.

BE'ARWARD. n. f. [from bear and ward.] A keeper of bears.

We'll bait thy bears to death,

And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shakespeare.

The bear is led after one manner, the multitude also another; the bearward leads but one brute, and the mountebank leads a thousand. L'Estrange.

BEAST. n. f. [beeste, Fr. bestia, Lat.]

2. An animal distinguished from birds, insects, fishes and man.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,

While the beest liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him Shakspeare.

Beasts of chase are the buck, the doe, the fox, the martlet, and the roe. Beasts of the forest are the hart, the hind, the hare, the boar, and the wolf. Beasts of warren are the hare and coney. Cruvel.

2. An irrational animal, opposed to man; as man and beest.

I dare do all that may become a man; as

Who dares no more, is none. —

— What beast wilt thou then

That made you break this enterprise to me? Macbeth.

Medea's charm were there, Circæan feasts,

With bowls that turn'd enamour'd youths to beasts. Dryden.

3. A brutal savage man, a man acting in any manner unworthy of a reasonable creature. See BEASTINGS.

BEASTINGS. See BEASTINGS.

BEASTLINESS. n. f. [from beastly.] Brutality; practice of any kind contrary to the rules of humanity.

They held this land, and with their filthiness

Polluted this same gentle soil long time;

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness;

And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime. Fairy Queen.

BE'ASTLY. adj. [from beast.]

1. Brutal; contrary to the nature and dignity of man. It is used commonly, as a term reproach.

Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, or remain a beast with beasts?—Ay—a beastly ambition. Shakspeare.

You beastly knave, know you no reverence? K. Lear.

With lewd, prophane, and beastly phrase,

To catch the world's loose laughter or vain gaze. B. John.

It is commonly charged upon the gentlemen of the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess, hath been lately, from their example, restored among us. Swift.

2. Having the nature or form of beasts.

Beastly divinities, and droves of gods. Pindar.

To BEAT. v. a. preter. beat, part. pass. beat, or beaten. (batte, French.)

beat it in a mortar, and baked it. Numeri.
They did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it. Exodus.

6. To strike the laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the main wheel of their corn mills longer than ordinary, and placing of pins in them, to raise large hammers like those used for paper and fulling mills, with which they beat most of their hemp. Martimer.

7. To mix things by long and frequent agitation.
Nellor, we see, furnished the gold, and he beat it into leaves, so that he had occasion to make use of his anvil and hammer. Bryanne.

8. To strike buffes or ground, or make a motion to rouse game.
It is strange how long some men will lie in wait to speak, and how many other matters they will beat over to come near
it. Bacon.

9. To tread in the field, and beat out that she had gleaned.
When from the cave thou risest with the day,
To beat the woods, and rouse the bounding prey. Prior.
Together let us beat this ample field.
Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope.

10. To thresh; to drive the corn out of the husk.

While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.

16. To make a path by marking it with tracks.
He that will know the truth of things, must leave the common and beaten track. Locke.

17. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? The greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So in Alcides beaten by his page. Shakespeare.

18. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
That bear the stripes of men, how have you run
From slaves that asses would beat? Shakespeare.
Five times, Marcus,
I have fought with thee, for often hast thou beat me. Shakespeare.

19. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
I have discern'd the foe securely lie,
Too proud to fear a beaten enemy. Dryden.
The common people of Lucca are firstly persuaded, that one Lucquesse can beat five Florentines. Addison.

20. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
Pynhus, king of Epirus, joining his ships to those of the Syracusan, beat the Carthaginians at sea. Arbutnot.

21. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
It is no point of wisdom for a man to beat his brains, and send his spirits about things impossible. Hatwell.
And as in prisons mean rogues beat
Hemp, for the service of the great;
So Whacum beat his dirty brains
To advance his matter's fame and gains. Hudibras.

22. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
I know not why any one should waste his time, and beat his head about the Latin grammar, who does not intend to be a critick. Locke.

Nº XIII.

23. To lay, or press, as standing corn by hard weather.
Her own shall bless her;
Her foes shake, like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow. Shakespeare.

24. To lay, or press, as standing corn by hard weather.
To deprecate, or to crush by repeated opposition; usually with
the particle down.
Albeit a parison was proclaimed, touching any speech tending to treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with that severity, or with this lenity be abated. Hayward.

25. To deprecate, or to crush by repeated opposition; usually with
the particle down.
Our warriors propagating the French language, at the same time they are beating down their power. Addison.

26. To deprecate, or to crush by repeated opposition; usually with the particle down.
Such an unlock'd for storm of ills falls on me,
It beats down all my strength. Addison.

27. To drive by violence.
Twice have I fall'd, and was twice beat back. Dryden.
He that proceeds upon other principles in his inquiry, does at least beat himself in a party, which he will not quit, till he be beaten out.

28. To drive by violence.
He cannot beat it out of his head, but that it was a cardinal who picked his pocket. Locke.
The younger part of mankind might be beat off from the belief of the most important points even of natural religion, by the impudent jeits of a profane wit. Watts.

29. To drive by violence.
To move with fluttering agitation.
Thrice have I beat the wing, and rid with night
About the world. Dryden.

30. To drive by violence.

demanded.
Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Feats beat the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.

31. To drive by violence.
She persuaded him to trust the renegade with the money he had brought over for their ransom; as not questioning but he would beat down the terms of it. Addison.

32. To drive by violence.
To sink or lessen the value.
Usury beats down the price of land; for the employment of money is chiefly either merchandizing or purchasing; and usury way-lays both. Bacon.

33. To drive by violence.
To attack suddenly; to alarm.
They lay in that quiet posture, without making the least impression upon the enemy, by beating up his quarters, which might easily have been done. Clarendon.

34. To drive by violence.
Will, fancies he should never have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, knocked down constables, and beat up a few women's quarters, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

35. To drive by violence.
To walk; to go on foot.
To BEAT. v. n.
1. To move in a pulsatory manner.
I would gladly understand the formation of a soul, and see it beat the soft conscious pulse. Celcius.

2. To dash, as a flood or storm.
This publick envy seemeth to beat chiefly upon ministers.
Your brow, which does no fear of thunder know,
Sees rowling tempests vainly beat below. Dryden.

3. To dash, as a flood or storm.
And one sees many of the like hollow spaces worn in the bottoms of the rocks, as they are more or less able to resist the impressions of the water that beats against them. Addison.

4. To dash, as a flood or storm.
To knock at a door.
The men of the city beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house. Judges.

5. To dash, as a flood or storm.
To move with frequent repetitions of the same act or stroke.
No pulse shall keep
His nat'ral progress, but surcease to beat. Shakespeare.

6. To dash, as a flood or storm.
My temperate pulse does regularly beat;
Feel, and be satist'f'd. Dryden.

7. To dash, as a flood or storm.
A man's heart beats, and the blood circulates, which it is not in his power, by any thought or volition, to stop. Locke.

8. To dash, as a flood or storm.

To find an honest man, I beat about,
And love him, court him, praise him in or out. Pope.

12. To dash, as a flood or storm.
To act upon with violence.
The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die. Ymiah.

13. To dash, as a flood or storm.
To speak frequently; to repeat; to enforce by repetition.
We are drawn on into a larger speech, by reason of their so great earnestness, who beat more and more upon their last alleged words. Hooker.
How frequently and severely doth the scripture beat upon this cause? H. Arevill.

14. To dash, as a flood or storm.
To beat up; as, to beat up for soldiers. The word up seems redundant.
BEAT. part. pass. [from the verb.]

Like a rich vessel beat by storms to shore,
 'Twere madness should I venture out once more. Dryden.
BEAT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Stroke.
 2. Manner of striking.
- Albeit the base and treble strings of a viol be turned to an unison; yet the former will still make a bigger or broader found than the latter, as making a broader beat upon the air.
Greav's Cymatologia Sacra.

With a careless beat,
 Struck out the mute creation at a heat. Dryden.
 3. Manner of being struck; as, the beat of the pulse, or a drum.

BEATER. particip. adj. [from to beat.]
 What makes you, Sir, so late abroad,
 Without a guide, and this no beaten road? Dryden.

BEATER. n. f. [from beat.]
 1. An instrument with which any thing is comminuted or mingled.

Beat all your mortar with a beater three or four times over, before you use it; for thereby you incorporate the sand and lime well together. Mason.

2. A person much given to blows.
 The best schoolmaster of our time, was the greatest beater.
Aylmer's Schoolmaster.

BEATIFIC. adj. [beatificus, low Lat. from beatus, happy.]
BEATIFIC. adj. { That which has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; blissful. It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring the riches of heav'n's pavement
 Than ought divine or holy elix, enjoy'd
 In vision beatific. Milton.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for, enjoying the beatific vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beatific vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories, that stream from the fountain of un-created light. South.

BEATIFICALLY. adv. [from beatific.] In such a manner as to complete happiness.

Beatifically to behold the face of God in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man. Hobswell.

BEATIFICATION. n. f. [from beatific.] A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgment made by the pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be revered as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.

TO BEATIFY. v. a. [beatifico, Lat.]
 1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have ascended into paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangels. Dryden.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints. Hemmerl.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and, consequently, the most beatifying
 of all others. Brown.

2. To settle the character of any person by a public acknowledgment that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over-against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted.
Addison on Italy.

BEATING. n. f. [from beat.] Correction; punishment by blows.
 Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men,

Takes private beatings, and begins again. Ben. Johnson.
BEATITUDE. n. f. [beatitudo, Lat.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all man's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.
 This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. f. [beau, Fr. It is founded like to, and has often the French plural beaux.] A man of drels; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What, will not beaux attempt to please the fair? Dryden.
 The water nymphs are too unkind
 To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs so?
 And fly they all, at once combin'd
 To shame a general, and a beau? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

BEAVER. n. f. [beaver, Fr.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is fought. Hawesell.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A hat of the best kind; so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue; a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The breaker here his spacious beaver wears,
 Upon his brow lit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [beaver, Fr.]
 His dreadful hideous head
 Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw,
 From flaming mouth, bright sparks fiery red. Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
 And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shakespeare.
 He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the beaver going in at his beaver. Baume.

BEAVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver;
 wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
 Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears:
 All flesh is humbled. Pope.

BEAUVISH. adj. [from beau.] Besitting a beau; foppish.

BEAUTEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form;
 pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petrucio, help thee to a wife,
 With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous.
Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,
 I only to the flight aspire;
 To keep the beauteous foe in view,
 Was all the glory I desire'd. Prior.

BEAUTEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAUTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
 The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Dryden.
BEAUTIFUL. adj. [from beauty and ful.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Religio.

The principal and most important parts of paintings, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject; so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the perious are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
 And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAUTIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the bodice aptly lac'd,
 From thy ill bosom to thy slender waist,
 That air and harmony of shape express,
 Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAUTIFULNESS. n. f. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

TO BEAUTIFY. v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embellish;
 to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was furrow more sweetly set forth, their faces seeming rather to beautify their furrow, than their furrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hogwarts.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
 To beautify thy triumphs and return,
 Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke. Shakespeare.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
 Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.
 There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

TO BEAUTIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAUTY. n. f. [beauty, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Lucke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.—
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Shakep. Richard III.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of preference than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators; that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delights,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.
The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauty of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

- Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

BECK, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sign with the head; a nod.

Halte thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathe smiles. Milton.

2. A nod of command.

Neither the lusty kind shew'd any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney.

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band

Of spirits, likeliest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton.

The menial fair, that round her wait,

At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope.

To BECKON, v. a. [from beck, or beacon, Sax. a sign.] To make a sign to.

With her two crook'd hands his signs did make,

And beckon'd him. Fairy Queen.

 the father.

For

For what their prowess gain'd, the law declares
Is to themselves alone, and to their heirs :

No share of that goes back to the begetter,
But if the son fights well, and plunders better—Dryden.
Men continue the race of mankind, commonly without the intention, and often against the consent and will of the begetter.
Locke.

BEGGAR. n. f. [from beg. It is more properly written leager ;
but the common orthography is retained, because the derivatives all preserve the a.]

1. One who lives upon alms ; one who has nothing but what is given him.

He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifeth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes.
1 Samuel ii. 8.

We see the whole equipage of a leager so drawn by Homer, as even to retain a nobleness and dignity.

2. One who supplicates for any thing, a petitioner ; for which, leager is a harsh and contemptuous term.

What subjects will precarious kings regard ?
A leager speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

3. One who assumes what he does not prove.
These shameful leagers of principles, who give this precarious account of the original of things, assume to themselves to be men of reason. Tillotson.

TO BEGGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reduce to beggary ; to impoverish.

Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And leager'd your's for ever. Shakespeare.

They shall spoil the clothiers wool, and leager the present spinners. Graunt.

garly ; meanness ; poverty.

BEGGARLY. adj. [from leager.] Mean ; poor ; indigent ; in the condition of a leager ; used both of persons and things.

I ever will, though he do shake me off
To leagerly diversions, love him dearly. Shakespeare.

Who, that beheld such a bankrupt leagerly fellow as Cromwell entering the parliament house, with a thread bare torn cloak, and a greasy hat, could have suspected, that he should,
by the murder of one king, and the banishment of another, ascend the throne ? South.

The next town has the reputation of being extremely poor and leagerly. Adelphi.

Coriolanus, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a leagerly fellowship. Swift.

BEGGARLY. adv. [from leager.] Meanly ; despicably ; indi-gently.

Touching God himself, hath he revealed, that it is his delight to dwell leagerly ? and that he taketh no pleasure to be worshipped, saving only in poor cottages ? Hosier.

BEGGAR. n. f. [from leager.] Indigence ; poverty in the utmost degree.

On he brought me into bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable happiness and rich leager. Sidney.

While I am a leager, I will rail,
And say there is no sin, but to be rich ;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but leager. Shakespeare.

We must become not only poor for the present, but reduced, by their mortgages, to a state of leager for endless years to come. Swift.

TO BEGYN. v. a. I begin, or begin ; I have begun. [beginman,
Sax. from be, or by, ti, and gan, gan, or gan, to go.]

1. To enter upon something new ; applied to persons.
Begin every day to repent ; not that thou shouldst at all defer it, but all that is past ought to seem little to thee, seeing it is in itself. Begin the next day with the same zeal, fear, and humility, as if thou hadst never begun before. Taylor.

I'll sing of heroes and of kings ;
Begin my muse. Cowley.

2. To commence any action or state ; to do the first act, or first part of an act ; to make the first step from not doing to doing.

They begin at the ancient men which were before the house. Ezekiel.

Of these no more you hear him speak ;
He now begins upon the Greek.
'I hefe rang'd and shov'd, shall, in their turns,
Remain obdurate as in their urns.

Beginning from the rural gods, his hand
Was lib'ral to the pow'rs of high command. Dryden.

Rapt into future times, the bard begin,
A virgin shall conceive. Pope.

3. To enter upon existence ; as, the world begin ; the practice begin.

4. To have its original.

And thus the hard and stubborn race of man,
From animated rock and flint begin. Blackmore.

From Nimrod first the savage chase begin ;
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

5. To take rise.
Judgment must begin at the house of God. 1 Peter.
The song begin from Jove. Dryden.

All ends in love of God, and love of man. Pope.

6. To come into act.
Now and then a fish he stole,
And tears begin to flow. Dryden.

TO BEGIN. v. a.
1. To do the first act of any thing ; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope.

They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion ; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Watts.

2. To trace from any thing as the first ground.
The apostle begin our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Lucke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon ; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begin with. Government of the Tongue.

BEGINNER. n. f. [from begin.]
1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Spenser.

Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch in Syria, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hosier.

2. An unexperienced attempter ; one in his rudiments ; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Sidney.

They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction ;
a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hosier.

I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.

BEGINNING. n. f. [from begin.]
1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.
Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, you shall blow the trumpets over your burnt offering. Numbers.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show ;
We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.

3. The state in which any thing first is.
By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow ;
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.
The understanding is passive ; and whether or not it will have their beginning, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Lucke.

5. The first part of any thing.
The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning ; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle ; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Pope on Epic Poetry.

TO BEGIRD. v. a. I begirt, or begirded ; I have begirt. [from be and gird.]

1. To bind with a girdle.
Or should the confident,
As fitting queen ador'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
T' enamour. Milnes.

2. To surround ; to encircle ; to encompass.
Begird th' almighty throne,
Beseeching, or beseeching.
At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud :
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears ;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege ; to beleague ; to block up.
It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west,
That the council humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

BEGRIN. v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of be-gird; perhaps by the printer. To begird. See BEGIRD.
And, Lentulus, regret you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive; for they are they

Ben. Jekobson.

BEGLEBEG. n. f. [Turkish.] The chief governor of a province among the Turks.

BEKAW. v. a. [from be and gnaw.] To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.
His horse is stark spoiled with the flangers, begnawn with the bot, waid in the back, and shoulder smitten.

Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.

Shaksp. Richard III.

BEGONE. interj. [only a coalition of the words be gone.] Go away; hence; haste away.

Begone! the goddess cries, with stern disdain;
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.
She fled, for ever banish'd from the train.

Addison.

BEGOT. The participle passive of the verb beget.

BEGOTTEN. Remember that thou wast beget of them.

Euclasp.

The first he met, Anticipates the brave,
But bade beget on a Theban slave.

Dryden.

BEGRASSE. v. a. [from be and graze.] To soil or dawb with unclean or fat matter.

BEGRIME. v. a. [from be and grime.] See GRIME and GRIM.
To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

Her name that was so fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd, and black
As my own face.

Shakspere.

BEGRILE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words.

Celsianus.

The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat!

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Whoever sees a man, who would have beguiled, and imposed upon him, by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me.

Satb.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Shakspere.

3. To deceive pleasantly; to amuse.
With these sometimes the doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess.

Sir J. Davies.

Sweet, leave me here a while;
My spirits grow dull, and I am I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep.

Hamlet.

BEGUN. The participle passive of begin.

But thou bright morning star, thou rising fun,
Which in these latter times hath brought to light
These mysteries, that, since the world began,
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night.

Sir J. Davies.

BEHALF. n. f. [This word Stinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behalf, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behalf; which, in imitation of other words so founded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, be-half.]

1. Favour; cause.
He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation.

Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf.
Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in its behalf.

Addison.

2. Vindication; support.
He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty.

Sidney.

Lest the fiend,
Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new trouble raise.

Milton.

Others believe, that, by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

BEHALVE. v. a. [from be and have.]

1. To carry; to conduct; used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behalv'd not ourselves disorderly among you.

2 Thessalonians.

Manifest signs came from heaven, unto those that behalv'd themselves manfully.

2 Macabees.

To their wills wedded, to their errors slave,
No man, like them, they think, himself behalv'd.

Dreham.

We to live, and to act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves.

Aitken.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind

Behaves with cares, cannot so easily miss.

Fairy Queen.

With such sober and unnoted passion,
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,

As if he had but prov'd an argument.

Shakspere.

BEHAVE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behave'd well or ill.

BEHAVIOUR. n. f. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane.

Sidney.

2. External appearance.

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feign'd himself mad in their hands.

1 Samuel.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions. Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour, that a thrall'd heart could express.

Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility.

Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love.

Shakspere.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

He marked, in Dora's dancings, good grace and handsome behaviour.

Sidney.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue.

Bacon's Organ. Rational.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour.

Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed.

Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superior power.

L'Esfrange's Fables.

BEHEAD. ad. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

See a reverend Syracusan merchant

Beheaded publicly.

Stokes.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity.

Clarendon.

By chains connect, and, with destructive sweep,

Behead whole troops at once.

Philips.

Mary, queen of the Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

Addison on Italy.

BEHELD. partic. passiv. from behold; which fee.

All hail ye virgin daughters of the main!

Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again!

Pope.

BEHEMOTH. n. f. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal, which he calls behemoth, and describes its particular properties at large, in chap. xl. 15. Behemoth is taken much care to make it appear to be the hippopotamus, or river-horse. Santius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, in their opinion, that it is the elephant. Calmet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

Job.

Behold! in plaited mail

Behemoth rears his head.

Thomson.

BEHEN. n. f. Valerian roots. Also a fruit resembling the tabern.

Behen, from which perfumers extract an oil. Diet.

BEHEAT. n. f. [from be and heft; heft, Saxon.] Command; precept; mandate.

Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without framing, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing.

Sidney.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,

That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law.

Fairy Q.

I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell.

Fairfax.

To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro

Past frequent.

Milton.

Reign thou in hell, thy kingdom; let me serve
In heav'n God ever bless, and his divine

Behests obey, worthwhile to be obey'd!

Milton.

BEHOLD. v. a. pret. behold, part. beholding. [from haran, to promise, Sax.]

1. To promise.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vow yplight,
Up rose from drowsy couch, and him address,
Unto the journey which he had behoit.

Fairy Queen.

2. To entrust; to commit.
That most glorious house that glitt'ring bright,
Whereof the keys are to thy hand behoit
By wife Fidelia. Fairy Queen.

The Benjamites looked behind them. Judges.
4. Following another.
Her husband went with her, weeping behind her. 2 Samuel.
5. Remaining after the departure of something else.
He left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in one hour. Shakespeare.
6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.
What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.
Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.
8. Inferior to another; having the posterior place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hoster.

9. On the other side of something.
From light retir'd, behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dryden.

BEHOLD. adv.

1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.
We cannot be sure, that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEHINDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rears or profits, or any advantage, is anticipated; so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense, it is followed by with.

Consider, whether it is not better to be half a year behindhand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator.

3. Shakespeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,

So rarely kind, are as interpreters

Of my behindhand slackness. Shakespeare.

TO BEHOLD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealden, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Exeiel.

When some young Thebans, on horseback, were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Man looks aloft, and, with erected eyes,

Beholds his own hereditary fates. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,

With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryden.

BEHOLD. interj. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Genesis.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,

Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd

With what all earth or heaven could bestow,

To make her amiable. Milton.

BEHOLDEN. particip. adj. [gebeuden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obligated; bound in gratitude; with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for.

Little are we beholden to your love,

And little looked for at your helping hands. Shakespeare.

I found you next; in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Albion.

We, who fee men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive, what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wife contrivance. Atterbury.

BEHOLDEN. n. f. [from behold.] Spectator, he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,

That, like the sun, did make beholders wink? Shakespeare.

These beasts among

Beholders rude, and shallow to discern Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? Milton.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wife Maker's, than beholder's sight. Debenham.

The jussling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight. Graville.

The charitable foundations in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity, and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEHOLDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obligated. See BEHOLDEN.

Because I would not be beholding to fortune for any part of the victory, I defended. Sidney.

BEHOLDING. n. f. Obligation.
Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this testimony. Carew.

BEHOLDINGNESS. n. f. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him. Sidney.

In this my debt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Denn.

BEHOOF. n. f. [from behoove.] That which behooves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her majesty may alter any thing of those laws, that may be more both for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenker on Ireland.

No mean recompence it brings

To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your fway. Milton.

Wer't thou some star, which, from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus, by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinfate. Milton.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no flut or stopples made for the ears. Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke.

TO BEHOOVE. v. n. [behoovan, Saxon; it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet; either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality it behooves, the very foundation and root, the highest wellspring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hobbes.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behooves, or became him to perform. Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

BEHOVEFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behoeful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste defects full of grass, that the fame should be eaten down. Spenker.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behoeful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hobbes.

Madam, we have called such necessities
As are behoeful for our state tomorrow. Shakespeare.

It may be most behoeful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly; so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon.

BEHOVEFULLY. adv. [from behoeful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoefully import the reformation. Spenker.

BEHO'T. pret. as it seems, of behoit, to promise.

With sharp intended sting to rouse him (more,
That to the earth him drove as stricken dead,
No living thought would have him life beho't. Fairy Queen.

TO BEHOLD. v. a. [from behold.]

1. To howl at.
Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf beholds the moon. Shakespeare.

2. Perhaps, to howl over, or lane e' car or mally.

BE'ING. particip. [from be.]

Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterbury.

Br'w'o. n. f. (from be.)

1. Existence; opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill, Though author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,

Whose being I do fear: and under him My genius is rebuked. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Thou, Father, first thyself, omnipotent, Immutably, immortal, infinite, External king! Thee author of all being, Fountain of light! Milton's Par. Lost.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creature, Taylor's Guide to Devotion. Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits, which ordain'd by fate For future being, and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate; From brutes what men, from men what spirits know; Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

3. The person existing.

Ah, fair, yet false; ah, being form'd to cheat, By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit. Dryden.

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Aldison, Spectator.

As now your own, our being were of old, And once includ'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope.

Br'w'o. conjunct. (from be.) Since. Ditt.

Be it so. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke, Be't it so he will not here, before your grace, Consent to marry with Demetrius; I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakspere.

TO BEL'LOW. v. n. [bellan, Saxon.]
1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bel'low'd; the green Neptune
Aram, and bleated.
What bull dares bel'low, or what sheep dares bleat
Within the lion's den?
But now, the husband of a herd must be Thy mate, and bel'lowing lions thy progeny. Dryden.

2. To make any violent outcry.
He fasten'd on my neck, and bel'low'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n. Shakespeare.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bel'low out a laugh in a bafe note. Dryden.
This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bel'low so terribly loud, that he frightens us.
4. To roar as the sea in a storm; or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terror.
Till, at the last, he heard a dread sound,
Which through the wood loud bel'lowing did rebound. Fairy Queen.

The rising rivers float the neither ground;
And rocks the bel'lowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dry.
BEL'LOWS. n. f. [bellig, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or bellis. It has no singular; for we usually say a pair of bel'loes; but Dryden has used bel'low as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since lights into my inward furnace turned,
For bel'loes serve to kindle more the fire.
One, with great bel'loes, gather'd filling air,
And, with forc'd wind, the fuel did enflame.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bel'loes hissing fire provoke. Dryden.
The lungs, as bel'loes, supply a force of breath; and the a-pulmonaria is as the nose of bel'loes, to collect and convey the breath. Heller.

2. In the following passage, it is singular.
Thou neither, like a bel'low, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore. Dryden.

BEL'LOUNE. adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beally; belonging to a beasty; savage; brutal.

But when I do, you shall petition it.

Dryden.

BEL'OW. adv.

1. In the lower place; in the place nearest the center.

To men standing below on the ground, those that be on the top of Paul's, seem much less than they are, and cannot be known; but, to men above, those below seem nothing so much lessened, and may be known.

Bacon.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of the tempests and winds before the air here below; and therefore the obscuring of the smaller flars, is a sign of tempest following.

Bacon.

His sultry heat infects the sky;

The ground below is parch'd, the heav'n's above us fry. Dry.

This said, he led them up the mountain's brow,
And shew'd them all the shining fields below.

Dryden.

BENCH. n. f. [benc, Sax. lanc, Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches flane of ivory,
An hundred nymphs fat side by side about.

Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd, when Statius will rehearse,
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;
His lofty numbers, with so great a gust,
They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:

But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,
And broke the benches with their loud applause,
His muse had star'd, had not a piece unread,
And by a player bought, supply'd her bread.

Dryden.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

A son set your decrees at naught:
To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person.

Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Cyriac, whose grandfire on the royal bench
Of British Thronus, with no mean applause,
Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,
Which others at their bar too often wretch

Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same.

Fools to popular praise aspire,
Of publick speeches, which worse souls admire;
While, from both benches, with redoubt'd sounds,
Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds.

Dryden.

TO BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,
The thick young grass arose in freshest green.

Dryden.

BENDER, n. f. [from to bend.]

1. The person who bends.

2. The instrument with which any thing is bent.

3. The bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender, or rack, that are used to others. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Diit.

BENDWITH, n. f. An herb.

BENEFID, adj. [from neap.] A ship is said to be benefted, when the water does not flow high enough to bring her off the ground, over a bar, or out of a dock. Diit.

BENEATH, prep. [beneceps, Sax. beneden, Dutch.]

1. Under; lower in place.

Their woolly fleeces, as the rites requir'd,

He laid beneath him, and to rest retir'd. Dryden.

Ages to come might Ormond's picture know;

And palms for thee beneath his laurels grow. Prior.

2. Under, as overborn or overwhelmed by some pressure.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;

It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash is added to her wounds. Shakespeare.

And oft on rocks their tender wings they tear,

And sink beneath the burdens which they bear. Dryden.

Low in rank, excellence, or dignity.

We have reason then to be persuaded, that there are far more species of creatures above us, than there are beneath. Locke.

4. Unworthy of; unbecoming; not equal to.

He will do nothing that is beneath his high station, nor omit doing any thing which becomes it. Atterbury.

BENATH, adv.

1. In a lower place; under.

from above, and his roots from beneath. Amos.

The earth which you take from beneath, will be barren and unfruitful. Martimer.

2. Below, as opposed to beaven.

Any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath. Exodus.

BENEDICT, adj. [benedictus, Lat.] Having mild and salubrious qualities: an old physical term.

It is not a small thing won in physick, if you can make the barbs, and other medicines that are benedict, as strong purgers as those that are not without some malignity. Bacon.

BENEDICTION, n. f. [benedictio, Lat.]

1. Blessing; a decretory pronouncement of happiness.

A lov'reign shame he bows him; his unkindness,

That strip her from his benediction, turn'd her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights

To his doghearted daughters. Shakespeare.

From him will raise

A mighty nation; and upon him show'r

His benediction so, that, in his feed,

All nations shall be blest. Milton.

2. The advantage conferred by blessing.

The prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour. Bacon.

3. Acknowledgments for blessings received; thanks.

Could he less expect

Than glory and benediction, that is, thanks? Milton.

Such ingenious and industrious persons are delighted in searching out natural rarities; reflecting upon the Creator of them his due praises and benedictions. Ray.

4. The form of instituting an abbot.

What consecration is to a bishop, that benediction is to an abbot; but in a different way: for a bishop is not properly such, till consecration; but an abbot, being elected and confirmed, is properly such before benediction. Aylmer.

BENEFACCTION, n. f. [from benefacere, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring a benefit.

2. The benefit conferred; which is the more usual sense.

One part of the benefactions, was the expression of a generous and grateful mind. Atterbury.

BENEFACCTOR, n. f. [from benefacere, Lat.] He that confers a benefit; frequently he that contributes to some publick charity.

Then swell with pride, and must be titled gods,

Great benefactors of mankind, deliverers,

Worshipp'd with temple, priest, and sacrifice. Milton's Paradise Reg.

From that preface he took his hint, though he had the beneficence not to acknowledge his benefactor. Dryden.

I cannot but look upon the writer as my benefactor, if he conveys to me an improvement of my understanding. Addison.

Whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to mankind. Swift.

BENEFACRESS, n. f. [from benefactor, Lat.] A woman who confers a benefit.

BENEFICE, n. f. [from beneficium, Lat.] Advantage conferred on another. This word is generally taken for all ecclesiastical livings, be they dignities or others.

And of the priest offices 'gan to enquire,

How to a benefice he might aspire. Spenser.

Much to himself he thought, but little spoke,

And, undepriv'd, his benefice forsook. Dryden.

BENEFICED, adj. [from beneficere.] Possessed of a benefice, or church preferment.

The usual rate between the beneficed man and the religious person, was one moiety of the benefice. Aylmer.

BENEFICENCE, n. f. [from beneficent.] The practice of doing good; active goodness.

You could not extend your beneficence to so many persons; yet you have lost as few days as that excellent emperor.

Dryden's Jovinal, Dedicat.

Love and charity extends our beneficence to the miseries of our brethren. Rogers.

BENEFICIENT, adj. [from benefacere, beneficentia, Lat.] Kind in doing good. It differs from benign, as the act from the disposition; beneficence being kindness, or benignity, exerted in action.

Such a creature could not have his origin from any less than the most wise and beneficent being, the great God.

Hall's Origin of Mankind.

But Phœbus, thou, to man beneficent,

Delight'st in building cities. Prior.

BENEFICIAL, adj. [from beneficium, Lat.]

1. Advantageous; conferring benefit; profitable; useful; with respect to the person benefited.

Not that any thing is made to be beneficial to him, but all things for him, to shew beneficence and grace in them. Hosier.

This supposition grants the opinion to conduce to order in the world, and consequently to be very beneficial to mankind. Tilteson.

The war, which would have been most beneficial to us, and destructive to the enemy, was neglected. Swift.

Are the present revolutions in circular orbs, more beneficial than the other would be? Bentley.

2. Helpful; medicinal.

In the first access of such a disease, any doobstruent, without much acrimony, is beneficial. Atterbury.

BENEFICIAL, n. f. An old word for a benefice.

For that the groundwork is, and end of all,

How to obtain a beneficial.

BENEFICIALLY, adv. [from beneficial.] Advantageously; profitably; helpfully.

BENEFICIALNESS, n. f. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentment and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness.

BENEFICIARY, adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to make a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the feignory in chief of the pope.

BENEFICIARY, n. f. He that is in possession of a benefice. A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person.

BENEFIT, n. f. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove

Not well disposed, the mind grown once corrupt,

They turn to vicious forms.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

As many as offer'd life,

Neglect not, and the benefit embrace

By faith, not void of works.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateh his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee.

3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him; and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit et clerici; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression.

To BENEFIT, v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,

Shall nothing benefit your knowledge.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine.

To BENEFIT, v. n. To gain advantage.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare.

BENEFIT, adj. [See NEMPT.] Appointed; marked out: an oblique word.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain,

Than kid or colt, which I thee benefit;

Then up, I say.

To BENEFIT, v. a. [from net.] To enfire; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benefitted round with villains,

Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane

They had begun the play.

BENEVOLENCE, n. f. [beneficentia, Lat.]

1. Disposition to do good; kindness; charity; good will.

Grasp the whole worlds of reason, life, and sense,

In one close system of benevolence.

2. The good done; the charity given.

3. A kind of tax.

This tax, called a benevolence, was devised by Edward IV. for which he sustained much envy. It was abolished by Richard III.

BENEVOLENT, adj. [benefolens, benefolentia, Lat.] Kind; having good will, or kind inclinations.

Thou good old man, benevolent as wife,

Nature all

Is blooming and benevolent like thee.

BENEVOLENTNESS, n. f. The same with benevolence.

BENGAL, n. f. [from Bengal in the East Indies.] A sort of thin slight stuff, made of silk and hair, for women's apparel.

BENJAMIN, n. f. [Benjamin.] The name of a tree.

From a calyx, which consists of four leaves, are produced three small flowers, which have an oblong tube; the upper part, which is expanded, is divided into eight segments; between which are several short threads, and, in the middle of the tube, is the ovary, which becomes a fruit. It was brought from Virginia into England, and is propagated by laying down the tender branches in the spring of the year.

BENJAMIN, n. f. A gum. See BENZOIN.

To BENIGHT, v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to embarrass by want of light; to bring on night.

He that has light within his own breast,
May sit i' th' centre, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun,
Himself is his own dungeon.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as the dark shades that did benight it, vanish.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, it sought,
Shall in this age to Britain first be shown.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy, and benight the sky.

The miserable race of men, that live
Benighted half the year, benum'd with frosts
Under the polar bear.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.
Being benighted, the sight of a candle I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house.

Or some benighted angel, in his way,
Might catch his wings; and, seeing heav'n appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there.

BENIGN, adj. [benignus, Lat.] It is pronounced without the g, as if written benime; but the g is preserved in benignity.

1. A kind; generous; liberally; actually good. See BENEFICENT.
This turn hath made amends! I thou hast null'd
Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair.

So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign.

We owe more to heav'n than to the sword,

The world's return of so benign a lord.

What heaven bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back again in sterility and adoration.

They who delight in the suffering of inferior creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign.

Different are thy names,

As thy kind hand has founded many cities,

Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons;
but, in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexies.

BENIGN, Disorder, is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes.

BENIGNITY, n. f. [from benign.] The same with benignity.

BENIGNITY, n. f. [from benign.] The same with benignity.

1. Graciousness; goodness; actual kindness.
He which with the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good confidence.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood.

It is true, that his mercy will forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversions. Benign's Vulgar Errors.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it.

2. Salubrité; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.
Purges receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in choleric bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sends out better matter for a callos.

BENIGNLY, adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement more than love,

Which her radiant eyes do move;

If less splendour wait on thine,

Yet thy so benignly shine,

I would turn my dazzled sight

To behold their milder light.

Oh truly good, and truly great!

For glorious as the rose, benignly to be set.

BENISON, n. f. [benir, to bless; benissans, Fr.] Blessing; benediction.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see
That face of hers again; therefore, begone

Without our grace, our love, our benison.

Unmuffled, ye fair stars, and show, fair moon, benison.

That would it to love the traveller's benison.

BENNET, n. f. An herb, the same with anemone, which see.

BENT, n. f. [from the verb to bend.]
1. The state of being bent; a state of flexure; curvity.
Strike gently, and hold your rod at a bent a little while.

2. Degree of flexure.
There are divers subtle inquiries concerning the strength required to the bending of them; the force they have in the discharge, according to the several bents; and the strength required to be in the string of them.

3. Declivity.

A mountain flood,
Threat'ning from high, and overlook'd the woud;
Beneath the low'ring brook, and on a bent,
The temple flood of Mars arripotent. Dryd. Pal. and Arc.

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent. Shaksp. Tw. Night.

We both obey.

And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet. Shaksp. Hamlet.

5. Application of the mind; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by inferrible degrees. Lact.

6. Inclination; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of women's fantasy!

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
He knew the strong bent of the country towards the house of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

Soon inclin'd t' admit delight,
The bent of nature! Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Tis golden age was first; when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew;
And, with a native bent, did good pursue. Dryden's Ovid.
Let there be the fame propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same facility and indefatigable industry. South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five. Asterbury.

7. Determination; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute unto insufficiency in the man which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it. Hosker.

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent, and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government. Temple.

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition; shape, or fashion, superinduced by art.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they frown at. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Two of them hath the very bent of honour.

Shaksp. Much ado about Nothing.

Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,
The crooked line reforming by the right;
My reason took the bent of thy command,
Was form'd and polish'd by the skillful hand. Dryden's Pers.

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.

The exerting the understanding, in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches. Lact.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass.

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near of two inches long;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whole sharpish naught reverend. Dray. Nymphid.
Then the flowers of the vines; it is a litte dull, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the clufter, in the first coming forth. Bacon's Essays.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass-green, upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peachment on Drawing.

BENTING Time. [from bent.] The time when pigeons feed on bents before peas are ripe.

Bare benting time, and moulting months, may come,
When, lagging late, they cannot reach their home. Dryden's Hand and Panther.

BENUMM. v. a. [benumen, Saxon.]

1. To make torpid; to take away the sensation and use of any part by cold, or by some obstruction.

So flings a snake that to the fire is brought,
Which harmless lay with cold benumm'd before. Fairfax, b. ii. stanza 85.

The winds blow moist and keen, which bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumm'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

My sinews slacken, and an icy stiffness
Benums my blood. Danban's Saphy.

It freezes upon the vitals, and benums the senses; and where there is no sense, there can be no pain. South.

Will they be the less dangerous, when warmth shall bring them to themselves, because they were once frozen and benumm'd with cold? L'Estrange's Fables.

2. To stupify.

These accents were her last: the creeping death
Benumm'd her senses first, then stopp'd her breath. Dryden.

Nº XIV.

BENZOIN. n. f. A medicinal kind of resin imported from the East Indies, and vulgarly called benjamin. It is procured by making an incision in a tree, whose leaves resemble those of the lemon tree. It is of a yellowish colour, an agreeable scent, it melts easily, and is of three sorts. The first, which is esteemed the best, comes from Siam, and is called amygdoloides, being interspersed with white spots, resembling broken almonds. The second is black, and very odiferous; it drops from young trees, and comes from Sumatra. The third is also black, but less odiferous, and is found in Java and Sumatra.

Trevoux. Chambers.

The liquor we have distilled from benzoïn, is subject to frequent vicissitudes of fluidity and firmness. Boyle.

His friends, not to bewail his funeral. Sir J. Denham.
I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children. Addison.
- BEWARE. v. m. [from be and ware, or war; that is, cautious; thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware. See WARY.] Dejarian, Saxon; warer, Danish.]
1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from; generally the particle of gives before the thing which excites caution.

You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds; and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden.
Every one ought to be very careful to beware what he admits for a principle. Lacle.

Warn'd by the slyph, oh, pious maid, beware!

This to disclose is all thy guardian can;

Beware of all, but most beware of man. Page.

2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be: thus we say, he may beware, let him beware, be well beware; but not, be did beware, or he has been ware.
TO BEWARE. v. a. [from werp.] To weep over or upon; to bewail with tears.

Old fond eyes,

Bewep this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,

And cast you, with the waters that you love,

To temper clay. Shakespeare.

Larded all with sweet flowers,

Which be-wet to the grave did go,

With true love showers. Shakespeare.

TO BEWET. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.
His sapkin, with his true tears all be-wet,
Can do no service on her forlorn cheeks. Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus.

TO BEWILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.
We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewild'rd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.

We no solution of our question find;

Your words bewilder, not direct the mind. Blackmore.

Our understanding traces 'em in vain,

Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search. Addison.

It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Wotton.

TO BEWITCH. v. a. [from wit. b.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm

Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakespeare.

I have forsworn his company hourly this twenty year, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rebeck has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd. Shakespeare.

My flocks are free from love, yet look to this;

What magic has bewitch'd the woolly dams,

And what ill eyes behold the tender lambs? Dryden.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.
Doth even beauty beautiful,
And most bewitch the wretched eye.
The charms of poetry our souls bewitch. Sidney.

The curfew of writing is an endless itch. Dryden.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost;

they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison.

BEWITCHERY. n. f. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; restless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can give an account of. South.

BEWITCHMENT. n. f. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the delvers. Shakespeare.

TO BEWRA'Y. v. a. [bezezan, bezegzan, Saxon.]

1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.

Fair feeling words he wisely 'gan display,

And, for her humour fitting purpose, fain

To tempt the cause itself for to bewray. Fairy Queen.

2. To shew; to make visible; this word is now little in use.

She saw a pretty bluish in Philodæa's cheeks bewray a modest discontentment. Sidney.

Men do sometimes bewray that by deeds, which to confute they are hardly drawn. Hester.

Next look on him that seems for counsel fit,

Whole silver locks bewray his store of days. Fairfax.

BEWRA'YER. n. f. [from bewray.] A betrayer; discoverer; divulger.
When a friend is turned into an enemy, and a bewrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend. Addison.

BEYOND. prop. [begeynt, begenban, Saxon.]

1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others breath,

A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death. Page.

Just what you hear, you have.

2. On the farther side of.

Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us. Deut. xxx. 13.

and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected.

Lake.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation.

Lake.

6. Above in excellence.

His satires are incomparably beyond Juvenal's; if to laugh and rally, it is to be preferred to railing and declaiming.

Dryden.

7. Kempe from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear;

Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.

Dryden's Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry.

Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter.

Thell. iv. 6.

B'ZEL. n. f. That part of a ring in which the stone is set.

B'ZOAR. n. f. [from pa, against, and zabar, pison, Perlick.]

A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the great kind, called paran; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. Were the real virtues of this stone answerable to its reputed ones, it were doubtless a panacea. Indeed its rarity, and the peculiar manner of its formation, which is now supposed to be fabulous, have perhaps contributed as much to its reputation as its intrinsic worth. At present, it begins to be discarded in the practice of medicine, as of no efficacy at all. There are also found occasional bazzors brought from Peru, which are reckoned inferior to the oriental. The name of this stone is also applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes, or counter poisons, as mineral, solar, and jovial bazzors.

Savary. Chambers.

BAZOARDICK. adj. [from bazar.] Medicines compounded with bazar.

The bazoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrid particles.

word, signifying crook, or slant.]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls—

—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,

And that my fortune runs against the bias.

Shakespeare.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course; or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been misfold:

But nature to her bias drew in that.

Shakespeare.

This is that boasted bias of my mind,

By which one way to dulness 'tis inclined.

Dryden.

Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions.

Lake.

Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Ralley under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias.

Addison's Freeholder.

* Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;

Reason the bias turns to good or ill.

Pope.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff.

Dryden.

To BI'AS. v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side;
to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account.

Lake.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment stran-gly; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine.

Watts.

BI'AS. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,

Whereof we have record, trial did draw

Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.

Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

BIB. n. f. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their cloaths.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the hulls and pretaxa.

Addison.

To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Merocé, as though he were foamed, because he would drink mere wine without water.

lence, The Book.] The sacred volume in which are contained the revelations of God.

If we pass from the apostolic to the next ages of the church, the primitive christians looked on their bibles as their most important treasure.

Government of the Temple.

We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy bible, which ought not to be applied upon every slight occasion.

Tullidge.

In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or correct our reasonings by the divine assistance of the bible.

Watts.

yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests. Decay of Piety
As when the goddesses came down of old,
With gifts their young Dardanian judge they try'd,
And each bade high to win him to their side. Granville
To give interest a share in friendship, is to tell it by inch of candle; he that bids must have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship

4. To proclaim; to offer; or to make known by some public voice.
Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding day
My kerchief bought! then press'd it, then forc'd it away.
Gay's What a'ye call it

5. To pronounce; to declare.
You are retir'd,
As if you were a scathed one, and not
The hostess of the meeting: pray you, bid
These unknown friends to welcome. Shakespeare
Divers of them, as we pass'd by them, put their arms a little abroad; which is their gesture, when they bid any welcome. Brown's New Atlantis
How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repul'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philippi

And with big words, and with a stately pace.

'Tis to the meane man, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and answer.

If you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

Or does the man i'th' moon look big,

Or wear a huger periwig,

Than our own native lunatics.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name.

In his most prosperous season, he fell under the reproch of being a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit.

Thou thyself, thus insilent in state,

Art but perhaps some country magistrate,

Whose power extends no farther than to speak

big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.

To grant 'th' big Thais valour, 't'ormio sense,

Should indignation give, at least offence.

7. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I

An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?

'Thy words, I grant, are big; for I wear not

My dagger in my mouth.
